VOLUME XCV, NO. 1 | UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS | FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1966

Welcome, Freshmen

Nearly 3100 freshmen attended the Freshmen C onvocation Tuesday morning at Boyden. Introductions by Dean of Students William F. Field were followed by addresses by University President John W. Lederle and schedule officer H. Hill Skillings. Student Senate President John Greenquist then introduced the campus honor societies' office rs.

PRESIDENT LEDERLE WILL GREET FRESHMEN AND TRANSFER STUDENTS

President Lederle will greet each new freshman and transfer student. To enable President Lederle to do so, a reception has been arranged for students on Sunday evening, Sept. 18, 1966. The reception is the first personal welcome to the University and the student's first opportunity to meet and talk with administrators, faculty, and staff.

Because of the large numbers of students expected to attend the reception it is necessary to arrange a specific time for students from each residence hall to arrive. Students requested to arrive at the following times:

a. 7:00—Baker, Brett, Butterfield, Dickinson, Chadbourne, Hills North, Hills South, T-2 Lower

b. 7:30—Gorman, Van Meter North, James, Thoreau, T-4 Middle

c. 8:00—T-1, Crabtree, Dwight, Melville

d. 8:30—T-5, Emerson, Field

e. 9:00—Grayson, Hamlin, Johnson, Greenough, Leach, Lewis, Mills, Mary Lyon

f. 9:30—Thatcher, Knowlton, Webster, T-2 Middle, Wheeler, T-4 Lower

g. 9:50—T-2 Upper, T-6, Van Meter South, T-4 Upper

Students will be greeted in the lobby of the Student Union by a member of the Revelers or Maroon Keyes who will escort them to the Ballroom. Dr. Field, Dean of Students, will present them to President and Mrs. Lederle and Provost and Mrs. Tippo.

Students are requested to wear a name tag with your name, school or college, major, and home town (3½" x 2½" white paper is suitable).

Waiting in lines is a favorite? pastime of most UMass students. Same situation comes to the new Towers dining commons with 3500 living in the vicinity. No telling when students will see the end of lines.

Enrollment and Construction Grow, Set Record Highs This Year

Record enrollment, giant steps in building, and strong academic gains are expected during the academic year that began this week at the University of Massachusetts.

The 1966-67 academic year will bring these highlights, UMass officials predicted:

- A record freshman enrollment of 3,100 and a record total enrollment of 12,835 at Amherst, plus approximately 1,000 freshmen and 1,000 other students at UMass-Boston. The totals a year ago were 2,700 freshmen and 11,860 students at Amherst, plus 1,000 at U Mass - Boston.
- Starting more than $17 million in new construction, including a $10.8 million campus center and two classroom and office buildings expected to cost a total of $6.9 million.
- Opening this week of what University housing officials believe to be the biggest student living area ever opened at one time — the five 22-story towers in the Southwest Residence Area that will house 2,880 students.
- Offering of rive new Ph.D. programs, bringing to 31 the total offered by the UMass Graduate School, and five new master's degree programs, bringing to 49 the total offered and adding more than 150 new faculty members including a dean and seven department heads.

The estimated enrollment breakdown for the year includes, besides the 3,100 freshmen, 2,000 graduate students, 7,185 upperclassmen and 440 two-year Stockbridge School students. UMass has accepted 203 new students from foreign countries for the coming academic year, most of them graduate students in the sciences. More than a quarter are Chinese and the next largest single national group comes from India.

The new building calendar for the year includes a start of a $10.8 million campus center in April under an expedited schedule by the UMass Building Authority. New York architect Marcel Breuer has designed the building as a nine-story tower connected to and supplementing the facilities of the UMass Student Union.

Scheduled to start this fall is construction of a ten-story tower addition to Machmer Hall, estimated cost $3.2 million, and a new wing for Bartlett Hall at an approximate cost of $3.7 million. The former will add 185 offices, three auditoriums and a sociology laboratory and the latter 175 offices, 30 to 35 classrooms, two auditoriums and four language laboratories.

To be opened with the five towers in the Southwest Residence Area will be a new dining commons, bringing to 11 the number of buildings completed. A dining commons and four low-rise residences were opened last year. Approximately 3,500 students will live there this year. When fully completed in 1968, the 20-building complex, built by the UMass Building Authority at no cost to the taxpayer, will be home to approximately 5,600 students.

New Ph.D. programs will be implemented this year in business administration, polymer science and engineering, forestry and wood technology, industrial engineering, and nutrition and food, plus a new program in curriculum and instruction under the Doctor of Education degree.

Starting this year, new master's programs have been added in music, nursing, polymer science and engineering, and nutrition and foods.

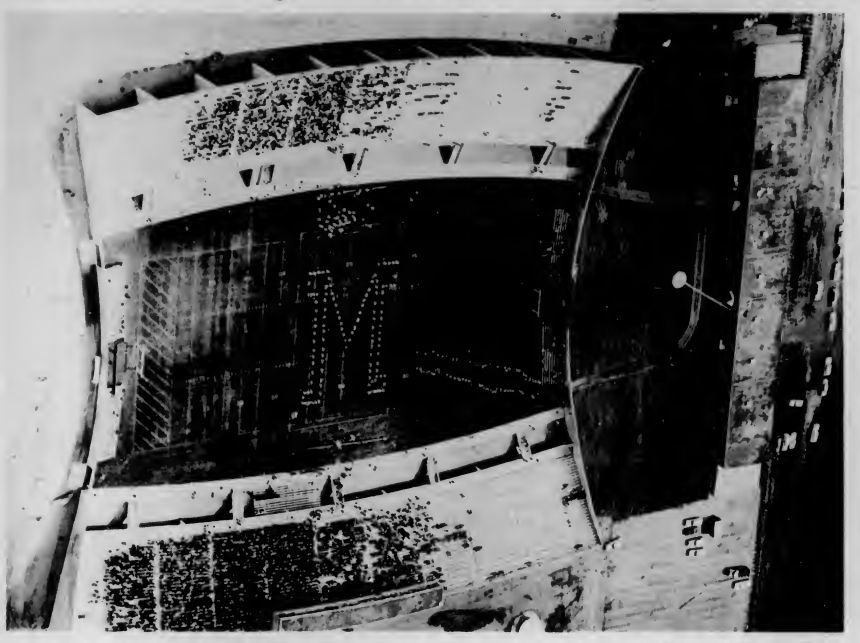
The new dean beginning his first academic year here is Dr. Kenneth G. Picha, Dean of the School of Engineering. New heads have been appointed in the departments of agricultural engineering, German, Russian, sociology, mechanical engineering, speech and philosophy.

Coach Fusia: "We'll Know When That Whistle Blows"

QB GREG LANDRY

By TOM FITZGERALD
Sports Day Editor

Only 10 seconds had gone by in the fourth quarter when University of Maine quarterback Dick DeVarney rolled out around the UMass five-yard line and pitched the football toward halfback Frank Harney.



Harney couldn't hang on; the ball was batted in the air for a fraction of a second — a fraction of a second that decided which team would win the Yankee Conference, which team would get a bowl bid. The ball landed in the arms of Maine end John White. Last year's Conference Bean Pot was all but officially won that afternoon in Orono, Me.—during the very first game of the season.

Tomorrow, the Redmen and the Black Bears square off again, and the feeling is widespread that the Conference will be determined before the final whistle. A large turnout is expected to witness the 1:30 kick-off at Alumni Stadium.

University Band Ready with New Halftime Show

A bird's eye view of the "Big M" formed in Alumnae Stadium by the UMass Marching Band. This season the band will feature an newer, bigger and more diversified series of half-time programs under the direction of conductor John A. Jenkins.

The University of Massachusetts Marching Band takes the field to present its first quick-moving pregame and halftime shows tomorrow for the first game of the football season. With drum majors, Ron Weaver and Bob Singleton, the 120 man marching band will step off to the sounds of "Fight, Massachusetts", as it presents its now famous Block M to the home audience.

The halftime show, spotlighting music from the turn of the century, will begin with "Wait Till The Sun Shines, Nellie" and will include the formation of a unicycle, being driven on a high wire and accompanied by an old-time circus band. Following a reference to the New York premiere of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pirates of Penzance", the half-time show will feature with a pattern manuever "The Band Played On". Finals will present the Band's 12 member percussion section in a drum specialty, Irving Berlin's "Heat Wave".

In preparation for this Saturday's pregame and half-time show routines, the 140 members of the marching band have been on campus since last week to audition, learn the marching techniques, and play the big Bilik sound that has long been associated with the band's moving halftime performances.

Practicing on the intramural fields behind Boyden for the past week and in the Cage during Wednesday's rain, the band may be heard in all directions on campus, whether in echoes or in person.

On Sept. 7, 15 "veteran" members reported to Old Chapel, the indoor headquarters, to receive specific assignments to greet the 60 new freshman members. When the freshman arrived on Sept. 8, the upperclass "demos" had already had three marching rehearsals of the "UP - TWO - THREE" variety.

Following music auditions on Friday evening, all marching band members reported to the Old Chapel auditorium to read the show music for the first time, and rehearse the grueling pregame routine. Now, a week later, the band sounds big with a real full sound, an active drum section and many woodwinds and basses.

To give a little preview to the marching band's entrance: imagine marching onto a football field at a steady beat of 220 steps per minute—that's nearly four steps per second!

Conductor of the band is John A. Jenkins, a disciple of the University of Michigan style of musical delivery. In his fourth year at UMass, he has brought the 55-member 1963 marching band number to the present personnel count of over 140. With his has come a new caliber of music instrumentations and band spirit that draw the members together and make them want to put out the big sound and snappy marching techniques.

New to the campus this fall is the assistant conductor of bands, Larry Weed, who has had musical experience as conductor of bands at Temple University and Wilkes College.

Drum majors for the marching band this fall are Ronald Weaver, a junior majoring in zoology, and Robert Singleton, a sophomore majoring in economics. Both will appear on the field for the Main game tomorrow.

The Summer Sound

Country Sings with Folk Festivals

By BOB GORMAN

The number of summer folk festivals in the U.S. hit a new high this summer with an average of two per week.

The biggest and most widely-known show was the Newport Folk Festival, held in Newport, Rhode Island, July 21 through 24. The festival was initiated by the Newport Folk Foundation in 1959 and has vastly exceeded the Foundation's expectations for its success.

Attendance at this summer's festival passed the hundred-thousand mark. Saturday, July 23 was a busy day for the crowds. There were morning and afternoon workshops with such folk leaders as Tom Paxton, Tom Rush, Buffy St. Marie, and Jean Richie. At any time throughout the day, there were at least three workshops in operation.

Evening entertainment featured Buffy St. Marie, (UMass graduate) whose songs followed the course of the American Indian. Also spotlighted were The Lovin' Spoonful, The Jug Band, Caroline Hester, and The Clancy Brthers.

Festival directors were criticized, however, for "over-expansion". The Festival has now grown to such proportion that performers must follow a rather rigid set of rules. There was also some dissatisfaction among spectators with the Festival's over-emphasis on "name" stars. Some folk followers expressed desire to see such lesser-known singers as the Cojetan Band and Jack Turney.

Much smaller in size than the Newport Festival, but carrying as much impact, was the Second Freedom Folk Festival, held at Cambridge, Mass. on July 29 through 31. The Freedom Festival was run for the benefit of CORE, but none of CORE's philosophy was presented in the choice of song.

Although attendance was small, many well-known entertainers appeared. Judy Rodernick, Pat Sky, Buffy St. Marie, and other stars enjoyed performing in a relaxed and friendly atmosphere.

One of the most unique festivals of the summer was the Fox Hollow Folk Festival, held August 18 through 21 in Petersbury, New York. It was held in a natural, wooded amphitheater on the Beers Family Estate.

The Beers Family is a nationally famous folk-singing family, and the theme of the festival was that the Beers' are the truest folk group in the country. Singers were close friends of the family.

Room Furnishings Available

Once again, this semester, the GSS Used Room Furnishings Exchange will provide an opportunity for students to save money by buying and selling used bedspreads, curtains, and room accessories. The annual Room Furnishings Exchange will be held in the Nantucket Room of the Student Union from Thursday, September 15 through Friday, September 23.

HOW IT WORKS: The Room Furnishings Exchange allows the seller to set his own price for the article he wishes to sell. He is then given a receipt, and the article is placed on sale. By placing bedspreads, curtains, and room decorations on sale at the Exchange, the seller saves himself the time and trouble of trying to find a buyer in a smaller, more limited market, such as a dormitory. When the article is sold, the receipt number is posted, and the seller may claim his money.

In addition to selling smaller room furnishings, the Exchange also serves as a clearing house for large pieces of furniture, such as bookcases and record racks, by compiling lists of the names and addresses of prospective buyers and sellers, who can then contact each other.

This year's Exchange hopes to be of service not only to the many incoming freshmen who find themselves with bare rooms and limited budgets, but also to the many upperclassmen who have moved to new dorms and discovered that they no longer need last year's curtains, wastebaskets, and bulletin boards.

Lederle To Announce Major Policy Changes

University of Massachusetts President John W. Lederle will deliver a major policy address on the state of the University Tuesday morning, Sept. 20, at the All-University Convocation, traditional formal opening of the UMass academic year.

The 10 a.m. ceremony will also see the presentation of the 1966 Distinguished Teacher of the Year Award. The convocation will be held on the Goodell Library lawn or in Bowker Auditorium in case of rain.

Areas the president is expected to cover in his talk include student life, fraternities and sororities and the role of the faculty in an expanding University.

Classes have been dismissed for the convocation, which will begin with the traditional ringing of the Old Chapel bells and an academic procession. Faculty, students and friends of the University have been invited.

UMass Provost Oswald Tippo will preside, Student Senate President John Greenquist will welcome students and Rev. John L. Scott, Protestant chaplain, will give the invocation. The UMass Marching Band under Conductor John A. Jenkins will perform.

President Lederle will present the Distinguished Teacher of the Year award to a faculty member selected by his peers. Last year the award went to John Harland Dittfach, professor of mechanical engineering.

Southwest Swamped!

Moving into Southwest Complex Tuesday was like trying to fill a block of apartment houses in New York City all in one day.

Complex residents arrived in a steady stream from 9 a.m. till after 9 p.m. They came in cars loaded with all their worldly (and some unworldly) possessions, eager to throw everything into their rooms, send their parents off with the promise of hard study and good marks, and run to rave (or mourn) to their friends about their summer.

Behind the appearance of utter chaos, mass impatience and ulcer-inducing anxiety was helpful and effective organization. The University Maintenance Department carted all luggage in trucks from the parking lots to the towers, greatly easing the workload of parents and students and reducing moving day aggravation.

FACE IT

by DEE SMITH, Day Editor

The unheard of has occurred. Someone made a mistake.

Classes began on Rosh Hashahna, the most important Jewish Holy day, analagous in many ways to the Christian's Christmas.

It was a mistake. An omission. Once that's been said there is little else, except perhaps, not again.

But hold it, suppose, just imagine, that it wasn't a mistake. Imagine that there was no oversight, that the omission was deliberate.

So what.

Why the whimper and where the war. Stand in the temple of statistics Jews, and view yourselves. There's the graph. Right in front of you. That's you. The little bar near the bottom.

Not you the person, but you the socio-ethnic group as represented by a little bar near the bottom of a large chart. Sometimes little bars get lost. It's too bad, but it happens and isn't likely to stop. Not as long as the little smudge remains little.

Face the behemouth and realize that as a pip-squeak party you're significant enough only to deserve consideration, not expect it.

Teed Off

by RICHARD COVEN, Editorial Staff

It is quite disturbing to know that this state University can force us to subscribe to a service of a private enterprise, namely the telephone company.

Early this summer the Dean of Student's Office was contacted regarding the phones in resident hall rooms. That office assured that the phones would be a matter strictly between the phone company and the student. They also assured that one could choose not to have phone service by selecting a dorm that did not have phone service. We did not in fact have this choice, because it was not known at the time we signed up for rooms which ones would have phones. The answer to the question regarding payment of bills was sharp and quick, "We are not a collection agency for the phone company." There was, however, a charge of $12.50 for 'telephone' on University bills.

It is interesting to note that service for which we pay $50 ($12.50 per student, per semester) is available to residents of surrounding towns for $47.86 including installation. Yet, these people do not have to pay four months in advance and the telephone company does not have a collection agency to collect those bills. We are not even getting full service. When the business office was contacted to obtain a credit card which is available to all regular subscribers and they said it would have to go through the UNIVERSITY Treasurer's Office.

In contrast, at the University of Connecticut, at the University of Bridgeport and at many other schools in the nation phones are available at regular rates and only to those students who want them. Students can get together and share a phone thus reducing the cost per student.

The Preliminary Edition of the Student Directory is not a student directory, whose cost is borne by the University, but a New England Telephone Company directory, whose cost should be borne by the telephone company. The topic, Bill Paying Instructions, in a University publication could only mean paying a bill such as tuition or lab fees. The topic covered in this directory is payment of bills to New England Telephone. Therefore phone service is not a matter between the telephone company and the student, contrary to what was assured by the Dean of Student's Office.

Letters to the Editor

Freshman, I'm Not

To a Freshman (not just any freshman, but you, my friend):

I know why you are here. I came here last year for the same reasons. In fact, we're quite alike, you and I. I griped about the food too, and the endless lines, and the huge lecture classes, and the eight o'clocks. We're alike but for one small difference—you're going to school here—I'm not. I flunked out. You can too, if you try. There are lots of ways. I tried all of them. Start with missing your early classes. After all, you need the sleep so you can study 'til two in the morning. And you'll have to study at least that late because UMass is a good school, with good courses that require work. Naturally you'll be in the Hatch goofing off until nine or ten and you won't really hit the books until 11.

You'll want to take advantage of the opportunities that come only in college so you'll join an R.S.O. to kill some time and meet some people. But mostly to kill time. Because you'll find that the people who join an organization and stay in it are usually too busy doing a good job to waste much time. Funny thing, but they seem to enjoy working with other people, not just killing time with them.

If you're regular you'll booze it up with all the rest. You'll start on Friday night and sleep through your Saturday classes, getting up just in time to make arrangements for your date Saturday night. Sunday is a lazy day to be spent musing about your date and the work you have to start on Monday.

You'll have some difficulty keeping track of what you have to do, (because there will be lots to do) and then you'll start forgetting. Forgetting is easy. You'll pick it up fast.

With everyone else, you'll sweat finals. You'll book up a storm, nearly kill yourself with work, but you won't crack. You'll know the stuff cold three hours before the test, but you'll blow it because the prof tested you on the stuff you were supposed to learn yourself instead of what he spoon-fed you. Not fair, is it? Ah, well. You'll make a comeback. You'll study hard second semester, for about two weeks. Once the real work starts you'll remember first semester and how you fouled up and you'll freeze. You'll cut afternoon classes to talk with your friends about how tough it is. If you're lucky, you won't get sick. But you'll feel sicker and you'll go to the infirmary just for an excuse to stay away from the profs you fear because you know they think you are awfully stupid.

Spring will come, and spring fever, and more time for grassing and drinking. You'll be out by the pond one day, reading, and you'll think back on how easy the year was, how relatively little studying you had to do to get by. You'll be content. No sweat, man. Finals lie ahead, but you start cramming a day earlier than first semester and you feel everything is in hand. Finals will be harder than you thought, but on the day you leave, when your parents come for you, you will exude confidence. You'll start your summer job. You'll get together with high school friends. Marks will arrive.

When they do, you'll wake up. Shocked. Sad. At loose ends. You might even have regrets. You'll wonder how it happened.

After a while it will dawn on you that somehow you were fooled, somewhere you were led astray. You blew your finals. They didn't even come close to what you were hoping for. And finally you know why—because the University of Massachusetts gave you precisely what you asked of it. You got what you wanted. You got drunk. You got numerous grass stains. You got lots of friends on campus. For strange though it be, people at UMass didn't cram an education down your throat. They let you take your education at your own speed. Because they knew all along what you have just discovered—that you were no longer a high school hotdog. And if the comparison between us is very precise, good buddy, then you're not a college hippy any more either.

The Fledglings

by Liza Kapuscinski

We are the children of time.
With each new season of our growth
We find ourselves a deeped part of nature.
World, do not pride yourself upon this growth,
We, like the fledglings, now have wings.
Press upon us not too soon.
Though we are almost ready-our fledgling wings tremble.
The world which seems to lie before us like a land of dreams, so various, so beautiful, so new Hath really neither joy, nor peace, nor certitude.
We need distance to discern our world, swept with confused alarms.
Our wings beat on the ripples and drifts of your time,
But, our course, our heartbeats, our prayers
Cannot be the same.
Our wings are already heavy.
Our songs must fortify our faith.
Press not too close,
We love you,
But we must fly.

Intramural Grid Rosters Due

by DAVE JARNES
Sports Staff

Touch football and singles tennis head the agenda of what intramural Director Chet Gladchuk hopes will be another banner year.

Football rosters for fraternities are due on Monday, whole rosters for dorms and independents are due Wednesday. Play will begin on Monday, Sept. 26.

The intramural program at UMass offers the male student an opportunity to compete in individual and team sports that range from horseshoes to soccer. One need not be a super-athlete to compete in intramurals because this well-organized program is designed to give the student with average athletic ability the enjoyment of a couple of hours break from his weekly study and the thrill of athletic competition.

Points are awarded in each event to the various winning units. Last year KS won the Davis and Olympus Cups as campus and fraternity champions while the Mills Cherries won the President's Cup as dorm champs.

going into its second year of operation, is located in the extreme south-west corner of the campus.

Is UMass ready? "We'll know when that whistle blows Saturday," says a cautiously optimistic Vic Fusia, who in five years as Redman head coach has led his teams to a 34-11-1 mark and two Yankee Conference crowns.

Fusia's chief task is to replace 15 graduated lettermen, including ends Milt Morin and Bob Meers, halfbacks Terry Swanson and Dick Lewis, fullback Phil Vandersea, linebacker Bernie Dallas, cornerback Leo Biron, and "monster" Dick Kelley, all key performers on last season's 7-2 squad.

Coupled with the graduation problem, the injury bug has taken its toll in the Redmen's camp during spring and early fall practice. Regular center last year, Dan Harrigan is out for the season with a back ailment, and his linemate Bob Santucci has failed to respond properly to knee surgery. He'll miss at least a month.

Reserve fullback Joe Bonczek suffered a broken collarbone in preseason drills and will be lost for the year.

Perhaps the biggest blow of all is the dislocated elbow to senior tackel and co-captain Ed Toner, who was an All-Conference selection a year ago and who has already been drafted by the Baltimore Colts and Boston Patriots.

The Redmen's offensive punch will center around gifted signal-caller Greg Landry, a scrambling quarterback of the top caliber. Greg returns to Amherst a year older and a year wiser, prompting the pro scouts to take up the Gregorian Chant once again.

With Landry in the backfield will probably be halfbacks Don Durkin and Bod Detore. Durkin suffered a head injury in practice and will be replaced by soph Tim Driscoll if he is not ready tomorrow.

Senior fullback Dick Benoit, who Fusia reports has been "blocking fiercely," will probably be a fixture at fullback.

Fusia calls Bob Ellis, who missed all last season due to an injury in that Maine game and who has been switched from halfback to tight end, "the best blocking end we've had for some time."

Ellis will be one of four players taking new positions in the offensive line. The others are left or open end Nick Warnock, a sophomore; junior center Bruce Gomzar, the regular middle guard on defense last year; and either junior Don Glogowski or soph Noel Schablik at right guard.

During Fusia's tenure, his defense has allowed an average rushing gain of 2.1 yards per try. The figure was 1.6 last year. "The group that we have been working with," the coach says of this year's defense, "seems to fall in line with what we've had in the past." The team's biggest "plus" may be its hard core of stingy interior linemen.

Maine coach Hal Westerman brings 25 lettermen to town and the same defense, sparked by Little All - America linebacker John Huard, that brought the Lambert Cup to the Black Bears last year. But that big little man, DeVarney, is among the missing this time around, and his absence may prove crucial.

Coach Vic Fusia seems perplexed at the injuries that have put several key players out of action. The wounded warriors are (top to bottom) senior guard Bob Santucci (knee injury), senior tackle and co-captain Ed Toner (dislocated elbow), junior fullback Joe Bonczek (broken clavicle), and junior center Dan Harrigan (back injury). Bonczek and Harrigan are out for the season, while Santucci and Toner will miss at least a month of action.

WANTED: Metawampe

by MIKE GOULD, Sports Editor

Collegian correspondent Sam Sparc has just revealed the shocking news that for the past three years devoted Redmen football fans have been black-listed in Washington.

Our honored representatives at the Pentagon have decided that rooting for the bookmaker's favorite week after week for three seasons constitutes a definite communistic attitude. The case of Metawampe vs. Ye Olde American Tradition is presently being pondered by the Overworked Committee on Un-American Activities.

"Rejected Tradition"

Metawampe will go on trial Tuesday for treason. The formal accusation against our guiding spirit is as follows:

"After due consideration by the Committee, Metawampe, and the thousands whom He represents, are hereby accused of rejecting the American tradition of rooting for the underdog. This is clearly an act of treason."

The case against Metawampe is seemingly unbeatable. The UMass football teams of 1963-65 have been the favorites of both the oddsmakers and Redmen fans nearly every autumn Saturday since the class of '67 doff their beanies.

It is most unfortunate that our loyalty has led to such scandal, but it appears that Metawampe has indeed defied American tradition and will be found guilty on Tuesday.

Sure Underdogs

If only the trial could be postponed until after the Dartmouth game. UMass will surely be underdogs against the powerful Lambert Cup champs of 1965, and a large and loyal Redmen delegation at Hanover would undoubtedly change the whole complexion of the trial. Metawampe would surely be exonerated at a trial succeeding the Dartmouth game.

Unless an acceptable plea is made for a mistrial, it is likely that our legendary spirit will be convicted of treason. As punishment the statue of Metawampee will be painted a permanent red, white and blue.

Anyone know a good lawyer?

BOOTERS BOOSTED BY 14 LETTERMEN

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

Unquestionably, uppermost in the mind of UMass soccer coach Larry Briggs when he opened preseason soccer drills early this month was what to do about Ray Yando and Bill Burgess, or more specifically, about their conspicuous absence.

Due to graduation, the 1965 co-winner of the Yankee Conference championship—UMass shared the tricorne with Connecticut and Vermont—lost, on the one hand, an All - America fullback in the well equipped Yando, and, on the other, a well established performer and last year's leading scorer in Burgess.

Fourteen Return

An unduly pessimistic prospectus, however, can be abandoned with a glance at the list of returning lettermen. Fourteen who earned the white M last season will be with the squad again.

While players of the obvious caliber of Yando and Burgess will be missed, Coach Briggs looks "realistically" at the upcoming campaign. "If we can get by our first four games with victories, and the desire and hustle shown so far by the boys holds through the year, we may be able to go the distance undefeated."

Martin

Ayanaba

Dunlop

Gibbons

Testing the squad's mettle in the four key games will be Amherst, Maine, Connecticut and Trinity. The opener against the Jeffs will be played on the 24th at Amherst. A year ago the Redmen nosed out the Jeffs 1 - 0, beat Maine 5-0, but dropped contests by 5-1 and 2-1 to UConn and Trinity, respectively.

Additionally, the booters topped Coast Guard, Rhode Island, Tufts, Vermont and New Hampshire, while losing to WPI. Overall, the Redmen slate read 7-3 with a 4-1 conference record.

Positions Named

The tentative alignment for the Amherst lidlifter, according to Briggs, will be Larry Martin in the nets with Carl Bustofson on standby, Abateni Ayanaba at fullback, Yan - Con allstar and team captain Ted Russo at center halfback, Bill Allen at left half and either Dick Hale, Frank Howard, or Dave Jekanowski at right half. Hale was an All-Conference pick a year ago as was goalie Martin.

Up front, the center forward position will be filled by Phil Bozenhard or Allen, the insides by Marty Smith and Rick Rosoff, and the wings by Gerry Cellilli and Gary Gibbons.

ID, Ticket Needed at Game

Students going to tomorrow's football game must show their Student Athletic Book along with their ID card in order to be admitted. All coupons in the book are for students only and will be accepted at the Student entrance of Alumni Stadium when presented with the ID card.

DVP to Sponsor American Socialist

This week, on Wednesday, September 21, in the Student Union Ballroom, one of the foremost leaders in the American socialist party, Norman Thomas, will be speaking. Mr. Thomas has often been called America's great dissenter for he has lent his support to many protest issues throughout the history of his political career.

In his six campaigns as a Socialist presidential nominee, he was successful in popularizing social security, unemployment insurance, civil rights and enforceable universal disarmament—all programs later acclaimed and adopted by both Republicans and Democrats.

Wednesday night Mr. Thomas will be speaking on "The Issues That Politicians Evade," for in his own words in his book, As I See It, he said, 'It is of the highest importance for any man who wants to speak on politics at all to speak in clear-cut terms concerning issues."

The Distinguished Visitors Program, administered by representatives from the student body, University's trustees, faculty, administration and Associate Alumni, is sponsored by student tax funds voted by the Student Senate. Visitors in past years have included Vice President Hubert Humphrey, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, composer Aaron Copland, publisher-humorist Bennett Cerf, and many other noted personalities.

LAST DAY

September 26th is the last day undergraduate courses may be added. It is the last day courses may be dropped without penalty. A "W" is placed on the student's record for courses dropped between September 27th and October 18th, except for first-semester freshmen and first-semester transfer students, who are extended the "W" privilege until November 4th.

Trustees Approve $36,000,000 Budget

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees last week approved a budget request for all its operations—Worcester, Boston and Amherst—for fiscal year 1968 calling for $35,975,000, and will forward the proposed budget to the Governor and Legislature for approval during the next session.

The proposed budget shows an increase of $9.5 million over the current operating budget. The major portion of the request increase will be used to accommodate an increased enrollment of 2,600 students—1,500 additional students at Amherst, 600 in Boston, and 500 additional Summer School students.

Other major programs that will increase the budget include a special appropriation of $500,000 to expedite library expansion toward the minimal goal of one million volumes by 1970.

New faculty positions, merit increases for professional staff, and raises for non-professionals in the form of annual step increases provided for by State Law, are also included. These statutory increases and other fixed charges such as increased cost of utilities and maintenance for new buildings, agricultural control services, care of the physical plant, and additional custodial and maintenance personnel, are fixed charges over which the University has little control. They amount to an additional $3.2 million.

Under the Harrington-Willis Act, UM has been charged with the responsibility for the Commonwealth's continuing education program. To implement new programs in continuing education, in radio and TV for a planned new educational station serving western Mass., and a learning resources center, the University is asking for more than $500,000.

Nearly $700,000 is asked to appoint new personnel and plan programs and physical plant for the med school, scheduled to open in 1970.

A special "catch-up" request, necessary if the University is to keep pace with rapidly changing needs in higher education, calls for $1,369,000 for faculty improvement and funds for academic equipment and supplies. In addition extra funds are asked to take care of increased requests for scholarship and financial aid by a growing student body.

First Senate Meeting Next Wednesday

by Fran Boronski

The Student Senate will hold its first meeting of the 66-67 school year on Wednesday, Sept. 21, in the Council Chambers.

Although many senators have moved from their constituencies, they will continue to represent their former residences until Senate elections, which will be held on October 6.

Since construction of the Southwest high-rise residence halls will raise the number of senators considerably, the Senate will consider an appropriation to remodel the Student Senate office in the Student Union.

President John Greenquist (Thatcher) will deliver a short address, stressing the challenging issues of the coming year.

All Student Senate meetings are open to the public and all students, especially those of the Class of 1970, are welcome.

Draft Alternative Proposed At C. Y. D. Convention

After spending its first five years giving full support to Democratic administrations and serving as a publicity agent for the Democratic National Committee, College Young Democrats (CYD) are starting to think for themselves.

CYD leaders challenged "inequities" in the Selective Service and initiated community action projects at the National Executive Committee meeting in Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 2-4.

The Committee advocated a national selection policy by lottery. High school and college students would be eligible for the draft up to only one year after graduation. This system of limited eligibility would be dropped in case of Congressionally - declared war.

Working for a more "democratic" system, the Committee urged that single women be inducted for secretarial service.

The Executive Committee opposed most deferments except for postponement of service for college undergraduates.

They suggested alternative services, including Peace Corps and Vista, for men and women unable or unwilling to serve in the military. Called the National Service, it would sponsor projects for physical and social renewal — cleaning neighborhoods, volunteer work in hospitals, charities, and tutorials.

To combat off-year apathy among College Young Democrats, the CYD National Committee is trying to establish continuing programs. It has outlined community action projects with emphasis on voter education. These projects will be concentrated in poor voting areas, and among immigrants.

The Committee also suggested campus programs for the '66 election races, and urged area organizations to work for 30 freshmen congressmen whose re-election is essential for passage of administrative legislation. At the same time, they recommended that clubs not support congressmen who voted against the Civil Rights Bill in the House.

Population Expert Is Head of Sociology

A specialist in population study who has done major research on U.S. migration and mental health has been named head of the department of sociology and anthropology at the University of Massachusetts, it was announced today by Dean I. Moyer Hunsberger of the UMass College of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Everett S. Lee, now Assoc. Prof. of sociology and director of the Population Laboratory at the Univ. of Penn., has been appointed a full professor and department head by the UM Board of Trustees as of Sept. 1, 1966.

Dr. J. Henry Korson, head of the department since it was created at UM in 1950, has relinquished the post to return to full-time teaching and research. The department has 21 faculty members, over 300 departmental majors, 65 grad students and offers 3 grad programs — an M.A. degree in anthropology, and both M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in sociology.

Dr. Lee holds A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the Univ. of Penn., has been a faculty member there since 1952, and director of the Population Laboratory since 1963.

He was a staff member on the Univ. of Penn. Studies of Population Redistribution and Economic Growth from 1952-59, a staff member of the Committee on Migration Differentials of the Social Science Research Council from 1952-56 and a consultant to the Foundation for Mental Health, Inc., from 1955-62.

Dr. Lee is co-author, with Dr. Benjamin Malzberg, of the book Migration and Mental Disease published in 1956 by the Social Science Research Council, N. Y.

The American Negro in our society has been the subject of research in which Dr. Lee and his wife Anne have collaborated. Their findings are reported in "The Differential Fertility of the American Negro" published in 1952 in the American Sociological Review and "The Future Fertility of the American Negro" published in 1959 in Social Forces. In 1960 they reported "Internal Migration Statistics for the U.S." in the Journal of the American Statistical Assoc.

In addition to articles in other learned journals, Dr. Lee reported "Measures of Migration in the Study of Population Redistribution in the U.S., 1870-1950" in the 1954 Proceedings of the World Population Conference and "Migration Differentials by State of Birth in the U.S." in the 1961 report of the International Population Conference in New York.

Dr. Lee also contributed an article on U.S. internal migration and population redistribution to Population: The Vital Revolution, a 1963 book; and presented a paper on Migration and the Convergence of White and Negro Rates of Mental Disease at the UN World Population Conference in Belgrade last year.

Dr. Lee was a visiting scholar at Kiel Univ. and Institut fur Weltwirtschaft, West Germany, in 1959-60. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and was both a Harrison Fellow and a Social Science Research Fellow at the Univ. of Penn.

He is a member of the National Committee on Vital Health and Statistics, of the Population Assoc. of America board of directors, and is Pres. of both the Philadelphia Chapter of the American Statistical Assoc. and the Research Club of the Univ. of Penn.

Please don't zlupf Sprite. It makes plenty of noise all by itself.

Sprite, you recall, is the soft drink that's so tart and tingling, we just couldn't keep it quiet.

Flip its lid and it really flips. Bubbling, fizzing, gurgling, hissing and carrying on all over the place.

An almost excessively lively drink.

Hence, to zlupf is to err.

What is zlupfing?

Zlupfing is to drinking what smacking one's lips is to eating.

It's the staccato buzz you make when draining the last few deliciously tangy drops of Sprite from the bottle with a straw.

Zzzzzlllupf!

It's completely uncalled for. Frowned upon in polite society. And not appreciated on campus either.

But. If zlupfing Sprite is absolutely essential to your enjoyment; if a good healthy zlupf is your idea of heaven, well...all right.

But have a heart. With a drink as noisy as Sprite, a little zlupf goes a long, long way.

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

Behind the Scenes

Inside the "Fish Bowl"

by Jean Fulton

Immediately inside Bartlett Hall's front door is what might appear to be an information booth. The wide glass front allows full vision of the steel-gray, waist-high file cabinet which runs the length of the room.

Behind the heads of a couple of student secretaries, inevitably behind file cabinet, bent over their class lists, is still another glass wall. Vision from Bartlett's lobby is somewhat obstructed. A variety of light reflections glance off the glass. Mounted on the glass is a chart, three by three feet, scheduling the classes and sections which meet here. This is the Language Laboratory.

Leading into the "fish bowl," on either side of the first glass wall, are two light-colored, heavy, wooden doors, one of which is unlocked and ready for use. The other, however, is presently within the private domain of Hans Fritch, laboratory technician, in his attempt to coax the tired lock into submission to the turning of the door knob.

Once through the first portal, one comes immediately face-to-face with the steel-gray "information booth," bearing the weight of several class enrollment lists, a shoe-type box containing two types of form stickers to be used on individual tapes, a loan-tape book and revolving bank to receive the "donations" required for borrowing a tape—five cents, and finally, two Coke bottles, one already emptied of its original contents.

It's only a short glance up from these Coke bottles to observe two student secretaries, checking and sorting the names of hundreds of students into courses and sections. Circling the cabinet to the left, the high, gray-metal stools are evident—these raise the girls up to a position of prominence even to the casual observers from Bartlett lobby.

From this position, the second room and its contents can be observed. Immediately evident is the rear view of a white-haired man, busily turning dials forward and in reverse, causing several tape reels to spin. The staging for the many knobs and dials is in two or three sections, stacked so as to be taller than James Butler, the man manipulating the reels.

As yet, no clearly audible sounds are heard. However, upon even the smallest opening of the final door, a seemingly unintelligible barrage of sound advances. After a pause for orientation, Butler's voice can be distinguished, rapidly explaining to a student secretary where the French tape should be spliced. This demonstrating accounts for a part of the mixture of sounds.

". . . French 102, tape 3 . . . J'entre dans la salle de class. Je regarde autour de moi . . .," a rapid reverse amounting to a high, wailing series of raised and lowered tones, and then: ". . . French 102, tape 3 . . . J'entre . . ." begins again.

In another small room, unseen to the observer in Bartlett lobby, a beginning Portuguese student is being helped with pronunciation. The recording to be imitated is audible, even through the closed, glass topped door—therefore, more sound.

And, a low rumbling, occurring between relatively even-spaced pauses, can be detected from the classrooms adjoining this main language center—from Labs A and B, where both French 108 students and German 102 students respond to the questions on their respective master tapes.

The mixture of English, Portuguese, French and German, taken before orientation, was the original barrage of noise. Even knowing the individual elements, however, it is still relatively difficult to sort out the sounds and follow one conversation. And the ringing of the class bell makes continuity impossible, as scraping of chairs and chatter is added.

The day, as far as the lab technicians are concerned, is almost over. Yet, the large board made up of course names, green and red lights and switches is being readied for the first three classes at 8 o'clock the next morning. Immediately after a technician pulls a toggle switch, French 101, French 102 and Spanish 252 light up in green. With the dials set, this day is done and the lights are switched off. The machines and reels are in readiness and the lab is prepared to function the next day behind the big glass wall in Bartlett Hall.

Of the $35.9 million requested, approximately $5.5 million will be returned to the Commonwealth from funds received for tuition, room rent, reimbursement for services and miscellaneous receipts.

The document says, "The primary mission of the University continues to be the expansion of its facilities and programs to meet the needs of the qualified students seeking admission, a number which is increasing each year. The increase in enrollment in Amherst will be the largest in the history of the institution.

"Despite this increase, the University faces the situation that a large percentage of the transfer requests will be denied, many graduate school applications will be refused, and thousands of freshmen applicants will be turned away."

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

A New Line of Thinking

by JIM FOUDY, Managing Editor

There will be a convocation tomorrow.

You've probably heard. President Lederle is going to present his State of the University address to faculty and students.

For the occasion the campus has been blanketed with posters, honor societies are doubling as publicity agents and the mass media have lent their support in rounding up an audience for the President's most important speech of the year. It has, in effect, become necessary to actively encourage students to attend an address which concerns their day to day activities at UMass.

It is doubtful that the speech will contain mere platitudes, nor do we expect a simple rehash of the University's physical expansion. Instead, we anticipate the address to be just what it has been billed—"a major policy address", stressing what appears to be new trends and thinking in regards to student life, academics and student-faculty relationships.

A period of introspection began at the University last year. Social regulations, the role of the faculty, the Greek system, student publications and the scope of the University's responsibility to its community have all been held up to the light. Too much concern for these and other issues has been expressed for the President to let them pass by dressed only in old cliches or vague generalities.

We are placing faith in the President to speak straight from the shoulder on the issues which concern our life and educational development here at the University. Perhaps a decent turnout will reinforce an already dying belief that others on this campus are also concerned with the University as more than just a place to finagle a degree.

Here We Go Again...

By JACK DEAN, Day Editor

So we won our first game.

Not by much, but then it wasn't the score that made the news. It was the way we won. With one kick Bruce Cochrane cleared up that slight case of freshman homesickness and gave courage to that upperclassman who has a lousy schedule or a dull prof.

But Bruce didn't provide the only bright spot of the day. In case you didn't notice—and you probably didn't—there was a marked absence of traffic tie-ups. Chief Blasko and his boys certainly deserve a pat on the back for such a marvelous job. It must have impressed our visitors as much as did the stadium. A job well-done usually goes unnoticed, but this fine piece of work was obvious in its excellence.

And I mustn't forget to mention the new, more efficient method by which students now gain admission to the games. Whoever dreamt up that little book of coupons ought to have his footprints incased in cement next to the 50 yard line. I think we'll all agree that it's an almost foolproof method for keeping other than UMass' own students from getting into the game. But if ID's, couponbooks, and birthmarks are to be scrutinized, it seems only fair that more than two gates should be open to facilitate the process.

I'm also amazed, and slightly disgusted, to see that UM students have again been relegated to the end zone sections in their own stadium. It seems that a more suitable seating management could be arrived at.

Of course a UM game wouldn't be complete without the BMOC's who carry their little hip flask, and Saturday was no exception. But then some college men will be boys, won't they...

So ends the first weekend back at school.

Which reminds me of a subject totally unrelated to football—food.

If you hold a weekend meal ticket and live, as I do, in the SW complex, weren't you surprised to discover that neither of the SW commons are open weekends? I could've sworn that was part of the deal described in the SW literature.

Perhaps one of you readers could enlighten us all.

Letters to the Editor

It's Your Dorm . . .

To the Editor:

This year it is University policy that all residence halls are to have democratically elected governments which are to have the sole authority—and responsibility—to determine house regulations, dues, etc, and enforce them.

In many new men's dorms in the towers, where no elected governments had yet been established, "voluntary" house dues were established and collected by the counselors or Heads of Residence. A representative of the Dean of Men's Office with whom I spoke admitted that this was a "high-handed" act. House dues are supposed to be levied only by elected governments.

In future years, in fact, according to recommendations of the Student Life Committee, house dues will probably have to be ratified in the fall by the residents before they can be collected. House dues are not so urgent that they could not wait for the election of a provisional government. They are not like quiet hours or office duty, which a Head of Residence might be justified in establishing temporarily until a house government could take over these functions.

Those who refused to pay these unlawfully established house dues got their room keys without further trouble. Yet how many people refused to pay? How many even wondered why there were house dues without a house government to levy them?

The idea of dorm self-government is not new to the University. A three-year-old handbook of regulations from the Dean of Men's Office says in part:

. . .students, through self-government, set the standards of residence hall behavior and enforce these standards themselves. . .The student cannot expect his Head of Residence to be a policeman. Students themselves should organize to control undesirable conditions in their residence hall either through their government or their own actions.

Some men's dorms, such as Butterfield, have had true student government for many years. Most, however, have been dictatorships, however well-meaning, by the housemothers or counselors. Attempts have even been made in some to rig house elections. In most men's dorms, although self-government has been the official policy for years, it has never really existed.

Why not? My guess is that some housemothers and counselors insisted on taking charge themselves and did not give dorm government a chance, and that students did not care enough to set up active dorm governments, shirking their responsibilities, and left a void which housemothers and counselors filled (some reluctantly, some not so reluctantly).

Now that the University has again committed itself to self-government in residence halls—this time men's and women's—it is up to us this year to make dorm government work!!

When the Heads of Residence and Counselors in the towers took it upon themselves to collect house dues, they were not, this time, trying to pre-empt house governments. The money was collected with the best of intentions and with the understanding that an elected government could later refund all or part of it if they so chose. No-one was trying to pull anything.

But good intentions still do not justify these actions. Curfews, room inspections, and many other absurd regulations of the Old Regime so recently abolished were instituted and defended to the end with the highest of motives. Every dictatorial housemother justifies her actions on such grounds.

House government will work only if it is given a chance by the housemothers and counselors, and only if it receives the full support of the students. Otherwise it will again exist only on paper as before. Some counselors and Heads of Residence may be sorely tempted at times to assert control. We cannot let them. They have a positive and vital role to fulfill, but governing the dorm is not part of it.

We, the students, must co-operate with our house governments. We must be on guard against encroachments by dictatorial counselors or housemothers who may find it hard to break habits of long standing. We cannot take any garbage from them. We should not hesitate to complain to higher authorities when all other remedies have been exhausted.

Remember, it is up to your elected government to run the dorm, not your Head of Residence. It is your dorm, not hers!

UM Dames Plan Fashion Review

The UMass Dames Club will hold the first of its monthly meetings on Sept. 22nd, 8:15 p.m. at the Farley 4-H club on campus. After a short business meeting, the Dames will present the newest in fall fashions from the Ann August shop with accessories from The Leather Shed. As is their custom, dessert and coffee will be served and no admission is charged. For transportation, directions, or further information please call: Joyce Austin 256-6273 or Georgia Sutter 253-9636 after 5 p.m. or call Carol Ferguson 256-6071, Ann Grindstaff 253-9410 or Bonnie Boydell 256-6918.

Dames is a national organization at the university, open to wives of both undergraduate and graduate students, and to wives who themselves are students. Dues are $2.00 annually. The monthly meetings are held on the third Thursday of each month at the Farley 4-H club on campus. After the business portion, a program is presented which this year will include a fall and spring fashion show, a hootenanny, a foreign student night showing customs and costumes, and some controversial topics such as natural childbirth, LSD, mysticism and hypnotism.

Meanwhile, Hayden has left for a year of study at the University of Bordeaux in France on a study-abroad program. His probation will have expired when he returns to the Boulder campus.

The allegedly obscene illustration in the magazine raised few shackles among Colorado undergraduates. Interviews by the Colorado Daily revealed that only a minority of students were offended by the magazine and that most students thought Nisus uninteresting.

This Draft is killing me!

Fail Your Physical with a Flair

by LOIS COHEN, Feature Editor

Don't worry about getting a perfect score on the Selective Service Exam. You don't have to carry a twelve-credit burden anymore. Oh — and forget about getting asthma so you can fail the physical. There are much easier and more creative ways to avoid the draft.

With a little practice and a few pointers from your girl-friend you can learn to walk, smoke, sit, and talk like a girl. If you have the gear you can throw arched side-glances at the recruiting officer. Make-up is a matter of individual preference, of course.

Just don't tell them you learned the bit from Sally in a two-week practice session that began when you got notice to go for your physical — it ruins the effect.

If that method of Creative Draft Evasion doesn't (hmm) appeal to you, and if you like to travel, go to Canada! It's a beautiful country to establish citizenship in. You might even learn French while you're there.

But when you go, take everything you need from this country with you—you can never come back in because the "Feds" will be waiting at the border for you.

If you've really been looking forward to failing for physical reasons, try dipping a cigarette in ink and smoking it. Your lungs will develop beautiful (and impressive) blue spots. Just don't use Washable Blue!

There are many effective ways to raise your blood pressure. If worrying hasn't already done it, try taking salt pills. Drink, if it's not against your principles, great quantities of alcoholic beverages.

Sleep with a bar of soap under your arm the night before your physical. It stops the circulation in your arm and shrinks your veins. When blood starts to flow again the pressure is increased.

Speaking of soap, there's always the old standby procedure — let your hair grow for three months and don't shave or shower for at least eight weeks before you go.

This is getting old, so you'll have to give it a twist by, say, telling them you write the advertising copy for the Ivory Soap Co. Or tell them you belong to a cult that believes in the "natural' beauty of bodily odor.

Being a Conscientious Objector is good if you really believe in it, but otherwise there are ways that involve less red tape. Resorting to flat refusal and acceptance of a three-year jail sentence should be completely unnecessary if you have any spirit, ingenuity, and creative imagination.

Censors Strike at U of Colorado

A drawing of a naked woman with a suggestive caption in a University of Colorado undergraduate literary magazine has embroiled the school in a controversy over its disciplinary system and has created a possible issue in the November state elections.

Following the publication of last spring's issue of Nisus, charges of "obscenity" and "censorship" prompted disciplinary action against editor Brian Hayden as well as the resignation of a University Publications Board member.

Hayden was brought before the Publications Board to face possible censure for authorizing the publication of Nisus, but the Board declined to take such action.

The Board's action was subsequently overruled by the University Disciplinary Committee which considers cases arising from individual students' infractions of rules. The Publications Board has jurisdiction over questionable actions by undergraduate publications. Its actions are generally not subject to review by the UDC.

The UDC, however, placed Hayden on social probation, a decision which prevents him from participating in extra-curricular activities for one year.

The Committee's action led to the resignation of a sociology professor from the Publications Board amidst charges that the UDC had usurped the Board's power and that freedom of press had been violated on the campus. Students also raised charges that Hayden was subjected to "double jeopardy" as he was tried twice for the same offense.

Hayden appealed his case to the University's Administrative Council, but the Council upheld the probation levied by the UDC. The case was then taken before the Regents and there the political implications of the controversy were raised.

The Regent selected by popular vote in the state to control all University policy except finances, split 3-3 on a motion to sustain Hayden's probation. The University President Joseph Smiley was then called upon to break the tie. He upheld the earlier UDC action.

Three Democratic Regents voted to reverse the action against Hayden, and two Republicans and one Democrat upheld the probation.

The Democrat who voted for probation, former state party chairman Fred Betz, made his decision to avoid involving his party in a free speech controversy during an election year, according to the Colorado Daily editor.

At the same time, the Regents directed the University adminis-

Tall Tales

Lofty Outlook on Towers

by SUE SHAFRAM
Feature Staff

Red brick and concrete edifices create a skyline in the Southwest corner of the UMass campus. The five towers house more than two thousand students.

Initial reactions of students to the Southwest towers are varied and amusing. Most freshmen "can't get over the modern architecture." Many complain of "sore feet" and would love to hold classes and seminars right in the towers.

Tower residents are "snowed" by the luxury of the dorms — laundry rooms on individual floors, phones right in the rooms, majestic views of the Connecticut Valley countryside, beautiful and accommodating lounge floors. Residents and visitors alike are favorably impressed with the new, "ultra-modern, luxurious, hotel-like dormitories."

As to the magnificent height of the towers—one girl peering off the balcony on the nineteenth floor of Tower Two turned to her friend and asked, "Do I look as white as I feel?"

Rideboard Rides Again

The UMass rideboard doesn't have any information at all about rides to Montevideo, Uruguay.

But if you want to go home to Newton next weekend, or if you need a ride to Washington, D.C. to have franks and beans with the Johnson's two weeks from Sunday, then check the rideboard, because someone else might be going there too.

The illustrious UMass rideboard is situated on the second floor of the Student Union. Just climb the stairs on the left as you face the lobby counter, follow the corridor to the end, and turn left. (If your political leanings are otherwise, take the back stairs and reverse the procedure.)

The rideboard is a large (colorful) map of Massachusetts and other such important geographical locations of Eastern United States. Instead of pins, there are hooks marking each location. If you want a ride somewhere, find it or the nearest point to it on the board and fill in a blue card entitled "I WOULD LIKE A RIDE" and hang it on the appropriate hook.

Or, if you are fortunate enough to have a car and would like riders to travel with you and, perhaps, share expenses, then just fill in the pink card marked "RIDERS WANTED" and bedeck the hook with it.

You can also check other people's variously marked pink and blue cards to see if what you're looking for is already there.

"I Didn't Think It Was Gonna Make It"

By DAVE JARNES, Sports Staff

It may not have been a thing of beauty, but man, those three points looked awfully pretty on the scoreboard.

Bruce Cochrane's dramatic field goal will be subject to discussion for a long time. From the pressbox it appeared that Bruce Gombar's snap from center was low, and as Al Caruso was trying to set up the ball, Cochrane kicked it while the ball was at about a 45 degree angle to the left.

Nicked Crossbar

Coach Fusia said that the ball nicked the crossbar as it went over. A reporter thought the ball cleared the bar by a foot.

A rugged 211 - pound sophomore fullback, Cochrane's reaction was only to say, "I'm glad that I was able to contribute something to the team."

"I didn't think it was gonna make it," he said. "The ball was turning end over end, and it straightened out just as it passed the bar."

The former Brookline High star never place kicked before, "But I knew that Milt Morin graduated and the team needed a placekicker, so I practiced all summer."

"Really Fine Fullback"

Backfield Coach Jack Delaney was ecstatic in his praise of Cochrane: "He's not only a good kicker, but he's going to be a really fine fullback when he gets the chance to play. Bruce is a hardnosed type of player."

No matter how that pigskin went over the bar, one thing is definite: Bruce Cochrane will cherish the memory of his first varsity game as long as he lives.

kick-off, and the rest of the UMass defense took up the cry against the Bear backs.

Cody Recovers

Safety Ed Cody recovered a fumble for UMass at the Maine 29 after only three plays by the visitors. The Redmen then marched, surely but ever so slowly, to paydirt, with Durkin and gaining only enough yardage to maintain the drive.

Durkin finally went over from the two after seven minutes, and with freshmen beanies still in the air, Cochrane made good on his first conversion try.

The rest of the half featured stern defenses ruled by linebackers Rod Brooks and Bob Gogick of UMass—with 240-pound Dick Qualey forcing Maine to run away from his right tackle spot —and linebacker John Huard of Maine, who consistently warded off blockers to make the tackles.

Halfway through the second quarter, Maine pentrated as far as the UMass 12, with sub quarterback Paul Auclair doing the pitching to John White and Walt Nelson. Lovejoy, whose first-half field goal last year was the margin in Maine's 10-8 win, missed on a 27-yard effort.

A punting duel developed between Maine's Charlie Norris and UMass' Don Porter. Warnock spelled Porter when the sophomore was injured in the second period.

With five minutes gone in the second half, Tardiff intercepted a Landry pass at the Maine 49 and lugged it to the Massachusetts 36. Working mostly from the "I" formation and concentrating on the left side of the UMass line, Maine hit the end zone after 10 plays on a sneak by Platter. Dale Scribner's kick was good.

During the march, Jim Sanders and Yanush picked up crucial first downs, the latter providing most of the tough yardage in close.

The defenses stiffened the rest of the way until the Redmen's winning drive.

Only Three Penalties

Although there were eight fumbles — only four switched hands—the first-game execution flaws produced only three penalties all game. UMass lost five yards when the opening kick-off went out of bounds, Maine was penalized 10 yards for a second quarter clip, and UMass suffered that 15-yard personal foul in the waning moments.

Landry stuck to the ground all day, obviously still lacking the confidence in his new receivers that he had in last season's All-Conference ends, Milt Morin and Bob Meers. Greg attempted only one pass in the first half and six in the second, completing only two for 15 yards, with one interception.

Smoke Signals—UMass fielded 14 lettermen, Maine 25 . . . Redman fullback Dick Benoit carried the leather only three times all day. He went 18 yards on a draw play in the third period, but fumbled.

SUG Board Behind 8-Ball on Pool Room

By DAVE JARNES, Sports Staff

Once again an administrative body (this time the SUG Board) has fouled things up and once again the students are the ones who suffer.

Within the next few weeks the games area will be closed in order to make extensive alterations. The present billiards room will be closed for two months while the bookstore is being extended into the billiards room and the pool tables are being moved into what is presently the Lodge. Meanwhile, the ping pong room and the candlepin bowling lanes will be out of commission for an indefinite period.

Why couldn't this have been done during the summer instead of trying to save some money by procrastinating for lower bids.

Also, there are presently seven pool tables and one billiards table in the billiards room and plans call for nine tables being installed in the much smaller Lodge. The SUG Board apparently didn't have the foresight to realize that this represents a ratio of less than one table per thousand students.

Many students enjoy playing pool, but find that they have to wait as long as two hours to get tables. According to the employees in the games area, at least twenty-five to thirty pool tables are needed to serve the students adequately.

To add another piece of kindling to the fire, each student has paid a certain fee for the right to use the games room facilities but this right has been taken away without the proper consent of the students. True, the SUG is partially comprised of students, but the decision to renovate the games area was made by last year's board with the apparent understanding that construction would be completed before this year.

Did the class of 1970, which is affected the most by this decision, have any voice? Of course not. A while back we went through a similar experience when the administration decided arbitrarily to close the Hatch and games room when the Provost was making a speech.

Like many of my colleagues, I am furious at this inconsideration. It may not be too late to do something about this matter, because construction contracts have been revoked before. We must not allow administrative bodies to take away from us what is rightfully ours.

'It Looked Good'...

not Landry's fault." Fusia added that it takes some time before a passer can key himself on new receivers and their new patterns.

But he also said, "If you can't keep a team open with passing, it inhibits your offense."

He lauded the efforts of offensive guards Ernie Smith and Don Glogowski and center Bruce Gombar, the latter two being new at their positions. He also had good words for the running of Tim Driscoll and the defensive work of linebacker Rod Brooks, tackle Dick Qualey, and quarterback Mike McArdle.

FRAT AVERAGES LOWEST EVER; 10% OF GREEKS FLUNK OUT

The Dean of Men's office of the University of Massachusetts has announced the fraternity averages for the second semester 1965-1966, and for the academic year 1965-1966.

These averages compared to the All Men's and All University averages as follows:

All Men's average for second semester—2.164, for the full year 2.165.

All University second semester average—2.281, for the full year —2.275.

The year 1965-1966 was one of the poorest scholastic years for the Greeks. The second semester averages found only four fraternities above the All Men's Average, and only one fraternity had an average above the All University Average. At the end of the semester 10% of all Greeks had flunked out.

The figures for the entire year are even less impressive with 13 houses below the All Men's Average for the year and all 16 houses below the All University Average for the year.

Paul Ponte, Secretary of the Interfraternity Council and chairman of the IFC Conference recently held on campus, stated that the Greeks were going to take upon themselves measures for improvement.

"One of the measures taking effect immediately," Ponte said, "is that Freshman Rush would be deferred until second semester and that for the class of 1970 and thereafter no person would be allowed to pledge a fraternity unless he had a minimum average of 2.0."

The fraternities are in the process of imposing new rules and regulations upon themselves to improve the Greek System and better the individual houses and members.

The averages were:

Boot Heard 'Round the Conference

Redmen Nip Maine, 10-7, On Cochrane's Field Goal

By TOM FITZGERALD, Sports Staff

He has half the deed done, wrote Horace, who has made a beginning. It took a somewhat bizarre field goal by sophomore Bruce Cochrane with 18 seconds left, but the UMass Redmen made quite a beginning for their Yankee Conference drive with a tough 10-7 victory over Maine at Alumni Stadium Saturday.

And "half the deed" may be underestimating the game's worth in the conference race. By winning UMass becomes the clear favorite.

The tightness of the duel was no surprise. During the six-year coaching rivalry between the Redmen's Vic Fusia and the Bears' Hal Westerman, the most "lop-sided" score has been 10-0, although Fusia now holds a 4-2 edge.

Triumphant March

UMass began the triumphant march on Maine's 43-yard line with three-and-a-half minutes showing on the clock. After halfbacks Bob Detore and Don Durkin and quarterback Greg Landry took cracks at the rugged Bear line with a net gain of only six yards, Landry lobbed a low one to tight end Bob Ellis, who had to shoe-string it at the Maine 29.

The catch gave the Redmen the most crucial first down of the game and a psychological shot in the arm. Sophomore Tim Driscoll broke off right tackle for a seven-yard pick-up at the 22, and Landry hit end Nick Warnock for another seven before the UMass engine sputtered.

Driscoll picked up a mere yard on a line plunge, and a Landry pass was incomplete. The rangy signalcaller, however, pulled off a sneak for four yards to set up a fourth-down-and-five situation on the 10.

The 15,000-plus crowd was on its feet as Cochrane, a 6'-211 pound rookie fullback from Brookline, lined up the posts. Holder Al Caruso had trouble putting the ball in place, and as a result, Cochrane had to boot it more like Pele than Groza.

Narrowly Cleared Bar

The ball, looking like a wounded duck, narrowly cleared the bar just inside the left upright and banged against the wall behind.

The kick put the Bean Pot in sight for the Redmen. Actually, though, the game still had 17 action-filled seconds in store. Maine's Norm Tardiff took John Clair's short kick-off at the 33 and returned it to the Maine 48.

At this point, UMass was penalized 15 long ones for a personal foul, only the second penalty committed by the Redmen all afternoon. George Platter's sideline pass to John Fahlgren gained nine yards and halted the clock with seconds left. On the last play of the game, a desperation heave from Platter, intended for Fred Lovejoy, was batted around by the UMass secondary before falling incomplete.

The Redmen won the toss of the coin, and Coach Fusia, mindful of his sluggish offense, elected to kick. Guard Mickey Bailey made a good open field tackle on Maine's Charlie Yanush on the

Vic Says: 'It Looked Good But Not Pretty'

"It looked good, but it didn't look pretty," Vic Fusia laughed, shortly after Bruce Cochrane's last-minute field goal pushed the Redmen past the University of Maine Black Bears, last year's Lambert Cup choice.

The head coach reported that Dave Kelley, former player and now assistant coach, had said the ball actually nicked the crossbar on its way over. "It's the first time a knuckler ever won a football game," quipped Fusia.

He looked thoroughly relaxed as he sat sipping a can of soft drink, "This was one of our best first games," he stated, which really wasn't saying much, since for the past few years, the Redmen have developed a tradition of shaky openers.

Fusia added, however, that "we're far from our potential. We still have a long way to go."

The victory was still a sweet one for the coach who gave most of the credit to the "outstanding" defense. "When you beat Maine, it's a very good way to start."

"Maine's a fine football team. I think the people of New England have greatly underestimated this team." Fusia said the Bear defense was every bit as tough as he thought it would be.

The coach gave the "play of the day" label to Bob Ellis' catch off his shoe-tops in the fourth quarter. The pass from Greg Landry came on a fourth-down - and - four - to - go situation at the Maine 37. Ellis came up with the ball on the 29 to replenish the drive that resulted in Cochrane's game-winning boot.

Ellis' teammates elected to give him the game ball for that play, which Fusia called "just a case of great individual effort."

Asked why Landry's passes were so few and far between, when it appeared that a greater air attack might have opened up Maine's defense, Fusia answered, "Our pass protection for the passer for the past week has been terrible, and we didn't think we could beat Maine with a passing game.

"You've got to remember. He's got new receivers. It's

"A Revolution of Responsibility"--Pres. Lederle

A "revolution of responsibility" is in progress at the University of Massachusetts, President John W. Lederle told students, faculty and staff Tuesday morning at the All-University Convocation opening the 1966-67 academic year.

In a major speech titled "The University Perspective 1966," Dr. Lederle listed three basic student responsibilities involved in this revolution: responsibility of students to each other, responsibility of students to the University community and the responsibility of each student to himself.

Defining the responsibility of students to each other, the president said: "It is the responsibility of student editors and leaders of other groups to identify fully with the views of the students they serve. It is equally the responsibility of the student body as a whole to insist that groups representing their interests do so fully and accurately."

False Representation

Dr. Lederle questioned the role of student publications and government organizations that purport to represent the student body but may actually represent the views of only a half-dozen students in control.

Student responsibility to the University community, the president continued, includes full participation in the work of the University. He specifically called on student reform groups and honoraries to reexamine their roles. "Outworn traditions have been cast aside but few if any new traditions have evolved to replace them," he said.

Under the responsibility of students to each other, Dr. Lederle noted that "a rare opportunity now exists for the fraternity system on this campus to renew itself. This will require individuals within the system to create a new concept of campus citizenship both socially and academically." He pledged the cooperation of the University to work with the fraternity system toward these goals.

STUDENT PRESS — A PROVING GROUND

In the important area of student publication responsibility, the president detailed some of the philosophy being established by the recently-created student-faculty - administration Student Publications Commission.

"Student publications should measure their actions and policies with due regard for the other members of the society of which they are a part," the president said, and added: "Although freedom of the press must be preserved, it must be matched with responsibility and cannot be allowed to degenerate into license; for license is the hallmark of anarchy."

Student publications reflect on the University as a whole, Dr. Lederle noted, and therefore do

FREE UNIVERSITY TO BEGIN DISCUSSIONS

The Valley Center, a newly-formed experimental educational institution, will hold a public meeting to organize its fall course program this Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. at 56 College Street (Phi Psi), Amherst. All students, faculty, and area residents interested in forming and participating in independent discussions, workshops, and seminars are invited to attend.

The idea of the Center was developed at a series of meetings of Four-College students and teachers last May. The school aims to unite people who have various intellectual interests which are not included in the conventional university experience because of their unconventional content or subjective nature.

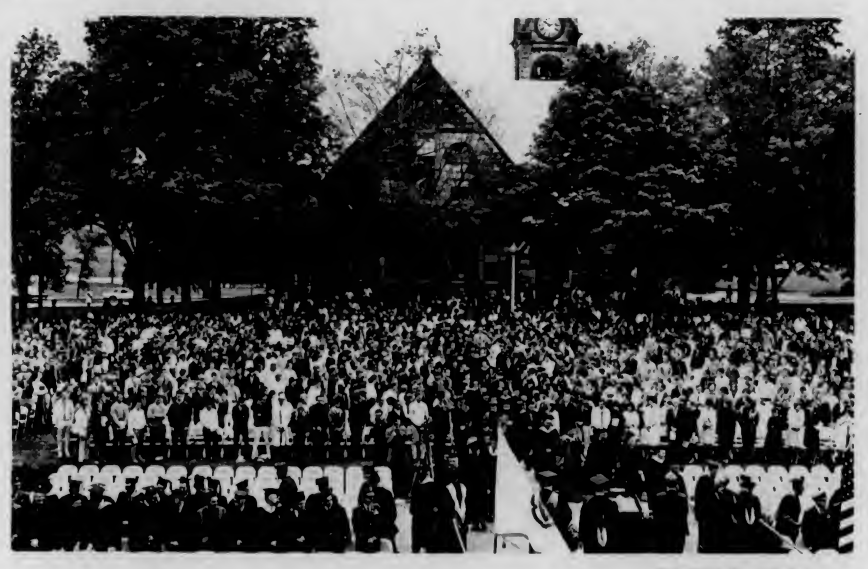
Such people will organize themselves into small, regularly-meeting, self-directed groups. Over one hundred members of the Four-College community responded last May, and two temporary committees were established to locate housing for the institution and to organize the fall program.

Temporary housing for the Center has been located at 56 College St., Amherst, and the housing committee is currently negotiating for the rental and renovation of a house in Northampton, which would be large enough to allow a crafts workshop and possibly a coffee house common room as well.

Some of the areas of interest that were put forward last spring include: democratic theory or American foreign policy; a writers' workshop, Black Nationalism, the fiction of James Purdy, the works of Sartre, a critique of modern democratic society, as in the works of Mills and Marcuse; Latin American topics; and a folk-music workshop.

These topics are to be understood as personal interests, not as courses to be offered, since the actual syllabus or direction of discussion of each group is to be worked out by all the members of that group at its initial meeting, since it is hoped that participants will not restrict themselves to traditional classroom methods, formalities, or teacher-student roles.

At the organizational meeting this Thursday night the fall coordinating committee will collect registration cards from all participants indicating their topical interest, the days and times they are available for a group-meeting, and their address.



The coordinating committee will collate the course cards and inform the participants by mail of the date and time of their group's first meeting. Participants will be able to further break down or conjoin their groups as they decide at their initial meeting.

The coordinating committee hopes to have the Center in operation by the week of Sept. 26. Persons who are unable to attend the organizational meeting this Thursday are urged to send their registration information to 304 Stone Hall, A.C., Amherst, before Sept. 24.

Operating expenses of the Center are currently estimated at $3.00 a month per person and will initially be collected at each first group meeting. The continuing operations of the center—

Chemical Engineering Professor Gets Distinguished Teacher Award

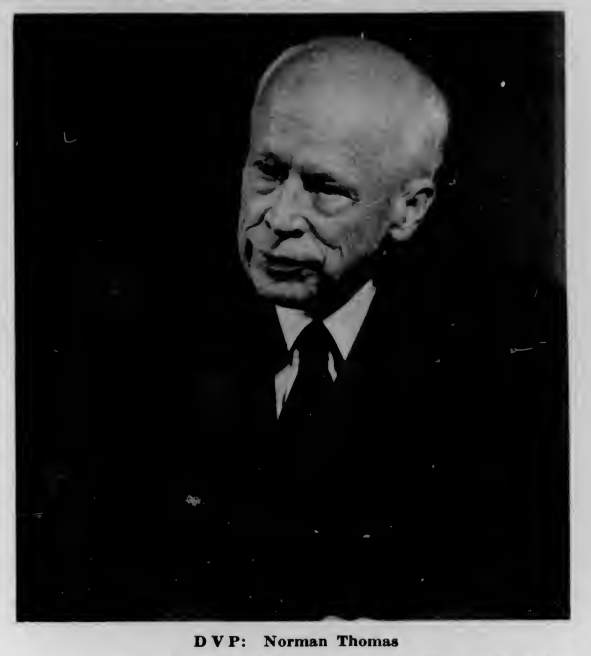
Dr. Hans C. Duus, whose combined career as an industrial scientist and teacher spans more than 40 years, was presented the University of Massachusetts 1966 Distinguished Teacher of the Year Award Tuesday at the All-University Convocation formally opening the 1966-67 academic year.

"Manifest excellence"

An associate professor of chemical engineering and an authority in the fields of thermochemistry, thermodynamics, kinetics and refrigeration, Dr. Duus joined the UMass faculty in 1956 after a 30-year career in research with the duPont company.

The Distinguished Teacher Award, which carries a $1000 stipend, was presented by UMass President John W. Lederle. Selection was by a faculty committee representing all UMass schools and colleges. The award is given for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education."

A native of Tyler, Minn., Dr. Duus received a B.S. degree in 1918 from Carleton College and a Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1925. He joined E.I. duPont DeNemours and Co. a year later and retired as a senior scientist in 1956, coming to UMass the same year.



A Teacher Plus . . .

At UMass, he has been active in research and in teaching at both graduate and undergraduate levels. Organic chemical technology, kinetics, heat-energy relations and advanced chemical engineering thermodynamics are some of the courses he has taught.

He has been active in senior honors thesis work, honors colloquia, and has served on the UMass Honors Council, including several terms as chairman. He has also served as a faculty fellow in the Orchard Hill Residential College program.

He is known as an inspiring teacher and a highly effective student counselor. A fellow faculty member has described his effect on students this way: "Dr. Duus is noted above all else for his extraordinary ability to stimulate and motivate his students to think."

This year's Distinguished Teacher Award is the second in a row to go to a faculty member in the School of Engineering. Last year the honor went to John H. Dittfach, professor of mechanical engineering.

D V P: Norman Thomas

Norman Thomas joined the Socialist Party during the First World War because he believed this organization to be the only one which realistically faced the problems of the war and the need for economic change. For many years he was a leading speaker in the struggle for workers' rights. During World War II, Mr. Thomas fought for a peace based on the cooperation of free peoples and rejection of both vengeance and imperialism. Since that time he has campaigned actively for such issues as world disarmament, with international control and inspection. Today Norman Thomas is chairman of the Post War World Council and co-chairman of Turn Toward Peace. Tonight at 8:30 in the Student Union Ballroom, he will be speaking on "The Issues Politicians Evade."

Stanford University Gets Wet By Five-Year Liquor Study

STANFORD, Calif. (CPS) — Stanford University students over 21 will be permitted to drink alcoholic beverages in campus residences and eating clubs. This President Wallace Sterling had announced last Spring.

Acting under authority of the Board of Trustees, Sterling said, "The university believes that the development of self-discipline, individual responsibility, and respect for law will be enhanced by entrusting to the students a greater responsibility .for .compliance .with state law and by the removal of complete prohibitions which are not enforceable in practice."

The ruling had long been expected since a committee appointed by President Sterling earlier this year recommended that students over 21 be allowed to drink on campus. In all, four liquor policy studies have been conducted at Stanford in the past six years.

In addition, a five-year study of student development at Stanford concluded that for more than three out of four students "drinking is well established . . . even at the time they enter Stanford . . . and is apparently sanctioned by their peers, their parents, and society."

"Abstainers do not feel that social pressures require them to drink," the study said, "except possibly in fraternities."

Prior to the new ruling, liquor was permitted only in married student housing and in the newly built Faculty Club.

The new rule includes these major points:

—Each Stanford student is individually and personally responsible for compliance with the applicable provisions of California exist "as a kind of laboratory for the purpose of testing the absolute outer limits of accuracy, fair play and good taste. . .they should exist as vital proving grounds for the later assumption of similar responsibilities in the professional life of the outside world. And the outside world does not condone license."

Academic Introspection

Turning to classroom affairs, Dr. Lederle promised that "the recruitment of outstanding faculty will continue to command top priority in the months ahead." He urged the faculty to seek new ways of recognizing outstanding UMass teachers and new ways in which students can contribute to the evaluation of teaching.

Every University school and college, Dr. Lederle continued, should examine and reexamine its curriculum along the lines of a recent College of Arts and Sciences study which is expected to recommend fewer required courses and more abundant elective courses. "When the existence of a course is justified strictly on tradition and habit, it is time for reappraisal," the UMass president cautioned.

The president also listed these specific concerns for the coming academic year:

- The University will move quickly to resubmit capital request items deleted from the 1966 Budget, including funds for planning the Fine Arts Teaching Center, Health Service Building, Life Science Building and Bartlett West.
- UMass will continue the search to locate a permanent site for UMass-Boston and will let contracts for construction of Bartlett East and Machmer Tower, two new classroom-office buildings at Amherst.
- The University will file an application for the assignment of educational TV Channel 57 to the University.
- A long-range master plan will be developed for the future growth of the University in Amherst, Worcester and Boston.

Dr. Lederle defined the University as a "tri-partite community of students, faculty and administration" and added that arguments over which part is the controlling one are futile. "The plain truth is that the modern university does not move ahead on exclusive determinations by any single segment of the tripartite whole. . .University governance today is an action process growing out of discourse among all its component parts for the good of the whole. And there the matter must rest."

XANADU CO-OP FEATURES HANDICRAFTS

The Xanadu Freedom Cooperative is opening a new store and art gallery in Amherst, at No. 2 In the Alley, with a gala public opening on Friday, September 23, from 5 to 9 p. m.

An exclusive exhibition of silkscreen and woodcut prints by Eric Walgren, W. E. Shumway, and Fred Aronow will be sponsored for a two-week period. The store will feature apparel and accessories hand-crafted in the Mississippi cooperatives of the Poor Peoples Corporation, including their popular suede tote bags and shoulder bags.

Creative arts from the freedom movement, including poetry and graphic art, will also be featured, along with documentary literature and current information on the civil rights struggle.

Ceramic ware from the Bennington Potters and hand-crafted silver jewelry will also be sold, with all profits from these sales being used to support the freedom movement throughout the country. Personalities from the civil rights movement will periodically be present for community forums and open-houses, and friends and browsers will always be welcome.

Smithies Adopt Sunday Parietals

On an experimental basis, students at Smith College may entertain men visitors in their rooms on Sunday afternoons during the college year—just beginning. The individual dormitories will decide whether they will adopt the new ruling, which may be effected in a house only if two-thirds of its residents vote "yes" on a written ballot. Each house is occupied by members of all four classes, and in this instance freshmen have no vote.

The new ruling regarding men-in-rooms is one of several extensions in social privileges at Smith resulting from administrative consideration of student recommendations. Last spring a group of students submitted their petition to Judicial Board, a branch of the student government. "J.B." referred it to Administrative Board whose members include the dean of the college, the dean of students, the class deans, the assistant dean, the registrar, the college physician and three faculty members.

Administrative Board has granted the privilege of men-in-rooms with the proviso that the policy be reviewed at the end of the academic year. Sunday afternoon (1:30 to 5 p.m.) was selected because during that period there is relatively little planned activity on and off campus and a large proportion of the students use the library. Thus, inconvenience to students without dates would be minimized.

Other privileges effective this fall, by action of Administrative Board, are as follows: (1) all students, including first-semester freshmen, have unlimited special late permissions to midnight Monday through Thursday; (2) overnights for second-semester freshmen are unlimited, as they are for upperclassmen; (3) special late permissions are extended on weekends — Friday and Saturday until 2 a.m. and Sunday until 1 a.m.

Learn to Study

A new course in learning to speed-read and study effectively will be offered by the Education Department this semester.

The five-week no-credit course will use new equipment and individual work to analyze the student's problems.

The course will meet two nights a week, Monday and Tuesday, with times to be arranged by the student.

Registration will be Monday Sept. 26 and Tuesday Sept. 27 from nine to 12 a.m. and from one to three p.m. in the School of Education building lobby.

law. (It is illegal under state law for any person to sell, furnish, or give any alcoholic beverages to a person under 21.)

—In order to provide maximum opportunity for effective self-regulation which will protect "the interests of all members of the Stanford community," each residence hall will adopt regulations governing the use of alcoholic beverages and be responsible for their enforcement.

—Alcoholic beverages may not be used by students on the campus except within the interior of campus residences and eating clubs.

—Alcoholic beverages may not be served at social functions in residences occupied predominantly by freshmen.

—Alcoholic beverages will not be sold on the campus.

—Violators of the regulations will be subject to discipline through regular procedures.

A state law that passed in 1876 compelled a mile-and-a-half dry zone around the University of California campus at Berkeley and elsewhere. That limit has been slowly giving way and 10 years ago, the legislature amended it to permit the sale of alcoholic beverages inside the zone in bona fide eating places.

Another amendment earlier this year gave the University of California permission to sell beer and wine in the faculty club at Berkeley.

Although as a private university Stanford was never covered by the law, the new rules there are viewed as a sign that the law may go altogether in the next few years.

For Stanford it was the second time this year that campus social regulations have been relaxed.

The Building Bungle

By DEE SMITH, Day Editor

I can remember when the solemn someone faces and the lingering footsteps stopped. When the jerry words and plate glass smiles ceased to crackle like last gasp leaves beneath my feet. I can remember when waves were that and how I met this campus.

Hiding, alone or in a crowd it's hard to find oneself. It's hard to feel at ease and to belong. The way to walk on wordless stones and laugh instead of leak is just to join. Just join, that's it.

How can you get to feel at home if home is never where you're headed? And how can you help you find yourself if you don't know who you're looking for?

You're here to learn, that's true, and learning is more than books. It's feeling at ease and meeting people, laughing, sharing, this is learning too.

Join a group, a club, a sport, whatever interests you, but join because it's a way to grow. Join, not because you need a ten foot teddy bear, like Linus with an electric blanket, but join because now is also the time to prepare for. The future will come in course.

What is the point in learning for later without learning for later to learn for now?

Life is a jowlish joke at best, where learning is mostly by mistake. It's the building bungle, it's why you're in college and it's why you should join.

The Cafe Concept

by PAUL ROBERT HALLOCK

I have it from a friend who just returned from the Sorbonne that the ideas behind the European university, as many Europeans see them, are changing rapidly, becoming more "Americanized," a somewhat nasty concept to Europeans.

University learning in Europe used to be conducted much on the "sidewalk cafe" principle, either literally or on a seminar level.

In France, a large measure of university education and a conspicuous amount of creative writing both take place in cafes or seminars. It is in this type of unhurried, informal atmosphere (true also of the Mac Dowell Colony, in Peterborough, N. H., where Thornton Wilder wrote The Bridge of San Luis Rey and Our Town and Bernstein composed his Kaddish) that artists, writers, and other scholars are able to accomplish what often are their better works.

Jean-Paul Sartre and Simone de Beauvoir have spent hours on end thinking, talking, and writing in Paris's cafes, and Schubert is noted to have done much of his work in German inns.

American universities are growing each year: And with the much publicized shortage of university professors, seminars—practically speaking—are not always in the best of taste.

But it seems, once students begin concentration in majors and classes become smaller, seminars are very much in order.

The University of Massachusetts is not lacking seminar groups. A large percentage of History, Government, and Advanced English courses hold a seminar each week. One English course, in fact, has elected to operate a three-hour seminar per week, at night, instead of three 50-minute classes. The limited periods were not thought practical by the participants. Honors courses are frequently seminars.

The growth of the American university need not preclude individuality, fresh thinking and open participation in learning, nor presuppose, or suppose at all, an impersonal attitude, nor evolve further than it has into an institution colloquially called an "education factory." There should be no such entity in the American educational system, no matter how big the university.

Nathan M. Pusey, in The Age of the Scholar, says it more eloquently:

> Individuality and variety and free investigation—not conformity—are of the very essence of democratic life and of democratic education.

More seminars and "sidewalk cafe" ventures would insure his perceptive, but not invisible, concept.

Letters to the Editor

A Hungry Howl

Dear President Lederle,

I feel that it would be in the best interests of all the members of the Southwest Dormitory Complex, (which shall hereafter be referred to as the Complex) if a few points were brought to your attention.

It is my understanding that there are some two thousand, eight hundred residents of the Presidential Towers and I estimate that there are about six to seven hundred more housed in the low rise dorms of the Complex. Apparently less people eat breakfast that eat lunch or dinner at the South West Commons. If I am interpreting this correctly, this means that the number of people who hold weekend meal tickets must be less than half the number of people who hold regular meal tickets and eat breakfast at the Complex Commons. If this were not the case you could as easily afford to open one of the two dining Commons on the weekend as you could afford to open both for breakfast. I doubt that this is the case.

What I would ask of the school is that they have at least one line of one of the Complex dining Commons open on the weekends. I think that it is evident that while being more inconvenient for the school and more convenient for the students, this will, in all probability, also be academically beneficial. Academic achievement is, after all, the chief purpose of the university.

Thank you,
William B. Seiniger, '70

Editor's Note:

Dean Field has announced that effective immediately, there will be a dining commons open in the Southwest Complex on weekends.

. . . But with a ROAR

An Open Letter to Dee Smith, Day Editor
Re: Article "Face It," Collegian, Friday, September 16, 1966

I write to you not in the spirit of a whimper, but in a roar of anger. Your prejudiced piece of trash which appeared in Friday's Collegian made me wretch! Your talents should be spent as a night editor, rather than a day editor. Darkness and obscurity become your bigotted mind far more than the light of day.

It is true that as a socio-ethnic group, we Jews may be represented as a small bar on a large graph representing America. But it is not true that we must not expect consideration and only be thankful when someone or some group shows us a scrap of the same. Though we only constitute approximately 3% of the population of this country, the basic tenets of this democracy do guarantee "consideration" for its minorities. We not only expect to be considered, we demand consideration equal to that given any other citizen. What hew and cry would be raised if Winter Recess began on December 26 and classes were held on the 25th.

You say we are but a "little smudge" but you didn't have to mention your unspoken desire for an eraser. It was implicit in your diatribe. Sorry we all don't live in a segregated ghetto in front of which you could have burned your cross. But keep trying. You may not be right but you are loud.

The shame of this is that you are supposed to represent a relatively educated person, characterized by an open and tolerant mind. What a waste has been the time you have spent in this academic community. You came here as an ignorant bigot and, if this article is any indication, you will leave in exactly the same condition — diseased.

Dee Smith — you make me ill!
Mrs. Arlynn Gurwitz, '69

Bigot

Mr. Smith:

To accuse you of anti-semitism would be far too mild. Had it not been for the uncensored nature of the Collegian your un-American editorial could never have been published. Did it ever occur to you that Americans in relation to world population are hardly more prominent than that "little smudge" that you mentioned? Are you so anxious to feel upon your back the disrespect you have shown the Jewish people?

The history of our people is that of a fight for the rights of minority groups. It is a history of which Americans are proud. I, a member of the majority of true Americans, say to you, a member of the minority of bigots, we are "a nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

University Chorale and Chorus are beginning a new and exciting season. Plans include concerts, tours, and a Madrigal Group.

Chorale Begins Exciting Season

The Chorale and Chorus are beginning a new season with their directors, Dr. Richard du Bois and Mr. Russell Falvy, both of the Music Department.

The Chorale is presently an a cappella choir of 50 members directed by Dr. Richard du Bois. Plans for this season include two on-campus concerts, several off-campus engagements and an extended tour through Massachusetts during Spring vacation.

The Chorus, directed by Mr. Russell Falvy, has presently 110 voices. Their plans include the performance of an oratorio on campus and the formation of a small women's choir.

Also planned is the formation of a Madrigal Group to study and perform madrigals. The present small group formerly called the Madrigal Singers is going to broaden its horizons and perform works of all periods as the Chamber Singers.

Membership in the University Chorale and the Chamber Singers is by audition only and the positions are almost filled. The Chorus is open to people who prefer to sing in a larger group. The Chorale rehearses six hours a week: the Chorus, three.

Anyone interested in learning more about the opportunities for singing in groups under the auspices of the Music Department should see Dr. Richard du Bois, 3B Mobile Units, extension 2657.

Studies Probe Suicide

It is no longer a secret that colleges have problems with drugs, sex, and thievery. The word is now also getting out that students, many students, have serious emotional problems, and that some of them end in suicide.

Suicide is the second greatest cause of death among American male college students. A survey of 209 deaths occurring at Yale University between 1920 and 1955 showed that 92 students had died in accidents and 25 had committed suicide.

The belief that only introverts are suicide-prone was dispelled at Yale—10 of the 25 held student offices, six were athletes, and 10 belonged to fraternities.

A more recent study, "Suicide Tendencies Among College Students," was conducted at Cornell University by Drs. Leif J. Braaten and C. Douglas Darling. The two men studied 134 students from the general student patient population at Cornell.

They found that 81 of these 134 students had at least occasional thoughts of suicide; 23 of these had frequent thoughts and another 16 actually attempted suicide. Other findings of the study were:

—There seemed to be a definite trend toward more suicide tendencies among undergraduate students than among students at the graduate level.

—No general relationship was established between suicide tendencies and sex, nor between suicide and marital status.

—Suicide tendencies were more often found among the better students.

—Most of the students who attempted suicide did so twice. Only three of the 16 left suicide notes. The methods of attempts, in order of frequency, were: poisonous drugs, motor agitation, jumping off a cliff, shooting, cutting, choking, and car "accident."

Why suicide? "Things are tough all over" is the traditional observation of the cynic, so why does emotional crisis center on the University?

Maybe it doesn't center there at all. Emotional difficulty, and even suicide, is usually a pretty personal thing, and accurate information about its prevalence among different social groups may never be available. In the meantime, a disproportionate amount of the attention will be focused on the classroom fishbowl, the researcher's habitat.

The Cornell study named these as the main reasons for suicide common among students.

1. A desire to destroy themselves because they can no longer tolerate the discrepancy between how they appear to themselves and how they would like to be.
2. A need to punish others who hurt them.
3. An urge to repent from some sin.
4. A cry for help—"Please rescue me. Don't leave me alone."

International Club:

It Was a Very Good Year . . .

by M. AARIF GHAYYUR

Last year was the most important year for growth and expansion since the UMass International Club began in 1959. It enjoyed many new programs and activities and tripled its membership.

Some of the programs included a "Land and People" series, a food fiesta, picnic, a variety show, and a trip to Boston. The Club also began publication of a monthly newsletter and a round-table discussion group.

The club worked in coordination with the International Clubs of Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst, Springfield, and Westfield Colleges.

Alladin Hashim, Club President, hopes that progress will continue this year at the same rate.

"I feel," he stressed, "that the Club offers students of this University — both American and foreign — a vast opportunity to widen their international horizons and their own understanding of places and people other than their own."

The first International Club Coffee Hour will be held next Wednesday, September 2, in the Governor's Lounge, S.U. at 5:30 p.m.

Jump Training Offered

The University of Massachusetts Sport Parachuting Club will hold a meeting this Thursday evening (September 22) at 8:30 in Plymouth Room at the Student Union. This year students will be able to make a first jump for seven dollars.

This includes training in aircraft exiting procedure, stable fall, body position, emergency procedure, canopy handling, and landing. Subsequent jumps can be made for as little as two dollars a jump depending upon length of free fall.

Accuracy competitions with other colleges will be arranged during the year. The club's competitive ability will be strengthened this year with the aquisition of new equipment.

All jumping will be done at Turners Falls Airport. For further information call 546-9984.

Competition for Fulbright Scholarships Nearing Close

The competition for the Fulbright-Hays scholarship program, which awards grants for foreign study or training in the creative or performing arts to qualified graduates, will close shortly.

Application forms and information about this year's competition for students currently enrolled in the University of Massachusettts may be obtained from the campus Fulbright Program Adviser, Prof. Louis Greenbaum, History Department, Arnold House 114. The deadline for filing applications through the Fulbright Program Adviser on this campus is October 21.

Last year, UMass boasted four winners, each for study abroad. Robert Bozeman, a graduate in Geology, went to Sidney, Australia to further his studies.

Elaine Corsi, an undergraduate studying Spanish literature, won a grant to study the current literary atmosphere of Costa Rica.

Rita Kason, a Botany student, went to the University of Otago in New Zealand on her Fulbright, while Patricia Ward turned down a grant to accept a teaching award job at the University of Freiburg.

The success of UMass in the competition last year was something new, as it was the first time the university has had more than one representative in the program. This year, Prof. Greenbaum hopes even more students will take advantage of this opportunity for combining travel, experience and study — all expenses paid.

IIE conducts competitions for U.S. Government scholarships, for students below the Ph.D. level, provided by the Fulbright-Hays Act as part of the educational and cultural exchange program of the Department of State.

Applications Available for Qualified Students

Candidates who wish to apply for an award must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, have a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, be proficient in the language of the host country.

Selections will be made on the basis of academic and/or professional record, the feasibility of the applicant's proposed study plan and personal qualifications. Preference is given to candidates who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad and who are under the age of 35.

Creative and performing artists are not required to have a bachelor's degree but they must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience. Applicants in social work must have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree. Applicants in the field of medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Two types of grants are available through IIE under the Fulbright-Hays Act: U.S. Government Full Grants, and U.S. Government Travel Grants.

A full award provides a grantee with tuition, maintenance, round-trip transportation, health and accident insurance and an incidental allowance. In Australia, Ceylon, India, Japan, Nepal, Norway, Poland, Portugal, the Republic of China, and Turkey, a maintenance allowance will be provided for one or more accompanying dependents.

A limited number of travel grants is available to supplement maintenance and tuition scholarships granted to American students by universities, private donors and foreign governments.

Countries participating in the full grant program are: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium-Luxembourg, Bolivia, Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, China (Republic of), Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany (Federal Republic of), Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Mexico Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, Trinidad, Turkey, United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia.

Travel grants are available to France, Germany, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, and Turkey.

Because of the growing interest in inter-American studies, there are grants available to a number of countries in the American Republics Area in the fields of history, the social sciences, law, the humanities and other suitable fields.

All applicants for these grants must be proficient in the spoken language of the country for which they apply and should have knowledge of the American Republics Area, specifically in the country or countries for which they are applying.

There are also opportunities for teaching assistantships in India and Italy for students interested in teaching English as a foreign language teaching fellowships at universities in Italy for the teaching of the English language and English or American literature; teaching fellowships at universities in Sweden for the teaching of American literature and/or civilization; and a teaching fellowship in the Philippines for the teaching of linguistics or English as a second language.

N. L. Race Sizzles; A. L. Race Fizzles

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

There is an old baseball chestnut which says that pitching is the name of the game.

On July 14 the San Francisco Giants led the Pittsburgh Pirates by a game and the Los Angeles Dodgers by five. The Giants are currently in third place, four games off the pace.

Since the All-Star game the Giants have lost 33 games and won 31. The Dodgers, on the other hand, have won 41, lost 25 and, in a thrust, have positioned themselves atop the loop.

Central to the surge has been the consistent effectiveness of the Dodgers' pill chuckers, most celebrated of whom is Sandy Koufax, a 24 game winner.

Regan Surprise Star

Mound magician Walter Alston has solicited surprisingly substantial aid from an American League castaff, Phil Regan. The righthanded reliever has compiled a phenomenal 13-1 won-lost record while posting an ERA close to 2.00.

Most recent of the Dodger heroes is Don Drysdale, for several years one of the premiere pitchers in the game, who, for monetary reasons chose to sit out spring training and not report until the season was underway. As a result, Drysdale bas been spotty in his effectiveness; often terrible; sometimes clutch.

Clutch he was Monday night. The Philadelphia Phils, trailing the Dodgers by eight games, had stormed into Los Angeles to take the first game of the crucial series. This moved them to within seven of the top and cut the Dodgers' margin over the Pirates and Giants to one and three-and-a-half games respectively. The next night Drysdale twirled five-hit, one-run ball to boost the Artful Dodgers an additional half-game up on the contenders.

The National League race should provide much drama in the final two weeks of the season. The Dodgers face the tough Phils five times, while the Pirates and Giants meet on six occasions. The winner may well be determined on the last day of the season.

All Dull

In the not-so-interesting American League, Baltimore's bedraggled birds hauled themselves back into a nine game lead with an 11-9 victory over the Los Angeles Angels. The magic numbes for Baltimore is now four.

Oriole Frank Robinson is a definite candidate for Most Valuable Player in his first year as an American Leaguer. The slugging fly-chaser could also win the coveted triple crown. Robinson leads in home-runs and runs-batted-in, and is tied with Tony Oliva at .311 in the batting average race.

Elsewhere, a newly potent Kansas City team has stormed into seventh place by virtue of outstanding contributions by Campy Campaneris and a pitching staff of Jim Odom, Lew Krausse, Jim Nash and Jack Aker. Rookie Nash is 11-1 since joining the A's in July.

The Boston Red Sox have launched an effort to climb in the standings. Pete Runnels' boys are currently in eighth place. Tony Conigliaro showed signs this year of becoming a Fenway slugger in the Foxx-York tradition.

The New York Yankees, class of the league for over a decade, are mired in the cellar, having lost more games than any other bearer of the pinstripes since 1913. CBS has completely bought out the Yanks from longtime owner Dan Topping.

"End is catastrophic"

Norman Thomas Scores Vietnam War

by PAM METAXAS
Staff Reporter

Norman Thomas, distinguished politician, warned that the "end is catastrophic" if the U.S. does not change some of its major policies. He was speaking in the SU Ballroom Wednesday night pertaining to the issues that politicians evade.

He strongly believes that the U.S. must "get out of the rutted road that will lead to World War III." He stated that there have been moments of retrogression in the U.S. such as the defeat of the recent Civil Rights Bill in Congress and the unfortunate meaning of the Black Power movement. He emphasized that the movement now lacked the force of a few years ago. "One of the things I shall remember till my dying day is the spirit in the March on Washington."

There is so much left to be done in the Civil Rights Movement that "cannot be done only by law," he said. "We must have the assertion of the masses in order to solve the problems of the negroes," he added, because the entire situation is "part of our white hyporiscy."

Explaining this later on, he made note of the fact that the Declaration of Independence was a "hypocritical doctrine" in that the same men who signed the Bill that supposedly created all men equal either owned slaves themselves or supported slavery.

He implored the "college audience" not "to be victims of white regression . . . if America o live up to its destiny."

In a further discussion of the war on poverty he mentioned that politicians have failed to consider a type of 10-30 year war against slums instead of short-term projects.

War and peace, remarked Thomas is the greatest immediate problem of our time. The present U.S. policy in the "undeclared war in Vietnam" will lead to disaster since it is "impossible to imagine existence of peaceful world" where the knowledge of bombs and warfare is spreading so rapidly, according to Thomas.

He believes the U.S. notion that we are fighting this war to stop Communism "incredibly dangerous." "You have got to find other ways than the ways we are trying now."

He asserted that Vietnam is a Civil War and one of "very great cruelty" because of the guerilla warfare.

He left the rest up to the President. He felt it was the President's duty to negotiate "unconditionally" with the enemy, to discontinue the bombings, to stand ready to negotiate and to declare firmly our intention to get out of Vietnam.

"Something has got to be done. I urge that we stop this horrible bombardment. Progress makes it necessary for the U.S. to get out of Vietnam now, concluded Thomas.

Dartmouth Tomorrow

'Somebody Has to Knock Them Off'

by GLENN BRIERE
Sports Day Editor

What can be said about a football team that is the defending Lambert Trophy winner, Ivy League champion and the owner of the nation's longest winning streak among major colleges? "Well, somebody has to knock them off," said UMass coach Vic Fusia, "and it might as well be us."

That team is Dartmouth College, winner of ten straight and the Redmen's opponent tomorrow at Hanover, N. H. The Indians are once again up to their necks in talent, with 23 returnees from last year's unbeaten squad. Heading coach Bob Blackman's cast of characters is a backfield which is second to none in the East. The offensive line is intact, and aside from a few open spots the defense is strong.

Injuries continue to play havoc with an already thinned-out U-Mass team. The latest victim is linebacker Bob Gogick, who will be sidelined for the bulk of the season. To plug the hole, Fusia was forced to perform another juggling act. Offensive guard Ernie Smith has been moved to linebacker, right guard Don Glogowski has shifted to left guard, defensive guard Mickey Bailey has jumped to left offensive guard, and junior Kent Stevens and sophomore Roger Prefontaine will fill the defensive spot vacated by Bailey.

Fusia, nonetheless, refuses to be fazed by either the Big Green's offensive machines or the excessive number of Redmen injuries. "We're in a beautiful position," he said, referring to UMass' chance to gain some attention. "Sure, we're not as strong as we'd like to be, but the group is working hard and they realize the task before them." That task, said Fusia, will require more than 100% effort.

The game will put New England's two longest winning streaks on the line. Dartmouth, of course, has won ten for a national high. UMass, with last week's squeaker over Maine, has stretched its streak to seven. The game is the 18th renewal of a series which began back in 1902, with the Big Green leading 16-0-1. The teams last met in 1962, with Dartmouth winning 27-3 on a second half surge.

COACH VIC FUSIA

When you talk about backfields in these parts, the name that imediately comes to mind is Dartmouth. Quarterback Mickey Beard of Newton is a double-threat who has run and passed for 24 touchdowns in two seasons. Explosive Gene Ryzewicz, a native of Springfield, is a broken field artist who is especially deadly on kickoff and punt returns. Gene, the left halfback, jammed his finger in practice last week but will be ready tomorrow.

The right halfback in the Indians' fleet-footed backfield is Paul Klungness, an underrated senior who gained 256 yards on runs and 231 yards on passes at wingback. Rounding out the backfield is rugged fullback Pete Walton, who at 226 pounds was All-New England last year.

Dartmouth's offensive line is

by JACK DEAN
Editorial Day Editor

Plans for four major sophomore class activities have been launched.

Approximately 300 members yesterday at Bowker Auditorium heard President Wayne Thomas outline these major activities:

—Campus Chest Drive, April 9-15
—Soph-Frosh Picnic, Oct. 8
—Class Concert, March 18
—Class Banquet, Feb. or April

In other business, the class learned that its 1966-67 dues were increased by one dollar, and that Executive Council functions will be changed considerably this year.

Thomas, announcing plans for the major class project, stated that it is "an event of such magnitude and variety that no other class has ever attempted it." This event will be Campus Chest Week, April 9-15—a fund-raising drive for charity.

"This event," stressed Thomas, "will provide a chance for every one of you who wishes to participate in having fun while working for something worthwhile." The goal is $6900.

A Cole Porter production of "The Rise and Fall" will start the Campus Chest week, with various other activities to follow. Among those suggested were: an "Ugly Man" contest between fraternities and dorms; another Las Vegas night; an entertaining group such as the Harlem Globetrotters or the King and His Court; and, to end the week, either a dance or a carnival.

It was also announced that plans are complete for the traditional Soph-Frosh picnic, after the UConn game October 8, on the south terrace of the Student Union. The event will feature two groups: Teddy and the Pandas, popular recording artists, and the Boss Tweeds, a campus group fresh from a successful summer in Provincetown. The UMass Marching Band will parade from the stadium to the Union after the game to promote interest in the picnic. Both

Flamenco Guitarist to Appear at First Concert Association Program

Flamenco guitorist Carlos Montoya will open the concert season at the University of Massachusetts with an appearance Tuesday, Sept. 27, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

THE ACKNOWLEDGED living symbol of flamenco music the world over, Montoya will present a recital of the traditional Gypsy music, freely improvising with his own arrangements and compositions, in a program sponsored by the UMass Concert Association.

Born in Madrid, the son of Spanish Gypsies, Carlos received his first musical training from his mother and from a Madrid barber. He became a musical prodigy at the age of 14 when he began playing for top artists in Spanish cafes during the heyday of flamenco singing and dancing..

HE LEFT SPAIN for the first time on a 3-year world tour playing for the late Antonia Merce—La Argentina—thus launching his international reputation as a guitar accompanist for some of the world's best flamenco dancers and singers.

In 1945 he took an unprecedented step—a full concert recital of flamenco guitar music without a singer or dancer. Since then, his solo performances have played to packed audiences both in Europe and throughout the United States and Canada.

One of the reasons for his success as a solo performer has been his ability for improvisation; Montoya creates as he goes along. All of his music, though, is based on the Spanish Gypsy traditions of his ancestors. "Flamenco" is a vigorous rhythmic dance style of the Andalusian Gypsies. Although he never plays an arrangement of his without adding something new, some of his performances have been recorded in an attempt to capture his rich flamenco art for a permanent record.

MONTOYA PREFERS to give his solos their traditional generic names—Alegrias, Farrucas, Tarantas or Peteneras—which describe dance rhythms or songs, rather than create what he calls "a fancy title" for each selection. There are many such melodies derived from

Campus Police Warn Students Of Car Situation

A student may park a vehicle registered in his name or under his control in a parking area, stall or space which is authorized by valid insignia appropriately affixed to the vehicle, or by proper display of valid temporary authorization issued by the University Police.

Use of other parking facilities, except during hours designated by the University Police, constitutes illegal parking.

Illegally parked student cars will be towed starting Monday, Sept. 6.

ACTIVITIES NIGHT COMING

LOOKING FOR SOMETHING TO DO? Well then, join the REVELERS this Monday night, Sept. 26, at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom for ACTIVITIES NIGHT—1966. Dozens of campus organizations will be on hand to meet and greet you and especially to acquaint the Freshmen to this year's program. Complete the college experience and channel your energy into worthwhile student activities!

LSD RALLY HELD TO MARK FOUNDING OF A NEW FAITH

"In other times I might have gone barefoot with a begging bowl to spread the 'Good News' or given a sermon from a mountain top but each new religion must use the media of its time."

The prophet of the new religion spoke in a voice vibrating with excitement.

"I want to 'turn on' the whole world," declared Dr. Timothy F. Leary, scientist-turned-spiritual leader.

Wearing loafers, khaki trousers and a white tunic, Leary announced Wednesday at a news conference the founding of the League for Spiritual Discovery, a new religion in which LSD and other drugs would be used.

Leary, who was dropped in 1963 from Harvard University's faculty in a furor over experiments with LSD and other hallucinatory drugs, is appealing a federal sentence of 30 years imprisonment and $30,000 fine for possession of marijuana in Texas and is also under indictment in Westchester County on a charge of possessing LSD and marijuana at his home in Milbrook, N. Y.

Seeks Court Ruling

Within two weeks, Leary said, his lawyers will ask the New York Supreme Court for a declaratory judgment, ruling LSD sessions legal for people who "use the drug at specified times, in designated shrines."

Leary said the new religion's first "psychedelic celebration" would be held Thursday night in the Village Theater at Second Ave. and Sixth St.

The service included a sermon-lecture by Leary and a "trip" produced not by drugs but by colored patterns and lights flashed on screens by more than 20 projectors.

But if the courts agree, Leary said the members of his religion would conduct LSD and marijuana meditations at "chapels" in their own homes.

While he has taken LSD more than 300 times in the past six years, Leary said, he has suspended its use pending his legal actions.

"I want to come to a gentle and harmonious agreement with society," he said.

The object of his proposed religion, Leary said, is the same as that of other religions.

"We seek to find the divinity within and to express this revelation in a life of glorification and worship of God," Leary said.

"Every historical era develops its own form of worship. An agricultural society develops a pastoral religion. We are now involved in the molecular-chemical era. Our material life is completely dependent upon the use of chemicals. It is inevitable that chemicals will be used to develop man's neurological and spiritual potentials."

His new religion will not attempt to convert people from other religions, he stated, but make them better Catholics, Protestants, Jews or whatever.

Calling LSD an "eerie and powerful drug," Leary said it was to religion what the microscope was to science 400 years ago.

"The difference between science and religion makes no sense to my nervous system. Since the first time I took the sacred mushrooms of Mexico I vowed that I would devote my life to the exploration of these chemicals," he added.

Leary said the first services at the Village Theater would examine rationalism as the most common contemporary religion.

"We will teach the modern rationalist to get out of his mind and find the ancient, sacred being within," he said.

Newman Club to Sponsor Retreat with Conferences

The Newman Club will sponsor a retreat open to people of all faiths, from Sunday evening, Sept. 25 through Wednesday evening Sept. 28. The retreat will begin at the 7 o'clock evening Mass during which Father Benedict, a well known and erudite man of the Passionist Fathers in West Springfield, will give a very brief talk.

Father Benedict attended Boston College Jesuit School and did post-graduate work at Notre Dame. In 1935, he entered the Passionist order and was ordained in 1945. Father Benedict has been giving advice and counsel retreats along the Eastern coast of the country since 1945.

The retreat will consist of a series of conferences given by Father Benedict starting Monday evening from 7:00-7:30 p.m. and will continue each evening at the same time through Wednesday September 28. From Monday through Wednesday after each of the three daily masses at 6:50, 12:15, and 5:00 p.m., Father Benedict will give a very worthwhile five minute talk to help college students face their problems.

Father Benedict will be concerned with helping the college student adjust to living in and among students of all sexes, religions, and countries.

The Newman Club is extending an invitation to all who wish to have a very successful year both academically and socially.

Flying Redmen Seek Members

The University of Massachusetts Flying Redmen Drill Team has begun preparations for a new season of exhibitions, parades, and drill competitions. Sponsored by the Department of Air Science, the drill team is commanded by Cadet Lt. Col. James Stewart.

In the past year, the Flying Redmen have appeared in parades in Springfield, Greenfield, and Amherst, as well as in exhibitions during Homecoming, Winter Carnival, and at Westover Air Force Base. Highlights of the season were trips to New York City and Washington, D.C. to participate in drill competitions.

As a result of a new constitution, the drill team is now open to all students of the University. (Unfortunately, girls have not, as yet, been worked into the drill routine.) All interested persons are asked to attend a meeting, Monday evening at 7:00, upstairs in Dickinson Hall. Information may be obtained by calling Cadet Ned Swartz at 546-9207 in 2005 T-6.

Successful Start For Valley Center

by STEPHEN SMITH

More than 30 area college students attended the organizational meeting of the Valley Center held last night at Phi Psi fraternity at Amherst College.

Registration cards, specifying students' areas of interest were completed after an enthusiastic discussion of possible topics. Definite plans were made to lease a house in Northampton for the Center's use.

The Center, described in a front page article in Wednesday's Collegian, will begin operation next week in temporary quarters at 56 College Street, Amherst.

Commenting on the large representation from the University, coordinator Tony Sager said," the Center will fill a need felt by many University students for imaginative courses, a stimulating environment, and a sense of community."

Areas of interest included such diverse topics as film making, pottery, halucigenic drugs, existential psychoanalysis, alienation in modern society, and corruption in politics and government.

Any University student interested in learning more about the center, or joining one of its discussion groups, should call 253-9675 and leave his name and address. He will be sent a list of discussion groups and their meeting times. Attendance at the initial meeting was not necessary. All interested students are invited to join the Center.

Keys and Scrolls have promised full support.

March 18 was announced as the date set for the Class of '69 concert. Said Thomas, "We are presently wide open for suggestions; for it's not my concert, but yours."

The theme for the Sophomore banquet, either Feb. 14 or April 5, is also open to suggestions.

Treasurer Judy Leach reported class funds at $3,964. She noted that last year's class tax of one dollar per semester has been raised to two dollars first semester and one dollar second semester, resulting in the collection of about $7,800 compared with approximately $5,400 a year ago.

Applications for the sophomore executive council are available in the RSO office and must be returned by next Thursday.

Thomas stressed that this year's council will differ considerably from those in the past. Project committees will be chaired by council members, with the committee members coming from the body of the class.

He also announced a proposed amendment to the Senate constitution, Art. III, Sec. III, Par. A, which reads as follows:

For each class executive council all dormitories shall have at least one chosen representative, provided an application is submitted. Those members of said class in residence at Fraternities, Sororities, or other forms of non-campus housing shall be represented on the council by a number at least comparable to their proportion of said class. The remainder of the executive council shall be chosen at large. (Act Thomas, Wood, Garjian) the traditional flamenco themes, usually consisting of one short verse. The essence of Montoya's unique art is that he can take these short melodic schemes and improvise upon them to create wholly new self-contained musical entities.

Adding to the impressive quality of his art is the fact that Carlos Montoya can't read a note of music. Harold Schoenberg once said, however, that "He does something much more important; he makes music."

If not sold out, tickets for the single performance will be available at the door. Tickets may also be obtained from the Ticket Office, Student Union, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Film Study Series Presents "Birth of a Nation"

The University Theatre Film Study Series will begin its third season on Sept. 27th with the showing of D. W. Griffith's Birth of a Nation—the screen epic of the Civil War, the period of reconstruction, and the rise of the Ku Klux Klan.

The film stands as a landmark in film history, both for its revolutions in film construction and for the social turmoil created by its release. It established Griffith as the "father of film technique", and served as a model for filmmakers for many years.

The series will continue on October 11 with Fritz Lang's futuristic fantasy — Metropolis. Other programs will include Alfred Hitchcock's 39 Steps, Robert Flaherty's Nanook of the North, Vittorio De Sica's Bocycle Thief, Charlie Chaplin's Gold Rush, and Rene Sica's Italian Straw Hat.

The twelve program series will conclude on May 9 with the showing of Ingmar Bergman's Sawdust and Tinsel.

The Film Study Series is designed to bring to the academic community examples of both early screen classics and contemporary feature, experimental, and documentary forms. Richard Stromgren of the Speech Department is the program director.

All showings will be in Bartlett Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. Subscription tickets for the series will be available at the door but tickets will not be sold for individual films.

SDS Convention Rejects Statement of Ideology

Students for a Democratic Society rejected pressures to formulate a statement of purposes and goals at their National Convention Aug. 27-Sept. 1, admitting in the process that they still lacked a coherent radical ideology.

The only way such a statement might emerge, the Clear Lake, Iowa, meeting concluded, is through the further internal education of the membership.

SDS has been heavily criticized as a group of emotional anti-intellectuals by members of the more established left, and some SDS'ers were plainly disappointed by the convention's apparent inability to produce clear-headed social analysis. Others, however, reiterating the pitfalls of a rigid ideology, viewed the outcome as a positive repudiation of attempts to make SDS a new version of older left-wing political parties.

Emerging most clearly from the convention was the picture of SDS as a "community of organizers." Newly selected Vice President Carl Davidson said there are about 50 members who have given up the 2S student deferments to do travelling and organizing on campuses across the country.

Committing itself to coordinate the "organizing" of non-campus, middle-class constituencies, SDS took another step in its drive to "radicalize the people." The most concrete part of the resolution called for a national conference of these newly-organized groups "within the next 18 months" to coordinate aims and projects.

SDS also does community organizing among the Northern urban poor through its loosely affiliated Economic Research and Action Project (ERAP), which now has community unions in Chicago, Baltimore, Newark, Cleveland, and Boston.

Following the convention the SDS National Council issued a statement opposing the draft because of its "inherenty undemocratic nature" and because it aids the war in Viet Nam. The statement also places SDS against all university "cooperation with the war machine," including the class ranking of students and the conducting of war research, according to SDS member Earl Silbar.

The Congress itself resolved very little about the draft beyond saying that a coordination program should be undertaken which would still allow each local unit to act autonomously.

"To let a friendship die away by negligence and silence, is certainly not wise. It is voluntarily to throw away one of the greatest comforts of this weary pilgrimage."

Math Professor To Lecture On K-Theory

Professor Pierre E. Conner from the University of Virginia, will present a series of three lectures on "Bordism and K-Theory." The lectures are scheduled for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Sept. 28-30, at 7:30 p.m. in the Engineering Building, room 120.

Professor Conner is one of the leading workers in the field of Transformation Groups. He received his Ph.D. degree from Princeton University. He was at the University of Michigan and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is currently Full Professor at the University of Virginia.

His lecture is abstracted from his work which will be published in the Springer Series with co-author Professor E. E. Floyd.

Reminder on Reserved, Vanity Plates; Reduced Fee for Certain Vehicles

In an effort to assist motor vehicle owners to retain their distinctive initial or particular number plates, Registrar of Motor Vehicles Richard E. McLaughlin today issued the following reminder:

Holders of distinctive initial plates (Vanity Plates) are required to file applications before the end of September for reassignment of the same plates in 1967—the additional fee of $9 should be added to the regular registration fee.

Holders of reserved plates with four digits or less must file applications before the end of September to retain their numbers—the additional fee of $2 should be added to the regular registration fee.

Holders of reserved plates with five digits must file applications on or before October 14 with the Boston Office with the additional fee of $2.

Unreserved applications may be sent in by mail to the Boston Office after October 3 with the regular fee.

"Applicants are urged to avail themselves of the courtesy service offered by the Registry in mailing plates free of charge" the Registrar said. "We are assigning additional personnel to process the reserved and distinctive initial plates but the cooperation of persons holding such plates is required if we are to have the 1967 plates out on time. Please make a note of the date which applies to you and get your application in before the deadline."

Legislation which becomes effective on December 8 reduces the fee for the registration of gasoline driven automobiles used for the transportation of goods, wares, or merchandise to $5 per thousand pounds or fraction thereof of the gross weight of the vehicle plus the maximum load to be carried thereon. The minimum fee becomes $20 for such vehicles. This reduced rate doesnot apply to other so-called commercial vehicles or trailers.

APO Centralize Lost and Found

How many students have lost belongings on campus — and how much of a chance has there been to recover them ?

The brothers of Alpha Phi Omega are attempting to centralize the campus lost and found by collecting articles from outlying buildings and bringing them to the bus ticket window in the Student Union, where they may be claimed. Members will also try to return marked articles to their owners.

Students are advised to mark all belongings with their name and campus address to facilitate their return.

National 4-H Club Week Observed with Programs

Massachusetts' 14,000 4-H Club members will join two and a quarter million in 4 - H throughout the U. S. this week to mark National 4-H Club Week, Sept. 24 through Oct. 1, the University of Massachusetts Extension Division of 4-H Club and Youth Programs has announced.

The annual observance marks the start of a new 4-H, when members begin new "learn by doing" projects and activities. They may choose from as many as 100 educational projects—plant and animal science, food and nutrition, health, career exploration, money management, community beautification, photography, horsemanship, citizenship and many others.

In Massachusetts, the fastest growing project is horsemanship, with approximately 2000 young people enrolled. The most popular Bay State 4-H projects continue to be clothing and food, with about 4000 4-H members enrolled in each.

The theme of this year's 4-H Week is "4-H Learning for Living." The major aims are to encourage boys and girls from nine to 19 to join 4-H and to recruit those over 19 as volunteer leaders. Information on joining either group is available at county 4-H Club offices.

Massachusetts 4-H Club members plan a variety of achievement nights, TV and radio appearances, window displays and special programs throughout the week.

REFORM

By DON ALIFERIS, Editorial Staff

In spite of the fervor of last spring, the University of Massachusetts remains a Babbit among educational institutions. Unfortunately, the changes wrought in the preceeding semester did little to correct the more essential flaws of our growing state complex.

Most of the regulations remain confining the academic life of students. In particular the course distribution requirements of the College of Arts and Sciences evidence continued intellectual narrowness.

The most important reform needed at the University is the immediate modification of non-departmental distribution requirements. The three year science or math requirement for liberal arts majors is a folly belonging to an antiquated educational philosophy.

A "Liberal Education" as implied by such requirements is a compendium of specialized facts. More appropriately, a liberal education should be an investigation of the shared dilemmas inherent in human existence. For this purpose only a general understanding of the significant conditions and facts of life is necessary. Training in specific subjects is not required; knowledge of the cell structure of plant tissue or the atomic weight of hydrogen is relevant only to the specialist.

In the place of indepth subject studies belong highly general survey courses, e.g., one year Natural Science. Their contents should be determined by relevancy to common human situations—material, social or spiritual.

It is to be hoped that the stalwarts in the academic hierarchy, uninvigorated by the spirit of the spring, will be somewhat awakened by the fresh air of a new school year. It is to be hoped that the crusty cataracts of middleclass intellectualism are removed, and the light of academic reform perceived.

Last Friday

By DEE SMITH, Editorial Staff

Last Friday an editorial by me, entitled Face It, appeared on this page. At the time of its publication, there was considerable reaction towards its content and presumed attitude. In light of the passions aroused, as witnessed by the letters which were printed in Wednesday's Collegian, I have been asked by the rest of the staff to publish an explanation.

It's a difficult thing to have to explain a piece of one's own writing. Simply because the creation of an explanation is tantamount to a confession of its shortcomings.

Face It dealt with minority groups, not Jews, and was if anything a criticism of the society in which they must exist and not of the minority groups themselves.

Re-read the editorial. Re-read especially the last sentence.

I attempted in my editorial to express as deliberately as I could what is a savage reality—the fact that minority groups will be exploited. Will be. It sounds so simple it seems almost innocuous and inconsequential. It seems so as least until you as a person are confronted by its inherent viciousness and stark irrationality. And until you as a person realize the pathos of its inevitability. Perhaps it's this inevitability which is most horrible of all.

Not an inevitability which says don't try but one that requires a hard, introspective and deliberately objective appraisal of the enemy before any real hope of progress is feasible. Face it.

Letters to the Editor

A Misinterpretation . . .

To the Editor:

Up with provincialiizm! Recently the Woman's Affairs Committee communicated to the Residence Halls that applicants for positions on the "standards committee" (i.e., House Judiciary) should be screened through Woman's Judiciary. There was much misinterpretation of this memo. Applicants for any such position need not be screened. But more important applicants need not be elected. Men select their area judiciaries. And in some men's houses the elected house councils also function as judicial bodies.

A creative and bold innovation is proposed for one women's house, in which for each judicial case that comes up, a group of 5 women will be selected by lot (every 5th on an alphabetical list) with an opportunity for the defendent to challenge a person she may think biased. This group would function as a judiciary.

Revolutionary? No, this is the same basic setup as our own jury system.

The system of adjudication in any social/legal system should be tailored to fit the needs of that group and not just to conform to the theories or desires of any Dean's Office. Remember the old saying, if the shoe fits—steal it.

"Just Not the Case"

To the Editor:

In reference to Mr. Jarnes' editorial of September 19, concerning the Student Union Governing Board and the Student Union renovations, a number of errors were made that need to be corrected. The billiards room will be closed for six weeks, not two months, in order that the pool tables be moved to the lodge area. The elimination of the bowling alleys, and the removal of a ping pong area is part of a design to double the Hatch seating area and to increase the food service facilities, a goal ignored in the editorial. Mr. Jarnes' statement that "once again the students are the ones who suffer," is just not the case.

No rights were taken away from the students. The problem was deliberated by and voted on the Student Union Governing Board, a majority of which are students and whose officers are all students. The decision to increase the Hatch seating and serving area at the expense of ping pong and bowling was not made by a past Board, but by the present one, since the Board functions on a February to February term.

Mr. Jarses also asks why renovations were not done over the summer. He states that the SUG Board has procrastinated for lower bids. The fact is, Mr. Jarnes, that the Board of Trustees has allocated only $150,000.00 for the project. If Mr. Jarnes would consult, he would indeed find out that this sum has been carefully spent in order even to cover the scope of the project.

From a Melancholic Light Sleeper

To the Editor:

I finally thought I had it made.

No Saturday classes, no classes before 11:15, and a single on the 22nd floor of T5 complete with picture window and telephone. This was to be the life — conducive to both relaxation and study.

In my optimism, however, I failed to take two most unfortunate facts into account: I am the lightest of light sleepers, and outside of my dorm slave the hardest of hardworking construction men.

It is only natural that the piercing noise which they make daily at 7:30 a.m. brings my sacred slumber to an abrupt end.

By no means am I knocking the boys down below and their most necessary and appreciated service to the University. God bless them for devoting themselves to the worthy cause of making room for next year's freshmen. But holy hacksaw are they loud!

A Freshman with six eight o'clocks informs me that multitudes of others on campus must rise daily at 7:30. Granted, but most of these poor souls live outside the range of the high amplitude waves evolving from the towers area and can awake to the relatively pleasant tune of their alarm clock rather than to the chaotic clatter of steel on steel.

Waking up in the early a.m. with no cause is bad enough, but the headache which ensues from the dissonance outside makes it an experience little short of miserable, especially after a delightful dream.

I have come up with five possible solutions to my problem:

1) Get the workers to strike (the most feasible of the solutions, but hardly realistic);
2) Get ear plugs (an old wife told me it is bad for the health);
3) Get to bed earlier (can't see it);
4) Kill all the workers (morals say no);
5) Kill myself (I'm too egotistic).

The above all seem to be unworkable solutions. Thus I am resigned to gaining semi-consciousness at 7:30 each weekday morning with the rationalized assurance that my sacrifice is for the future well-being of the University.

This being the monsoon season in Amherst, I'm hoping that the construction gang's game will be rained out one of these days. Let this hope not make me seem anti-progress. I'm only pro-sleep.

I had better stop now. It's getting late, and we lightsleepers of the Towers have an early morning trauma awaiting.

But I have no real right to complain. It's great to have my own phone (love those 4 a.m. calls), and the view from up here is devastating. (The heat, however, doesn't come up this far).

Construction ceases on the weekend, and I can make up for lost sleep on these precious days. Thank you God for resting on the Sabbath.

If You Are Arrested . .

(Ed. Note: The following articles have been printed for the information and benefit of the college community. Your comments will be appreciated.)

The Act of Arrest

What is it ?

The law says that arrest is "taking a person into custody" so that he may be held to answer for a crime.

What can you be arrested for ?

Specific law violations for which you might be arrested are far too numerous to list here. However, law violations have classifications that are useful for you to know if arrested. Felony is the name for the most serious violation. Examples of felonies include murder, rape, and armed robbery. Less serious violations are called misdemeanors. Examples of misdemeanors include motor vehicle violations, gambling, and disorderly conduct.

When can you be arrested ?

1. One can always be arrested by a policeman with a warrant for arrest. A warrant is an order issued by a court. It is made on someone's complaint and it charges that you committed a crime, which charge must be listed. It directs the policeman to make the arrest and to bring you before the issuing court. You have a right to see and read the warrant when arrested. The arrest warrant is not the same thing as a search warrant (see below).

2. A policeman may arrest you without a warrent in the following situations:

   a. If he sees you commit or try to commit a violation of the law.

   b. If he knows that a warrant for your arrest for a misdemeanor or felony has been issued and is effective at the time.

   c. If a felony was committed and he has reason to believe that you did it.

3. A private person other than a police officer may also arrest you without a warrant if you have actually committed a felony.

4. In addition there are special rules governing arrest in particular cases, such as for drunkenness, shoplifting, vagrancy, or certain motor vehicle offences.

What if you are innocent ?

Even if you think you are not guilty, it is a crime to resist an officer who arrests you lawfully. Respect him. The policeman who arrests you also has his job to do. He stands for law and order, and he has a duty to his community. Do not talk back or be disorderly. If it turns out that you have been arrested illegally, you can sue the policeman for false arrest. But remember: your arrest may be lawful even if you are innocent.

Can the policeman use force to arrest you?

If you resist a lawful arrest, the policeman can use all necessary force to arrest you. After you have been restrained, he cannot continue to use force, except to keep you under arrest or to search pursuant to a search warrant.

Can you be searched ?

When you are lawfully arrested, your person may be searched. In addition the place of your arrest may be searched within limits considered incidental to the arrest. Otherwise a search warrant is needed, which is an order issued by a court, on someone's complaint, directing an officer to search someplace for contraband. The warrant must describe the place to be searched and the articles to be searched for, and it directs the officer to bring the articles and the person in whose possession they are found before the court.

At the Police Station

What happens after you are arrested ?

The police may want to question you without making an arrest, and it may be in your interest to cooperate rather than to be arrested. If you are arrested and taken to a police station, a record of your arrest and the charge against you must be reported without unnecessary delay in the "arrest book". Before questioning you, the police must tell you the charge. Where required by law, you will be fingerprinted and photographed. After your arrest you have the right to the aid and advice of a lawyer.

Do you have to answer questions ?

After identifying yourself, you do not have to answer any questions or sign any statements about what happened, if you expressly state that you are relying on your constitutional right not to do so. Neither a policeman nor anybody else may force you to answer questions or sign statements. If any force or threats are used against you, report it promptly to the police official in charge, to the court, to the District Attorney, and to your own lawyer.

The promise of a policeman to help you or to intervene with the court, in exchange for a confession, is not binding.

Can you notify your family or lawyer ?

On being held you may always ask to use a telephone, and the police should usually grant you permission to the extent necessary to communicate with your family or friends, or to arrange for rean attorney. In any event you have a release on bail, or to engage the services of legal right within one hour after booking to use a telephone for these purposes at your own expense.

What happens to the money you may have with you ?

You should be given an itemized receipt for all money and property taken from you when you are booked.

Can you be released on bail ?

You are allowed to apply promptly for bail. Bail permits you to be released from jail, if an amount of money or other security is deposited with the proper official to make sure that you will appear in court.

After arrest, but before you appear before a judge, the amount of bail is fixed by the clerk of the court or by a bail commissioner or some other specially designated officials before whom you are to be brought. You have a right to have bail set without delay. Later the court may reduce or increase the amount of bail initially fixed. If you are charged with murder, as a practical matter bail is not permitted.

How can you get money for bail ?

If you cannot obtain sufficient money or other security from a friend or relative, you may obtain it from a professional bondsman. His fees may vary, but they cannot legally be higher than 5% of the amount of bail for which there is collateral, 10% for which there is no collateral. The police or clerks of court on request will furnish you with the names of professional bondsmen.

(Reprinted from the pamphlet "If You Are Arrested", prepared by the Office of the Attorney General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.)

Your Rights in Court

When do you go before a judge ?

After arrest and booking, unless released, you must be taken before a court without unnecessary delay; this is almost always a district or a municipal court. If the court is not then open, you may be held in the police station until it is.

What do you do in court ?

You will be brought before the judge. The clerk will read the charge to you. If you do not understand it, you may ask him to read it again. You will be asked to plead either "guilty" or "not guilty." If possible you should have a lawyer with you at this time. If you ask the judge, he will allow you a reasonable time to get a lawyer. You may, of course, try your own case yourself.

How do you get a lawyer ?

If you are charged with a felony and cannot pay for a lawyer, you may ask the judge to appoint one for you. In the municipal or district court he may appoint one; in the superior court he must.

What does the judge decide ?

The judge must hold a hearing at which witnesses (the policemen or others) will tell what happened. You yourself have a right to tell the judge what happened, but you do not have to say anything. If you do talk you must tell the truth. You can ask that this hearing be delayed until your lawyer can be present.

For some charges, including all serious felonies (except forgery and breaking and entering, under certain conditions) for which the punishment may be more than 5 years in prison, this first hearing is only a preliminary hearing. It is to decide whether you were properly arrested and whether it is sufficiently likely that you committed the crime so that you should be held for a later trial or for consideration of the charge against you by a Grand Jury. You may waive this hearing if you wish.

In many cases, however, this first hearing is the actual trial to decide whether or not you are guilty. In these cases the judge, after considering what has been said, may dismiss the charge against you, or he may find you guilty. If you are found guilty you may be put on probation or given a suspended sentence, or you may be fined or sentenced to jail for as much as two and a half years on each charge.

What are your rights of appeal ?

If convicted in the District Court, you have an absolute right to appeal to Superior Court and to have a new trial there. However, any appeal must be made immediately. If you pleaded "guilty" in District Court, you may appeal only as to the amount of the fine or the length of the jail sentence. Both where you elect to appeal to the Superior Court and where you are held for the Grand Jury, bail must be obtained all over again at additional cost, in order to permit your release from jail pending trial in the Superior Court or consideration by the Grand Jury.

What does the Grand Jury do ?

The Grand Jury will either dismiss the charge against you, or will indict (accuse) you. If it indicts you, you must then stand trial in the Superior Court. If you learn that the Grand Jury is considering your case, you should not ask to appear before it without your lawyer's advice.

How About Campus Cops?

So you think the campus cops are a two-bit bunch of night watchmen, do you? No real power—just men playing policemen?

Well guess again, my friend. The campus police have the same power and authority as any other law officers. They may arrest you for any of the usual reasons, and this arrest will be as valid as one performed by a state trooper.

One question which causes extra trouble for some students is whether or not a campus policeman has the right to request to see your student ID. Most students believe he doesn't.

But if a campus policeman asks to see your ID, you should produce it immediately. If you refuse, and are acting suspiciously in his opinion, this act in itself may be enough to warrant your being taken into custody. Your ID is proof that you at least belong on this campus. It is verification of your identity. Only in extreme cases will it be taken from your person.

And contrary to popular belief, the campus police never "turn someone over" to the Amherst police. As there is no cell block on campus, it is necessary to use the one in the Amherst police station.

It is important, therefore, for all students to realize that a campus arrest is a bonafide arrest, and that as such all the laws of the Commonwealth pertaining to arrests also apply to it—i.e., you are not required to answer questions, you may make a phone call, etc.

The campus police are here to protect the student body as well as University property. And whether you have criminal tendencies or not, it will be to your advantage to know your rights in the event you are arrested.

Harry Belafonte is always exciting, always enjoyable, always new. As background to his familiar voice, he adds new touches and new material. He will appear at UMass on Sunday, October 2, accompanied by Greek songstress, Nana Mouskouri.

The Great Voice of

Harry Belafonte

On October 2 at 8:30 in the Cage the Student Union Program Council will present Harry Belafonte in person performing in a theatre in the round.

One of the most refreshing things about Harry Belafonte is the fact that he never takes an audience for granted.

The internationally famed singer, who made folk singing a national art form, through his own individual presentations surmounts the limitations of "just plain folk singing," with an ever new approach to his craft that is always vital, new and entertaining.

"You can't expect audiences to remain enthusiastic and loyal if you give them a warmed over version of the same production year after year," he said.

In this show Mr. Belafonte will present a new voice in the entertainment firmament. It is that of the exciting Greek songstress, Miss Nana Mouskouri. She has, in a very short period of time, become the musical custodian of many memorable moments in the cultural history of such countries as Greece, France, Germany, Italy and Spain.

The Belafonte Singers, whom Belafonte founded over three years ago, will back him with the necessary vocal aid in many of his selections, affording it with a broader and much more flexible quality.

This tour will bring Mr. Belafonte and his company in direct contact with the people who relate to the rich, meaningful quality of his music and its honest method of presentation. He reaches all audiences through his act.

Comedian Nipsey Russell, who has won enthusiastic response from audiences all over America as well as television viewers, adds his own special brand of humor to this show.

"We've been very fortunate over the last few years, drawing responsive crowds to all of our appearances. If we want to continue the enthusiasm and build our following, we must present a show that audiences can identify with, understand and become enthusiastic about," says Belafonte.

"I don't mean just a couple of new songs, but fresh production values, a new look, different scenic design and imaginative staging. Loyal audiences deserve this kind of special care."

The show that audiences will see will feature, first and foremost, the art of Belafonte, singing the songs of people from all

And The Flamenco Guitar of

Carlos Montoya

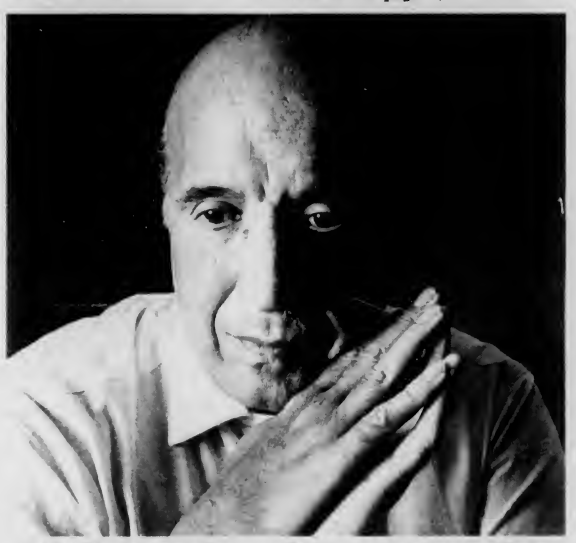
Flamenco titles can be perplexing, says Carlos Montoya, internationally acclaimed master of the flamenco guitar who will be heard in concert in Bowker Aud. at 8 p.m., Tue., Sept. 27.

Concert audiences throughout the world, and millions of aficionados who collect his numerous recordings, are often confronted with a familiar title on a Montoya program or record liner, only to hear a wholly new musical piece. The reason for this is that Montoya prefers to give his solos their traditional generic names, rather than create what he calls "a fancy title" for each selection.

Thus it is that a program may list Alegrias, Buleria, Farruca (all of which describe dance rhythms) or Tarantas, Granainas and Peteneras (which are songs),for two or three seasons running, and yet be a wholly new program.

In hewing so closely to the traditional thematic titles of his music, Montoya is merely mirroring the traditional nature of flamenco music. While the selections he plays are all his own compositions, they all derive from traditional flamenco themes.

There are many such melodies, usually consisting of but one short verse. The essence of Montoya's unique art is that he can take such a short melodic scheme and improvise upon it and create a wholly new self-contained musical entity.



Before Montoya became the first flamenco guitarist ever to take the unheard-of step of performing a solo concert without the aid of a dancer or singer, flamenco music consisted of a few chords (to give the singer the key), then add a few phrases. Once the singer came in, the guitar was subordinated and the guitarist would merely play a few pieces between the verses of the song.

When accompanying a dancer, the guitarist played mostly rhythm, with an occasional "falseta", or guitar phase, on the spur of the moment.

Obviously, performing in this manner, the guitarist never really had a complete piece to play. Their act, improvisational by its very nature, often resulted in brilliant variations which, all too frequently, were forgotten once the performance was over.

It was Carlos Montoya, stepping out on his own as a solo artist, who was the first to capture the exquisite improvisation, creativity and sensitive musicianship of the flamenco art and render it into a complete musical whole which can be understood and appreciated by the public at large.

He still clings to the traditional titles, although he composes and creates entirely new musical pieces at every performance. Unlike the classical guitarists, he cannot rely on printed music by another composer. This is especially so in Montoya's case, since this masterful musician doesn't read a note. But as Harold Schoenberg once said in the New York Times: "He does something much more important; he makes music."

Carlos Montoya, world-famous flamenco guitar player, will be appearing next Tuesday, Sept. 27, in Bowker Auditorium. Montoya, who is largely responsible for the rise in popularity of flamenco guitar music in recent years, has made an art of taking traditional flamenco themes and adding his own compositions based on the original verse. The result is a new musical entity, with all the flavor of classical flamenco.

Israeli Singers Back in Action

"Some of the Hebrew folk songs really swing. We've got a lot of songs but we need more swingers to sing them. We need people who can sing, read music play music. After we get to know each other we should have a great group going," says Bill Neigher, leader of the Student Zionist Organization Makelah.

The Makelah was founded several years ago as an informal Israeli folk song group. Last year as well as singing for fun, the ensemble performed for various Jewish and international events on and off campus. This year the chorus already has engagements in Springfield, Northampton, and on campus, starting this Friday evening for Hillel.

Rehearsals start this Tuesday, September 27, 8:00 p.m., in the Worcester Room. All those interested in folk music are urged to join. People who like to sing, play the piano, drums, or the recorder should call Bill Neigher in James House, 546-7527.

Golf Better Scientifically

by ALAN BELSKY

Ask any golfer. He'll tell you that there's more to the game than just hitting a little white ball around a golf course. But Richard S. Youngberg, Physical Education Department golf instructor, is out to find, "scientifically," just how much more.

His four spring semester classes, totaling 96 students, are the experimental groups. Each class has been taught a different method of stance and ball positioning. Mr. Youngberg is observing the classes to see which has the greatest ease in learning and the greatest skill in golfing.

Class number one was taught the "standard" technique. They use varying stances (placement of the feet while hitting the ball) and varying ball positions.

For this class, the shorter the shot, the more "open" the stance (feet lined up to the left of the target) and the closer the ball is shot from the right heel.

Class two also uses varying ball positions but they always line up their feet directly at the target in a "square" stance. For the shorter shots, this class would keep the ball close to the right heel, but would never change the stance.

The third class neither varies the ball position nor the stance. They always line up their feet towards the target and they play the ball near the left heel, no matter how long or short the shot.

Class number four varies its stance but does not change its ball position. On the short shot, this group keeps the ball in front of the left heel, but uses an "open" stance.

According to Mr. Youngberg, the same teaching methods were used in each class. All students were taught how to handle both long drives and short shots, and were shown films on correct golfing technique. Several classes were devoted to the rules of golf and golfers' etiquette.

By the middle of May, despite a good deal of rained-out classes, Mr. Youngberg put his experiment to the test.

Between Monday, May 16, and Tuesday, May 24, all 96 students are required to test their skills by playing 36 holes at a nearby golf course.

From the available results Mr. Youngberg tentatively concludes that group three, using a fixed ball position and stance, is having the most success.

That little white ball is still going to be a challenge to golfers. But Richard Youngberg is on the road to showing the beginner the best way to begin.

over the world in the varied settings of their own natural habitats. But many of the songs, actually most of them, will be all new.

Songs like the West Indian "Sailor Man"; the Israeli "Hayoshevet Baganim"; the American "Shake That Little Foot"; afford the show with a rainbow of melodic and lyrical color. The moods of the songs range all the way from sweet ballads, to dramatic songs of history, to gay fun filled calypsos.

There is much more than the carefully selected songs of Belafonte in this show, there is the magic of Nana Mouskouri, the different comedy of Nipsey Russell, the vitality of the Belafonte Singers and always there is the consummate artistry of Harry Belafonte.

Tickets are now on sale in the Student Union ticket office for 3 and 4 dollars.

Lederle to Kick Off

by DAVE JARNES

Monday night marks the opening of another intramural season as University President John Lederle and athletic director Warren McGuirk will preside over the opening ceremonies at 6:30 p.m. A record number of 82 teams (compared to 64 last year) will be vieing for the campus title. In one of the biggest unsets of alltime, the Courtesy Taxis stunned mighty Kappa Sig 9-6 to cop the crown last year.

This year, as in the past, awards will be given to the leading passer, leading scorer, leading receiver, and best defensive team, and the best offensive team. Also, the touch football begins the competition for the highly coveted Stephen Davis award, emblematic of campus supremacy in intramural sports.

Tennis competition begins this monday as Larry Barron is the defending champion.

You may not believe it, but Paul Mlinar really doesn't eat babies for breakfast. To most opposing running backs Paul is the personification of all that is evil. If UMass is to stand any chance of upsetting last year's top eastern power, Paul and the Redmen forward wall will have to contain the explosive running of Dartmouth's Ryzewicz, Beard, and Walton.

small but extremely effective. At the ends are captain Bill Calhoun and Bob McCleod, a pair of seniors who could develop into two of the finest receivers around. Hank Paulson, 200 pounds, and Skip Small, 205, are light but provide good blocking at the tackles. Bill Sjogren, 200, was one of the most active players in 1965 and could be one of Dartmouth's best guards. Anchoring the line is center Chuck Matuszak, 215, a unanimous All-Ivy selection last year.

On the defensive forward wall, the Big Green will miss the likes of All-America end Ed Long and two All-Ivy linemen, but with the depth available Blackman should field a capable defensive line. Norm Davis and Bruce Smith, 208 and 195 respectively, are the linebackers.

The defensive backfield is excellent, despite the loss of the safety through academic reasons. Steve Luxford, the defensive fullback, Wynn Mabry and Gordon Rule, defensive halfbacks, are all returning.

Vic Fusia's backfield will remain intact, with Greg Landry leading the way at quarterback. Landry should be expected to perk up the offense which was so lackluster last week. Bob Detore will stay at right half, Don Durkin and Tim Driscoll at left half and Dick Benoit at fullback. Aside from the changes in the line resulting from Gogick's injury, the rest of the forward wall will be the same as last week.

On defense, the task of containing the Big Green's backs will remain with Paul Mlinar, Doug Faucette, Dick Qualey and Bruno Debiak. Rod Brooks, who played an excellent game at linebacker against Maine, joins Ernie Smith, and the defensive backfield again consists of Paul Campbell, Dave Giarla, Mike McArdle and Ed Cody.

It is a young team to be throwing at a squad like Dartmouth, but Fusia is certain that the inexperienced boys will fill the bill before long. If they can tomorrow, the Redmen's chances will be considerably enhanced.

Game Tickets

Tickets for the UMass-Dartmouth football game are on sale at the Athletic Ticket Office, Frank L. Boyden Building.

Reserved seats are regularly priced at $5.00. However, students may purchase a single ticket for half price if they show their Student Athletic Book when making the purchase.

The ticket office is open weekdays, except Saturday, from 9:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.

Ernie Smith, a star at offensive guard, has been moved to linebacker as a replacement for the injured Bob Gogick.

Mickey Bailey, a sophomore standout, has been shifted to offensive guard to help compensate for the rash of Redmen injuries.

HOCKEY MEETING

There will be a meeting of last year's freshman and varsity hockey players next Wednesday, Sept. 28 at 6 p.m. in room 10 of the Curry Hicks Cage.

Dartmouth center Chuck Matuszak was a unanimous choice for All-Ivy League honors last year.

Booters Open with Amherst

by Tim MURPHY

Social scientists have termed sports in general "a form of intraspecific aggression" guiding what they call "collective militant enthusiasm" into a constructive channel. The more fast paced the action of a sport, and the more contact and physical show of competitive spirit, the more the participants and audience enjoy it.

While there are arguments between proponents of the various sports as to which is the most swift and exciting, it is generally agreed that soccer is near the top of the list.

After three tough weeks of honing skills to a fine edge, conducting repeated sessions of calesthenics, fundamentals, intrasquad competitions and outside scrimmages, Coach Larry Briggs, for 34 years head soccer man at the University, looks cautiously at the upcoming season.

Tomorrow, Briggs will lead an assemblage of 33 booters, 14 returning from last year, cross town to do battle with Amherst to raise the curtain on the 1966 campaign. A year ago, the Redmen outstripped the Jeffs 1-0, bringing the longtime series to six wins for UMass, 22 wins for Amherst, and five ties.

Under the wing of Briggs, the Redmen have won 112 games, lost 143, and tied 28 since 1932. Last season, Briggs' forces took seven and lost three, while sharing the Yankee-Conference title with a record of 4-1. Coholders of the Yan-Con crown with the Redmen were New Hampshire and Connecticut.

Metawampe Rain Dance Justified

by MIKE GOULD
Sports Editor

Keep going Metawampe! Continue your magical rain dance which has been so successful this stormy Wednesday. Do not stop until the football field at Dartmouth College is supersaturated with heavenly liquid.

For you and I know, oh Guiding Spirit, that a rain-soaked field at Hanover would give UMass its best chance to beat the Big Green for the first time.

Go on unceasingly, hollest of Redmen. Bring on the rain that would change the versatile attack of the enemy into a ball-control offensive against which our warriors are strongest.

Make the field slick, slippery, and slushy. And turn the swivel-hipped speedsters of Dartmouth into mud-packed mummies.

Help the Redmen defense to pull the richest robbery yet—absorption of the jewels known collectively as the "Million Dollar Backfield."

Numb the exploits of swifty Gene Ryzewicz, a $250,000 product of Springfield. Milk the clouds of the moisture and turn the savage advances of back Paul Klungness into waterlogged waltzes.

Quarterback Mickey Beard loves to throw the football. Let him throw a wet ball to his heart's content, for I trust that his heaves will be inaccurate.

Put the bulk of the pressure on workhorse fullback Pete Walton of Dartmouth. Rod Brooks likes to attack charging fullbacks, and with the precipitation resulting from your sacred dance hampering the effectiveness of the other $750,000, Mickey Bailey and company could key on Walton.

Rain—the great equalizer. Let it come down in Lambert Trophy-fulls.

For the Redmen are not likely to pass much or run wide plays even on a dry field. They kept to the conservative off-tackle tradition against Maine and will no doubt do likewise at Dartmouth.

Don Durkin and Dick Benoit as well as Greg Landry are big and powerful enough to pick up grudging running yardage in the mud, and Bob Detore would become all the more slippery to the Dartmouth tacklers.

UMass can match Dartmouth in size but not in speed. A slippery turf would not allow the opponent to exploit its advantage to the fullest.

On a wet field, a football game often becomes a game of breaks. The chances of fumbles, bad centers on punts, intercepted passes and other events which are unexpected when conditions are dry, are greatly enhanced by a wet football and gridiron.

UMass would have a better chance in this type of game than in the wide-open contest in which Dartmouth excels.

Bang a little harder on your magical drum, Metawampe. I'll bet there is a cousin of yours up at Hanover who is matching you beat for beat. The Dartmouth Indian, however, dances for sunshine.

Senior fullback Dick Benoit is one of the most underrated players on the UMass squad. Although Dick is not the breakaway type of runner, he can be depended on for short yardage situations. The former Agawam star is also considered one of the top blocking backs on the team as Greg Landry can attest.

Hard-running Bob Detore must perform well if UMass is to upset Dartmouth tomorrow.

Many of the pupils come from tribal villages but the language they learn in is English and the curriculum is modeled on that of an American comprehensive-type high school at the Tororo Girls School in Uganda. The 21-building boarding school was designed and is being developed by the University of Massachusetts School of Education under a contract from the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Boarding Concept Applied in Africa

An old New England educational concept, liberally adapted to fit a brand-new enducational problem in Africa, is being transplanted from the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts half-way around the world to Tororo, Uganda.

The concept is the traditional one of the New England boarding academy, being adapted in an untraditional way to attack a problem general in Africa and particularly acute in Uganda—the low intellectual and social status of women.

A former British protectorate, Uganda lies just north of Lake Victoria in East Africa. Most of its 6.5 million people are peasant farmers raised in a tribal culture that traditionally assigns women the role of field work, burden-bearing and caring for the home and children. Less than 200 Uganda girls a year graduate from secondary schools.

Under a contract from the U.S. Agency for International Development, a team of Massachusetts public and private school educators, led by the University of Massachusetts School of Education, is creating a girl's boarding school at Tororo with a specific purpose: to educate a new breed of women, intellectually and socially able to take their places beside the men who are the new leaders of Uganda.

To do this, the boarding school supplements classroom teaching with what amounts to a continuing orientation program in western social customs, manners and games, from how to cook in a modern kitchen to how to greet an important guest.

Planning work on the comprehensive-type, interdenominational, interracial school was begun by the Uganda Education Ministry, AID and UMass in 1961, a year before Uganda became a fully independent nation.

Construction was completed in 1965; building of curricula, staff and student body is expected to continue until 1971, when the facility is scheduled to be turned over to the Uganda government. Enrollment is expected to reach 400 by January of 1967 and full capacity of 540 by January of 1968.

Dean Albert W. Purvis of the UMass School of Education drew the preliminary plans for the 21-building, 73-acre campus. The buildings were designed by the Uganda Ministry of Works, aided by Boston architect David Anderson.

Classrooms, laboratories, dormitories, faculty quarters, a gymnasium and an auditorium were built in contemporary style, using native stone, concrete and pretinted asbestos panels. Quadrangles and a bell tower (used to house the water tank) show the New England influence.

The present teaching and administrative staff of 20 includes 11 Americans and nine Ugandans. Some Uganda teachers are being trained at Tororo and some are being trained at the Amherst campus so that the school will be fully staffed by Uganda people when it is taken over by the country in 1971.

There are six classes at Tororo, starting at the equivalent of the American ninth grade and running to a grade 14 equivalent. Students are selected solely on the basis of competitive examinations and come from nearly all economic levels and all tribes in Uganda. Competition is keen; there were 825 applicants for the first 107 places when classes began in 1965, for example.

Some of the students come

No-Curfew System To Operate in 3 Weeks

by MARSHALL NADAN
Staff Reporter

Within three weeks fire and security guards should be on duty to open doors for students returning late to their dorms, according to Colonel John Marchant, chief security officer at the University.

The processing of applicants for night receptionists is proceeding according to schedule, although no date could be determined for the first hirings.

Marchant is directly responsible for the hiring of fire and security personnel. Eight guards are going to be hired to be on duty roughly between the hours of 10:30 p.m. and 6:30 a.m., the hours not yet precisely determined.

Marchant stated there were a large number of applicants and five men are ready to be hired. However, they will be trained in the use of fire apparatus and in the detection of fire hazards before they go on duty.

The guards will be uniformed and they will carry radios to keep in contact with the police station. They will be constantly patrolling within their residential area, both outside and inside buildings.

The present plan is to divide the University into six general areas, Marchant said. They would be (1) the Women's Quad, (2) Orchard Hill, (3) the Upper Hill, i.e., Butterfield, Van Meter, (4) the lower Hill, i.e., Brooks, and two areas for the Southwest complex.

A student returning late will either go to his residential area and locate his security guard or will go to the police station so that someone there may contact his guard by radio.

The night receptionists will be students who will be on duty in their dorms roughly between the hours of midnight and 2 a.m. What hours will be established, said Mrs. Isabelle Gonon of the Dean of Women's Office, will likely depend on what hours students are willing to work.

The hours are likely to be longer on weekends, and it also is possible that different houses may have different hours.

Marchant is also responsible for hiring the night receptionists, but late last week he said that he had not as yet received any applications. This is because all applicants must be cleared by the Placement Office to qualify for the federal government Work-Study Program. According to John Siegrist of the Placement Office, it is funds from this program that will pay the night receptionists.

After being cleared by Placement, applications are sent to either Dean Hopkins' or Dean Curtis' Office for further arrangements to be made. Siegrist said that he had already supplied the two Deans with lists of students.

According to Mrs. Gonon, an effort is made by the Dean of Women's Office to determine work hours. She said that some applications are complete and

STUDENT SENATE MEETS; RENEWS OLD TIES

The first Student Senate meeting of the semester, little more than a welcome back, was held Wednesday night.

The only bill passed was one authorizing the interior decoration of the Senate office.

The major discussion concerned possible refinements in which Treasurer Freedman (Baker) proposed stricter enforcement of Senate financial policy.

Students are reminded that all Senate committees dealing with academic and social affairs are now forming and open for applications.

Senator Gaudet (Webster) requested that mention be made of his eye-catching, powder blue, paisley brocade tie—the highlight of the evening.

Vice President Cunningham attributed the phenomenal brevity of the meeting to the fact that last year's broken gavel was still in use and rather ineffectual.

B. U. Paper Raps ROTC

The Boston University News has called for the abolition of ROTC, describing the training program for future officers as "the most aggressive and well organized. . .danger to free inquiry on our campus."

Approximately 475 of the 14,000 undergraduates at the University were enrolled in both the Army and Air Force units of the Reserve Officers Training Corps on the campus last year.

Roster Grows

According to Raymond Mungo, editor of the student newspaper, ROTC enrollments have grown since the United States became more heavily involved in Vietnam. "I don't have any exact figures on it, however," he said.

Forty-four members of the University faculty, most of them holders of doctoral degrees, have backed up the paper by signing a petition asking "whether it is not now time to reconsider any official University curricular relationship with ROTC."

President Harold C. Case said Wednesday, "The status of ROTC at Boston University certainly is a proper subject of discussion from students and faculty."

However, he added, "to rule ROTC off the campus, as some students are suggesting, would be just as much a denial of traditional university freedom of action and expression as it would be to make ROTC mandatory."

Cross Purposes

Both the paper and the faculty members contend a university and a military institution, such as ROTC, have diametrically opposed philosophies and purposes.

"It is painfully clear," the News editorialized, "from assertions of both ROTC officers themselves and independent analyists, that the campus military makes no pretense of being open to free and creative discussion of the military and its alternatives.

"Rather, ROTC is indoctrination. It is propaganda issued by a military hierarchy beyond the University's control, aimed at destroying 'the encroachments of alien ideologies.' And it simultaneously offers identical academic credit, awards 'professorships' (outside the jurisdiction of our own faculty), talks on official platforms, receives free rent, occupies precious classroom space, and in general manipulates a totalitarian discipline behind the mask of educational sanctuary and under the name of the University we all constitute."

The faculty petition states the same thesis in different words.

"We believe," it states, "that the University, by virtue of its commitment to the search for universal truth, has loyalties which transcend any national allegiance; — That an underlying purpose of ROTC is inculcation of future leaders in purely national and military values;

— That official University ceremonies and functions (e.g., freshman orientation), should not be an occasion for recruiting students for ROTC;

That, therefore, ROTC is not appropriate in purpose, substance or control to a university curriculum."

The editorial summed the argument up this way: "In the purest sense of the word, ROTC indoctrinates young students before they're old enough to think. (So when they do become able to think, they can't think, according to one professor.)" are ready for consideration by Colonel Marchant. She could not venture to say when they will begin to go on duty.

The fire and security guards, who will take over the job of opening doors for late returning students after the night receptionists go off duty, will also be charged with responsibility for keeping order.

Although their precise duties have not been established, said Marchant, they will patrol certain floors of dorms. They will protect individuals and property and in the event of a situation which they cannot handle, they will call the police.

directly from shambas (mud huts) in tribal compounds; most of them have a minimum acquaintance with western social amenities.

Dean Purvis described it this way: "We base our curriculum to a large extent on the assumption that a large majority of the girls will marry the more important Uganda leaders and maintain western-type homes."

For example, all dormitories have a common room with furniture and a western-style kitchenette attached. The dorm girls serve each other afternoon tea each day, familiarizing themselves with this socially useful procedure as they do so.

Birth Control . . .

TV to Replace Pill??

A recent story in the New York Times gave an explanation for an unusually large increase in births in New York hospitals this month. It is now nine months since the great Northeast power blackout.

"The lights went out and people were left to interact with each other," was the conclusion of sociologist Paul Siegel. "They didn't have access to the major source of amusement, the television, and it is reasonable to assume a lot of sex life went on."

Perhaps this sociologist has discovered the solution to the birth control controversy. A simple, effective means of holding down increasing population throughout the world has been found.

The pill is obsolete, just keep that television on all night. As long as the power doesn't fail, the problem of overpopulation can be solved with a good dose of Johnny Carson.

Certainly it would be easier to introduce such a control in underdeveloped nations than drugs or calendar watching.

The United Nations should begin imediately on a total program of TV installation, which will not only introduce real culture to the world's people, but will force electrication of all rural villages and educate a brave new generation of viewers in the wonders of "the tube."

Within 20 years, worldwide television will be so firmly entrenched that the birth rate will decline to the crisis point. At that time someone will have developed another system for maintaining the human race.

Hail to Our Ford.

Tutorial Positions Offered

UMass students are needed for a tutorial program with junior high students in Amherst, according to an announcement from the office of the Protestant Chaplains.

Organizing meeting for the program will be at First Congregational Church of Amherst, 165 Main, on Wednesday, September 28, between 3:15 and 4:45 p.m. Tutoring subjects include modern mathematics, French, and developmental reading.

Students interested in the program for the fall semester should contact one of the Protestant chaplains, either at the student union office, 5-2789, or at the chaplains offices in Hampshire House, F-3, 5-2661.

College Ousts Hairy Student

The U.S. Supreme Court has been asked to review the case of a Richmond Professional Institute student who was kept out of the college for his senior year because he sported a beard and long hair.

The Virginia liberal arts college refused to allow Norman Thomas Marshall to register in September 1965 and Marshall is seeking an injunction to prevent the college from requiring a shave and haircut as prerequisites.

In a brief filed with the high court on his behalf, the American Civil Liberties Union contended that the school's "arbitrary, capricious and unreasonable" action refusing his registration on account of his grooming violated the constitutional rights to free expression, due process of law, privacy and protection against cruel and unusual punishment.

Marshall, a 26-year-old senior, resigned a scholarship and his post as editor of the college's art and literary magazine last year in protest against the schools' "high-handedness" in its "arbitrary" rulings on student dress and grooming.

"There is no limitation on moustaches," Dr. George Oliver, president of the Institute, said at an earlier trial. "If a man wants to take a chance walking down the halls with a quite long one, he can go right along."

U. S. Seeks End to "Brain Drain"

When student exchange programs for underdeveloped countries were incorporated into U.S. foreign policy 20 years ago, the move to educate and train people to work for their nations' progress was hailed at home and abroad.

The program is backfiring now. Increasingly, foreign students are exchanging their visas for U. S. residency, rather than bringing skills back home. Foreign students are also being encouraged to remain in the U.S. because critical shortages in some professions have created a dependency on them.

This emigration from underdeveloped countries to the U.S. has brought steady complaints to the State Department and the U. N., and has prompted Sen. Walter Mondale (D-Minn.) to suggest means to halt the "brain drain."

Sen. Mondale said in a recent Senate speech that there is an urgent need for attention to the program, since the emigration of human resources indispensable to progress in underdeveloped countries offsets the benefits of U.S. financial aid.

Last month the Senator advocated a five-point plan to solve the problem:

— detailed research by the Immigration and Naturalization Service;

— pilot programs funded by the Federal government to set up college curricula relating to native problems;

— creation of foreign placement bureaus in the U.S. to find opportunities for students in their homelands; — bilateral agreements with nations to limit visas; and — expansion of medical training for U.S. citizens to eliminate dependency on foreign interns.

The loss of skilled manpower from underdesome diplomatic issue," according to Asst. Sec. of veloped countries is also a "steady, trying trouble-State Charles Frankel. The State Department has received numerous complaints from underdeveloped countries that emigration is impeding economic development.

To complicate the problem, foreign students study at colleges and universities in the U.S. where openings are available, and the training and education they receive here are often useless in their own countries. African physicists, Turkish psychologists, and Southeast Asian computer engineers are finding few job opportunities in their homelands.

In the medical profession, especially, there are few positions where foreign medical graduates can train in fields necessary to poorer countries, such as nutritional diseases, malaria and other tropical ailments.

But med schools have to train foreign grads in diseases peculiar to the U.S., for without the 11,-000 interns and resident physicians serving in the U.S., medical services would have to be curtailed, according to Dr. Halsey Hunt, executive director of the Educational Council for Foreign Medical graduates.

In his speech, Sen. Mondale urged expansion of med schools and curriculum revisions so that foreign interns and residents could concentrate on learning methods to serve their people rather than filling gaps in U.S. medical manpower.

The "brain drain" was exacerbated by the 1965 immigration act which eliminated nationality quotas and opened immigration to skilled and professional people and those with families in the U.S.

In one year, the effects are obvious: last year, under the old immigration law, 54 Indians and 51 Koreans immigrated to this country under the preference category for professional and technical workers. Under the new provision, 1,750 Indians and 400 Koreans came to the U.S.

The extent of the "brain drain" is shown in statistics from the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the State Department Visa Service, and the Educational Council for Foreign Medical Graduates:

— Last year, the Agency for Int'l. Development in the State Dept. trained about 8,000 people from Asia, Africa, and Latin America to cope with their countries' particular needs; at the same time, 4,-000 other students who studied in the U.S. from these same areas adjusted their status to become U.S. residents. For each man leaving his country, an underdeveloped nation lost an educational investment of many years, while the AID training lasted nine months.

— From 1962-64, 8,151 students from Asia, Africa and Latin America adjusted their visas for permanent U.S. residency;

— Yearly, about 30% of the Asians, particularly from Taiwan, Korea, and Iran, in the U.S. on student visas adjust to permanent status; — Between 1956 and 1963, 2,858 scientists and engineers from South America and 4,114 from Asia immigrated to the U.S.;

— Presently, 28% of the interns and 26% of the resident physicians in hospitals are foreign graduates; about 75% are from underdeveloped countries.

"Lake Amherst" Proposed

A reconnaisance report on the natural resources and recreational potentials of the town, prepared by the Natural Resources Technical Team of Hampshire County was distributed Thursday night at a meeting in Town Hall. The gathering was sponsored by the Development and Industrial Commission.

Selectmen, the Conservation Commission and DIC were asked by Vernon Johnson to study the report and then visit the sites on accompanying map recommended for boating, swimming, ice skating, nature study, recreation trails, camping, picknicking, wildlife and forest management, and vistas.

Johnson said the next step after field evaluation was the acquisition of the land and town meeting action for financing. The Soil Conservation Service can assist in reviewing engineering plans, but not financially, he added.

The map showed several sites for impounding water, among them the Dandelski land in Pomeroy Lane, land in North East St., the Lawrence Swamp, land east of Flat Hills Rd. and Hops Brook.

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

Press on the Press

by CHET WEINERMAN, Editorial Chairman

In his Convocation address, President John W. Lederle offered the University publications media some rather sagacious and meaningful observations. Lederle emphasized the responsibility of the press to regard and represent the feelings of the student body. At the same time, the press should reflect the University as a whole. This often rupturous burden is periodically aggravated by criticism from outside the academic community. The antagonists fail to realize the nature of student publications to be, as the President defined, "a kind of laboratory for the purpose of testing the absolute outer limits of accuracy, fair play, and good taste."

Unfortunate though it may be, few students graduate college with perfect averages; few complete their education without failing tests. It is in failing that one learns—both the reasons for failure and the formula for success. It was Emily Dickinson who said that success is counted sweetest by those who never completely succeed.

If we then assume that publications serve as a laboratory for the purpose of testing and that in testing (a learning process) mistakes are made, we must conclude that mistakes will be made in student publications, and furthermore, that through these mistakes, the students as students should learn and profit.

If Dr. Lederle's laboratory credo were universally believed and adhered to, the ideals of a free academic community would be satisfied. But the University of Massachusetts is in a state such that it cannot legislate its own will. Indeed, it must plead with salt tears for the right to select its goals, to determine the course of its development. It is at the point of monetary appropriation where the ideal is separated from the real, because the achievement of University goals takes money; money that is not in Amherst, money that must be cautiously crawled to elsewhere if it is to be obtained. The University's situation is like that of a puppet. To err from the path, to stray from the marionettery of the martinets means to have the puppet strings cut. Therefore, each step must be danced precisely, for to act otherwise would prove disasterous, both to the life of a puppet and the life of the University.

The unfortunate allegory comes to a united climax. For as the puppet is closely watched from above the stage, so the University is microscopically examined by the outside sources who peruse the student publications. These publications must represent the general feelings of the University. Extremes cannot be tolerated. Watch that dance step. Mistakes cannot really be made, because in actuality the fruition or failure of University goals is dependent upon the picture of the University which is presented by the student publications.

The publications media will make mistakes. Hopefully the students will profit and learn from their errors. But let there be no delusion. Student publications at this University are not laboratories and are not for testing extremes. They are for real, dead real—as real as are the consequences for imagining them to be a laboratory.

The Southwest: A Basic Change

by JANE ROLLAND, Editorial Staff

The new Southwest complex represents a major change on campus in recognizing the individuality of each student. In contrast to the old dorms which provide the minimum requirements for living—storage boxes to keep students between classes, the new dorms give a student a room which can better represent himself and his individuality.

I spent two years living in an "old dorm" My lobby, was furnished in early Morgan Memorial. It was necessary to walk down six flights of stairs to get a Coke or iron a blouse. In the new dorms there are ironing boards on every floor. For those who shudder at the huge concrete buildings and the number of students they must house, each tower is divided into an upper, middle, and lower dorm. There used to be 260 girls in my dorm, now there are 180.

There are little touches in the new dorms that make students believe someone cares about the way they live—and if most students have to live on campus, someone should care. People complained of the rise in room rates, suggested that the $50 a year more for the new dorms than the old was a plot by the administration to get students to move in and fill up the new residences. If this is so, apparently many students feel into the trap. (For $50 more a year I don't have to live in a slum.)

If the University would fix the old dorms, and such a project was proposed and will soon perhaps go into effect after its trial, it will show that the school cares also for those who like the looks of the old dorms, couldn't get into the new ones, or could not afford the extra money (there's also that extra $25 for the phone.)

Right now, I'm happy to feel that someone perhaps cares about how I live, and respects my individuality to some degree, but there's still a large number of students who don't have this feeling, living in small blocks with only two beds, one desk and a bureau furnished in their room.

The introduction of the self-curfews, housing that allows the student to live in dignity, and the probability of lessened academic requirements are not just small reforms at the University, but basic changes in the school's structure, the new complexes are obvious parts of these changes, and good beginning to an improved university community.

Letters to the Editor

Recognition Demanded

To the Editor:

Last Tuesday I attended the All-University Convocation which marks the official opening of the University of Massachusetts academic year 1966-67. In spite of certain refreshing elements of informality inescapable in outdoor surroundings there was the unmistakable air of dignity and elegance which these ceremonies impart. A feeling of participation was evident as quite a few courageous souls even sang the National Anthem. The setting for an atmosphere of universality so appropriate at a university was reinforced at least for me by Rev. John L. Scott's simple but moving invocation which was in itself an acknowledgement that men and women of many faiths and backgrounds were gathered for this occasion.

Student Senate President John Greenquist ably charged his fellow students critically to assess their oppropriate roles in the goals which President Lederle would express for the University for the coming year and years. In my opinion, this charge could and should appropriately be accepted by all members of the University community.

With all the objectivity at my command I listened attentively to President Lederle's message for hints of a broadening of our official outlook which could be used to counter an occasional charge that this University has not altogether grown out of "provincialism." It was most gratifying to hear included in the long list of major accomplishments, such as new buildings, fiscal autonomy and faculty salary increases, a few comments relating to our several official jointly sponsored international educational exchange projects. However, it is important to point out that the numbers of participants under these projects are few in relation to the men and women, largely unsponsored, from other countries who are coming as students, researchers and faculty in increasing numbers (and whose involvements entitle at least one other office besides that the the Provost on campus to claim the distinction of having wall-to-wall memoranda!) These international visitors come seeking an enrichment of their own educational background and at the same time (and this fact cannot be too strongly emphasized) bringing with them skills, outlooks and attitudes which in turn enrich and enlighten those with whom they come in contact.

The omission of any mention of this group and its obvious implication was particularly distressing to me and has prompted me to submit these remarks, not so much as criticism, but as a springbiard for comment by any interested persons. With this emphasis, I should like to include here the final recommendation made in the annual report from my office for the year ending June 30, 1966.

"With the President of the United States leading the way to an expanded appreciation of the role of international education exchange in this country in his special message to Congress, February 2, 1966, it seems appropriate that the University of Massachusetts reassess its own policy stand on this important issue. There is a timely and urgent need for a positive and courageous official statement of policy, similar to that presented so admirably by President Lederle during the recent Yahoo controversy, to be directed to the Amherst community, University Trustees, Massachusetts legislators and the world in general, affirming a strong belief—now expressed with increasing frequency by growing numbers of individuals and departments, but as yet not stated by the administration—that the mutual benefits in increased understanding, in shared richness of culture, of discovered diverse possibilities for solving the world's problems, common to all men, of poverty, disease, ignorance, optimum use of natural resources, population limitation, etc., justify—indeed, necessitate—a positive, rather than an apologetic, approach to the inevitable difficulties associated with international education exchange.

It is the conviction of the present Foreign Student Adviser that the University cannot ignore the implications of United States involvement in world affairs and the University's appropriate role as the educator of young people increasingly destined to active participation in this involvement. To continue to minimize her role, either by intention or default would appear seriously to reduce the possibilities for 'growth towards excellence'—the goal of the University of Massachusetts so often stated by the Provost and the President."

(Mrs.) Evelyn H. Russell
Foreign Student Adviser

A Library Shortcoming

To the Editor:

As new graduate students on this campus we, the undersigned, are dismayed at the lack of adequate facilities for students who wish to smoke while they study in Goodell Library.

As we see it, there are five basic shortcomings: 1) insufficient loor area and seating capacity; 2) inadequate lighting; 3) a lack of tables for writing; 4) a lack of adequate ventilaion; and, as a capping blow, 5) noisy conditions, the results of which make studying in the smoker's lounge virtually impossible.

Perhaps your student services committee could press for expanded facilities. Or, as a short-term goal, fluorescent lighting and an air filtrating system would be a great improvement.

And finally, please, a moratorium on conversaion. The library is for studying—the Hatch for bull sessions.

George E. Howe
Robert M. Bahm
Sincerely,

A Student's SUG?

To the Editor:

Neal Whitman apparently missed the main point of my editorial concerning the closing of the games area. Mr. Whitman contends that rights were not taken away from the students because the SUG Board, which is composed mainly of students, made the decision to close the games area for an extended period. Such an argument is ridiculous.

Certainly the SUG Board cannot be considered a truly representative body when it takes away something the students have paid for. If the SUG Board is to close the games area to make room for the big money-makers — the Hatch and the Bookstore — then a replacement for the games area must be found in the meantime or a robate should be given on the Student Union tax.

Hampshire College Trustees Choose Landscape Architect

PIETRO BELLUSCHI

HIDEO SASAKI

HUGH STUBBINS

The trustees of Hampshire College have chosen an architect to design the first buildings for the College, land architects for site studies and master planning of the Hampshire campus, and an independent architectural advisor, according to an announcement today by Pres. Franklin Patterson.

Mr. Hugh Stubbins, principal of Hugh Stubbins and Associates, Cambridge, Mass., is the architect who will be responsible for the design of the new college's basic buildings. Mr. Hideo Sasaki and the firm af Sasaki, Dawson & DeMay, Watertown, Mass., are the landscape architects who will be responsible for siting and master planning studies, in addition to continuing the general site studies that the firm has been making since it was initially engaged in April 1966. Mr. Pietro Belluschi has been appointed to serve the board of trustees and the College administration as an independent architectural advisor.

Mr. Stubbins, who is a graduate of Georgia Institute of Technology and Harvard University, is internationally known for his college and university buildings, as well as for a variety of other design achievements. Among the many schools where there are buildings for which he has been respon-Brandeis University; Bowdoin College; Harvard sible are The Country School, Weston, Mass., University; and the Dana Hall Schools.

In the five-college area, Mr. Stubbins' firm has designed the Orchard Hill Dormitories, the Orchard Hill Dining Commons, and the Southwest Residential Complex at the University of Massachusetts; 1837 Hall and Ham Hall Residences, the Psychology-Education Laboratory, and a newly completed Laboratory Theatre at Mt. Holyoke Col.

In 1955 Mr. Stebbins was selected by the American Institute of Architects to design the Congress Hall in Berlin, Germany. His firm and he personally have won a variety of awards and honors for professional excellence.

University News Service Performs Vital Functions

by DAVE FLOREEN

What's new is a question that the University News Service answers and publicizes every day. This little known, but highly efficient organization has one of the most important jobs of any service on campus.

Located on the third floor of South College, and headed by Dan Melly, UNS is constantly working to improve university public relations.

To tell the public how and where their tax dollars are being spent is the chief function of the UNS. New programs initiated by the University, whether in Boston, Worcester, or in Amherst, are fully relayed to the news media through UNS.

All changes in University costs or policy are sent out to parents through the publicity office. When a professor wins a prize or makes a new discovery, the UNS sees to it that he receives due exposure not only for personal recognition, but also for university presitage.

Recruitment of both students and faculty is a major task of UNS. Remember all those booklets expounding the beauties and benefits of UMASS that convinced you to come here to choose their school as you home for the next 4 years? That was prepared by UNS.

The UNS also writes feature articles about schools or departments such as the one on the School of Business Administration last spring. In addition the UNS writes news shorts about students who have been lucky enough to either make the Dean's List or graduate, and sends them to respective hometown papers.. ..The .UNS .also .answers .the many inquires that are constantly .being .received .concerning various activities on the campus.

"PUBLISH OR PERISH" STILL HAUNTS COLLEGE PROFESSORS

The Collegiate Press Service

Scholarly research and publication are still the primary considerations in evaluating a professor's teaching ability, according to a recent survey of deans at 1,110 colleges and universities by the American Council on Education.

While final decisions on a professor's teaching ability are usually made by deans and department heads, the direct and systematic sources of information most likely to measure a teacher's impact on the student are least likely to be used, the study said.

Evaluation is often carried on by osmosis; over 40% of the schools reported that they considered student opinion informally, gathered at random from casual or overheard conversations.

The study recommended several alternative techniques, reported in the Summer AEC Educational Record:

Direct classroom observation. Employed now in only 14% of the institutions and taboo in alsost 40%, the practice has declined substantially since 1961 when the last comparable survey was taken;

Carefully planned student questionnaires. While strongly endorsing consideration of this method, the AEC study noted that it is now used in slightly over 12% of the cases. This represents a drop from fourth place in 1961 to tenth place in a rank ordering of various sources for evaluation.

Grade distributions. The distribution of grades in a particular class of multi-section course emploving departmental examinations can be signifi cant if the instructors are aware of the specifi educational objectives of the course and if abilit is considered in rating student performance.

Deans were also asked whether any research had been done on the instruments used to rat teaching effectiveness. Only 1.7% answered affir matively.

Other findings revealed:

1. The larger the institution, the greater the reli ance placed on the judgment of departmenta chairmen and of committees in assessing teachin effectiveness.

2. Junior colleges rely more than do other types of undergraduate institutions on classroom visits, grade distributions, and long-term follow-up of students, with faculty research the last in the list of evaluating criteria.

3. While only 36.6% of the small liberal arts colleges report that all or most departments use research and publication as an indicator of teaching effectiveness, 70% of the university arts and sciences colleges regularly utilize such data. In the liberal arts colleges, informal student opinion is used to evaluate classroom teaching more frequently than research and publication but university colleges use informal student opinion only half as frequently as research and publication.

ANGEL FLIGHT PLANS ARE FLYING HIGH

September is here again and the beginning of a new school year. All campus organizations are planning their activities and among them is Angel Flight. This year we have a new commander, new pledges, and new ideas. This campus will see and hear much of Angel Flight and its plans.

Just a few of our definite activities are the uncut Bob Hope film to be shown in December and the Registration Dance February 3rd. Something of interest to many girls will be the talk on a career as stewardess given by a representative of the American Airlines second semester.

New Humor Cards Earn Students Money

There's a new form of college humor sweeping the campuses, and it ain't a magazine sized for a coonskin coat.

It's the humorous contemporary studio greeting card, priced from 35 cents to $5, which currently constitutes a sort of laugh-backlash against the solid sobriety of the academic community — the heavy study schedules, the serious political engagements, and the resolution of the survival of mankind.

United Card Company of Palatine, Ill., the world's largest exclusive publisher of contemporary cards, whose distributors are in constant touch with the campuses, reports that 1966 sales are outpacing those of a year earlier by 120 per cent. In great measure, this gain is attributed to students and faculty.

The colorful, side-splitting cards are being used in every possible context, according to Bob Roth, executive vice president. For example, one card entitled, "I'm sorry I haven't written" is being turned in by students with blank examination papers. Unpublished faculty members also find it useful for communicating with deans and department chairmen in soliciting promotions, Roth said.

There is one $5 valentine, whose dimensions are 18 x 30 inches which features a pair of jump-out clutching arms on the inside, also having a double purpose. Draft boards like it for men students, and department chairmen buy it for contract-awarding government agencies.

There's a passel of money in distributing United Card Company cards, according to Roth. Distributors set up exclusive displays in high-traffic locations, such as motels and hotels, restaurants, bowling centers, cocktail lounges and nightclubs, and campus gathering places. Many distributors enter the greeting card business on a part time basis, earning a net income of $75 to $125 weekly for a time investment ranging from 10 to 20 hours.

Revelers Sponsor Activities Nite

Tonite at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, the REVELERS will sponsor STUDENT ACTIVITIES NIGHT 1966.

This event is held at the beginning of every school year in order to acquaint the Freshmen with all the organizations on campus. At this time representatives from each activity will be available to talk with the freshmen and encourage participation.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES NIGHT is part of the Reveler's program "to encourage and stimulate freshman interest and participation in campus activities, and to channel spirit throughout the entire campus." All are urged to take advantage of this unique opportunity to learn about campus organizations.

Any R.S.O. group not yet contacted that would like to participate should contact the Revelers immediately.

FOOD FOR THOUGT; OR,
THE IMPOVERISHED STUDENTS' GUIDE TO CULINARY SURVIVAL

Chapter One
"A Prolegomena to Impoverishment"
By Jay Rosenberg

We may provisionally define an Impoverished Student as an individual who loves to eat and hates to cook. There are the merely Impoverished Students and really Impoverished Students. The really Impoverished Student is poor! In a cookbook writed for his attention, one may find such dishes as "Hamburgers that Bounce" (1 part meat to 6 parts flour), "Water Stew" (boil water; serve hot with bread), and "Spaghetti with 'Out' Sauce" (spaghetti without sauce).

The merely Impoverished Student, for whom this column is intended, on the other hand, need not be poor, though he usually is.

The average cost of on-campus eating in American colleges ranges upward from approximately fifty dollars per month, and can be absolutely abysmal. The Imperished Student wishes to eat better than that for about half the cost, and he can.

The series of columns of which this is but the first is a contribution toward a general theory of how to eat well on one dollar per day and live to tell about it. Short of satori, what more could you reasonably ask of a series of newspaper columns?

KITCHENS THEIR CARE AND FILLING

Kitchens contain the following two pieces of immovabilia without which all is for naught: one stove complete with oven and broiler, and one refrigerator complete with freezer. Equip yourself with one KITCHEN before doing anything else.

Now for the movabilia to fill CHEN contains the following, although you may wish to improvise:

1 large cast-iron skillet
1 2-quart casserole with cover
1 cover sufficiently large to cap above mentioned skillet
2 pots, both with covers
1 double boiler (purchased in a moment of madness)
1 coffee pot (I drink coffee)
1 each huge spoon with and without holes
1 pancake turner (not necessarily for turning pancakes)
1 grater
Assorted knives, forks, spoons and dishes

THE LOGISTICS OF KITCHEN-FILLING

There exist in America several fine organizations, such as the Good Will and the Salvation Army, designed expressly for the purpose of helping Impoverished Students fill up a KITCHEN with movabilia. Each year, non-impoverished non-students contribute thousands of perfectly functional pots, pans, dishes, cups, glasses, knives, forks and spoons to such organizations, which implements may then be resold to us at ridiculously low prices. Buy from them!

About the only item which you won't be able to purchase in such a locale is a good cast-iron skillet, because nobody ever gives away a good cast-iron skillet.

Get a new one at the hardware store. Season it by heating some cooking oil (just enough to coat the bottom of the pan) in it until it smokes. Keep the skillet seasoned by never scouring it with steel wool pads and/or cleaner. This is known as a Vicious Circle or a Good Thing. It also saves much dishwashing work for the Impoverished Student, who hates dishwashing more than anything.

THE SPICE RACK
FRIEND OF THE POOR

Now that both movibilia and immovabilia have been acquired, we can begin amassing edibl s, specifically spices. The SPICE RACK exists as a direct result of the Impoverished Student's basic orientation — impoverishment. Its purpose is encapsulated in the following Operating Theory:

98% of all good cooking being grounded in proper seasonings anyway, since you cannot afford to buy top-quality expensive food, buy inexpensive food and put top-quality seasoning on it. No one will ever know the difference.

Next: Your first recipe.

Among Impoverished Students of my acquantance, the following is sort of typycal:

ABSOLUTE BASICS:
Salt Black Pepper Sugar Paprika (Imported only!!) Whole Garlics Whole Onions
SPICES:
Imported Chili Powder Cayenne Pepper Ground Cumin Ground Allspice Curry Powder Ground Cinnamon Garlic Powder Garlic Salt Onion Powder Onion Salt Nutmeg

The Week in the Pros

LA Holds Slim Lead in NL

by MIKE CURRAN
Sports Staff

As the baseball season rolls into its final week, the Los Angeles Dodgers are clinging to a slim lead over the Pirates and Giants, while the Orioles in the American League are making plans for their first World Series paychecks.

Major league teams have begun to insert untried rookies into their lineups. The avid baseball fan picks up the morning paper and finds John Miller clouting a homerun in his first big league appearance, Bud Harrelson stealing home, and the Davis boys, Ron and Brock, leading the Houston Astros to victory.

Although his Oriole teammates are taking things easy, Frank Robinson is still giving 100%. He has as much chance of losing the MVP Award as Cassius Clay has of losing to Cleveland Williams. Frank is also in line for the triple crown if he can hold off Tony Oliva in the batting race.

Jim Nash and Tommy Agee are waging a torrid battle for the American League Rookie-of-the-Year Award. Nash, since being called up by by the A's in late June has hung up a 12-1 record and an impressive ERA. Agee is batting a solid .270 with 22 homers and 85 RBI's. He has stolen 40 bases and currently leads all major league outfielders in putouts.

In the senior circuit, Tommy Helms, Sonny Jackson, and Cleon Jones lead the pack in the rookie race. Each has played steady ball all year and each leads his club in the important runs scored department. The voting should be close, especially in the N.L., but at this point, it looks like Nash and Helms have the inside track

It's getting harder and harder to find a Yankee fan on campus. Small wonder. The Bronx "Boneheads" are fighting to avoid the cellar. The statistics show the Yankees to be sixth in batting, fifth in pitching, sixth in fielding. Why are they wallowing in the cellar? Choking in the clutch much? Ralph Houk promises fumigation.

Speaking of the Mets, a fellow by the name of Bob Shaw has won 10 games for them since his acquisition from San Francisco. You can bet the boys from the Bay wish they could do it all over again.

In pro football action, Green Bay, St. Louis and Dallas continued their winning streaks in NFL action yesterday while over in the AFL New York, Kansas City and San Diego re..tained their undefeated status.

The Packers, led by Paul Hornung's two touchdowns, topped Los Angeles, 24-13. Cleveland was upset by the Cardinals, 34-28, while the Vikings again failed, coming up second best by a 28-17 count to Dallas.

Joe Namath and the Jets rallied to a 16-7 victory over an inspired Bronco team. The Chargers stopped Oakland, 29-20, and the Chiefs fought off the Patriots, 43-24.

In other NFL games it was Philadelphia over the Giants, 35-17, Washington atop Pittsburgh, 33-27, Detroit a 28-10 victor over Atlanta, and Baltimore, behind the five field goals of Lou Michaels, a 36-14 winner over San Francisco.

Buffalo, defending AFL champion, gained its first win of the campaign by downing Houston, 27-20, on a late score.

Gridmen Big-Time

Bob Ellis made at least three notable defensive plays. The Beverly native saved a touchdown when he recovered quickly enough to deflect an apparent Beard TD toss. Later Ellis intercepted two of Beard's throws, one setting up the Redmen touchdown.

Soph McArdle made many good open field tackles. The 175-lb. cornerman met 232-lb. Pete Walton head on more than once and never gave an inch.

It's getting to be almost laughable when opponents try to run through Qualeyland. The 250-lb. Quail ate up Green leather luggers all afternoon.

The Redmen offensive machine picked up considerably from its Maine effort, especially through the air. Ever poised Greg Landry was 17-31 passing for 131 yards.

The offensive line, however, continues to have trouble making holes for UM ball carriers. The Redmen gained only 42 yards rushing against the tough Dartmouth defense.

UMass went bigtime and played big-time football all the way —except for those two plays.

Early Touchdowns Push Dartmouth Past Redmen, 17-7

by TOM FITZGERALD

HANOVER, N.H. — A 48-yard punt return by Sam Hawken and a 64-yard run by Gene Ryzewicz in the first quarter proved to be all the scoring Dartmouth needed as the Lambert Trophy winners scored a 17-7 victory over UMass here Saturday. The Ivy Leaguers spent the last three quarters repelling repeated Massachusetts scoring drives in a 17-7 victory.

Dartmouth's winning streak was thus extended to 12, while UMass lost its first game in the last eight.

The first quarter was a nightmare for the Redmen. The Fusiamen began the game with the same super-conservative offense that was good enough to beat Maine. However, the red-dogging Dartmouth linebackers repeatedly threw UMass back for huge losses by tackling the halfbacks before they could get started or by pouncing on quarterback Greg Landry before he could pass.

The Big Green emphasized an obvious Massachusetts weakness —lack of overall team speed, both in the line and in the offensive backfield. Dartmouth, on the other hand, had big mobile linemen with great lateral pursuit and a spectacular breakaway threat in the person of Ryzewicz.

Hawken opened the scoring when he returned a punt by Nick Warnock 48 yards for a TD. Hawken appeared to be stopped for little gain, but he broke through two apparently sure tackles. Moments later, Ryzewicz electrified the home crowd of 12,000 with a 64-yard score. There was nothing cheesy about this run as Rysewicz showed the moves of a Gale Sayers in faking out four different Redmen defenders en route to six points.

As the second quarter started, things looked bleak for Massachusetts. Landry began to open the stacked Dartmouth defense by throwing short passes to Durkin, Detore, and Warnock. Since the linebackers were forced to cover these men on passes, Greg had more time to operate; therefore the Redmen offense began to move. Shortly before the half ended Landry's passing had his team down to Dartmouth's 24, but four straight incomplete passes ended the threat.

UMass took the second half kickoff and began to move once again, driving from its own 35 to the Dartmouth 31. Key first downs in this drive were made by Detore on a pass reception, and by Tim Driscoll on a reverse. Yet once again the Big Green halted any further penetration when Detore was stopped for no gain on a fourth and two situation.

The defending Ivy League champs took over and began their only sustained drive of the game, marching 69 yards in 12 plays before the Redmen defense stiffened at the 10. Even so Bill Hay booted a 27-yd. field goal to put the home club on top, 17-0.

Bob Ellis intercepted a Mickey Beard pass early in the fourth quarter to start Massachusetts' desperation drive. Landry hit Warnock for a first down at the Dartmouth 26. Two personal fouls against Dartmouth helped move the ball to the one where Landry dove over for UMass' only score of the day.

Following Landry's touchdown, the Fusiamen held the Big Green on downs and took over on their own 10. Two personal fouls and another pass to Warnock moved the ball to the UMass 41. Greg Landry then surprised the Dartmouth defense by bursting up the middle for 18 yards on a quarterback sneak before he was caught from behind on the Dartmouth 41. But once again the UMass offense fizzled and Warnock punted to the six-yard line.

Ellis swiped another Beard pass to move the ball to Dartmouth's 26. A circus catch by Warnock put the ball on the nine, but with seconds left Landry was brought down on the two-yard line on fourth down.

The final score belied the closeness of the game.

PUNT UNDER PRESSURE — Nick Warnock displays form as he kicks 46-yard punt in second quarter. Bill Brandt of Dartmouth tries to block it.

Jeff Booters Out-Play UMass, Gain Hard-Fought 3-0 Victory

by TIM MURPHY

Exploiting the talents of two students of international soccer, Amherst College took the measure of UMass, 3-0, Saturday at Hitchcock Field, Amherst. The contest was the season's first for both clubs.

The game was liberally seasoned with a constant breeze, which was at times extended to heavy gusts, and as a result both attacks were somewhat innocuous in the early going.

Midway through the first period, however, it became apparent that the Redmen would be troubled by the Amherst foreward line. Inside left Cleanthis Nicolaides, a former member of the national team of Greece, spotted his center foreward Jaffer Kassamali, a native Tanzanian, who was open and headed for the UMass crease.

ELUDED REDMEN

Nicolaides eluded several of the Redmen at midfield and toed the ball to Kassamali who was thwarted in his scoring attempt on a fine defensive effort by U-Mass' Aba Ayanaba. The Jeffs continued to press the attack until near the quarter's end when UMass inside left Dick Rosoff kicked two at the Amherst net.

The first period closed without a score, though Redmen netminder garry Martin, author of four shutouts a year ago, was forced to come up with six saves on six shots, one of which hit the cross bar, as compared to two saves by his Amherst counterpart.

Central to the activity of the second quarter was UMass' failure to get a shot off at the Jeff goal while Martin was shelled by 11. Ayanaba was sensational on many Amherst drives. On one in particular, he slid to kick a shot by Bob Sherman out of danger.

Martin, too, was particularly sharp in the second canto but was victimized on a penalty shot to the upper right corner of the goal by Kassamali as time ran out in the half.

SHOT FOR SHOT

The Redmen mounted a much improved offensive attack in the second half. UMass matched the Jeffs nearly shot for shot through the third session, but only Kassamali was able to negotiate a score. His goal at 6:38 put Amherst up by 2-0.

In the fourth quarter, Coach Larry Briggs elected to move his halves up to the offensive half of the field, when UMass was in possession, to press an allout attack. The halfbacks brought the ball up field, enabling the foreward line to recoup and congregate near the Amherst net. Several efforts, however, were turned back before Amherst, blitzing downfield with the backline pulled near the middle of the field, knotted the twine with 17 seconds left in the game.

Nicolaides, who had assisted on the second Kassamali score, took a cross-goal-mouth pass to wind up the scoring.

Final statistics showed that Amherst had 29 shots on the UMass goal while the Redmen countered with nine. Martin was called upon to save 20 shots, Schwartz of Amherst only four.

"If we could have gotten more shots centered in front of the goal," Coach Briggs said, "the story might have been different. We weren't getting the shots and, in college play, you can't expect to score more than a goal for every 12 shots made."

Gridmen Play Big-Time, Except for Two Plays

by MIKE GOULD, Sports Editor

HANOVER, N.H. — It was an exciting game and the Redmen actually outplayed the favored Green for much of the contest.

But oh, those two plays.

The first of the shockers was a 48-yard punt return by Sam Hawken. The Redmen did not cover Nick Warnock's punt as well as they did his others, and Hawken took full advantage. The swift safetyman broke an almost sure tackle at the 40 and breezed easily into the end zone.

After the Redmen had controlled the football for some seven minutes, lightning struch once more, this time in the person of Gene Ryzewicz. The Springfield swivel - hipper took a Mickey Beard handoff at his 36, slipped to the outside and fought off a Rod Brooks effort to make it 14-0.

Outside of a Bill Hay field goal in the second half, however, the reknown Indian offense proved to be easy prey for the UM defenders. The Redmen pushed Dartmouth all over the field for much of the second half.

There were many standout performers in the game, mostly from the defensive teams. Dick Qualey, Dave Giarla, Mike McArdle, Paul Mlinar, Bob Ellis... Give credit to the entire defensive squad for a superb effort.

Offensive standout of the game for the Redmen had to be end Nick Warnock. The soph caught eight of Greg Landry's aerials, many in key situations to keep drives alive. It looks as though Fusia has found a successor to Bob Meers. Warnock also punted with great skill.

For Dartmouth, Ryzewicz showed why he is highly respected by those in the grid know. Gene made several fine runs in addition to his touchdown jaunt.

The remainder of Dartmouth's "Million Dollar Backfield" was well contained by the strong Redmen defense. Beard's passes were for the most part inaccurate, while Klungness and Walton ran as though they had just just got out of bed. Klungness fumbled thrice, and Walton was unreliable on the short yardage situation.

Replacing the injured Ed Cody in the third quarter, versatile

His fingers a blur of motion, the great master held his audience spellbound.

Montoya, Master Musician

by CARL KAMP

From start to finish the widely acclaimed Flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya held the attention of a capacity audience at Bowker Auditorium. The first few numbers seemed to muffle in fast passages and was probably caused by improper balance in the microphone.

Mr. Montoya's complete mastery of his instrument was evident from the start and it was clear why he has been acclaimed throughout the world for his playing.

Flamenco Music as played by Carlos Montoya follows established rhythms and chordal progressions but is unique in that they were originally composed only to accompany and provide the background for Flamenco dancers. Mr. Montoya was the first to use flamenco music as a solo medium for concert performances.

The use of a series of chords in a progression followed by variations was used in several pieces. "Zambrilla" in the first section and "Zapateao" in the second part were based on this structure.

Chord progressions are generally simple and are the same as might be found in current folk songs. It is the unique rhythms of flamenco music which provide its characteristic sound. In "Zapateao" Montoya plays the rhythm of the dance with the chords and then takes off on improvised passages.

Here he utilized repeated notes in sixteenths or scales and then back to the series of chords and the particular rhythm.

Certain techniques are more characteristic of flamenco guitar as opposed to classical guitar. The scales or variations which Montoya plays so well are played using the thumb on the lower strings rather than the fingers in "apoyando" or pulling manner. The "Soleares" in the first section (which was played instead of the Fandango) incorporated this technique.

One of the best played pieces was the "Rondena" which finished the first part of the program. He employs a slightly different tone scale and the melody was more outstanding than some of the others.

Negro Demonstrators Protest University-Sponsored Film

by GORDON DAVIDSON, News Editor

Negro demonstrators representing the Springfield chapter of CORE distributed pamphlets at Bartlett Hall last nite, protesting the showing of the film "Birth of a Nation".

The film, sponsored by the Speech Department of the University, was described by the demonstrators as "glorifying the Ku Klux Klan" and presenting a "stereotyped Negro image."

The protest began with a telephone call to President Lederle from the Springfield NAACP chapter, Monday night objecting to the showing of the film. The rights group the following morning, headed by Mr. Talbot Sman, sent a telegram to the Dean of Students office demanding that the University cancel the showing of the film, "so that further action would not be necessary."

The president answered Tuesday at 10:30 a.m. that the film would go on as scheduled, stating:

"We have no intention of withdrowing the film from the series. This would be censorship, and a violation of one of America's greatest freedoms. Birth of A Nation is a classic. It is part of our cultural heritage.

"Showing of the film is certainly not intended as an attack on Negroes, and it is an insult to the intelligence of our students to imply that by viewing this film they will become anti-Negro."

Richard Stromgren, instructor of speech at UMass and lecturer for the film series, said that part of his notes on D. W. Griffith's film point out the paradox in the film. He says, "Its technical innovations established virtually all the basic cinematic techniques and made the film a model for construction, both here and abroad, yor years to come.

"The paradox here is that despite these distinctions, the film has become somewhat of an embarrassment to the industry and to the nation. Periodic protests still follow its showing and the

by ELLEN LEVINE

Once again faculty, administrators and student representatives from the many student organizations on campus will gather for a lively and interesting weekend of debate and discussion.

The Student Workshop on Activities Problems, better known to UMies as SWAP, will begin this Friday evening Sept. 30.

Busses for The Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge will leave the S.U. between 4 and 5 p.m. Registration will take place at the Inn as soon as the delegates arrive. Dinner and the keynote address by Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Coordinator of Student Activities, will fill the early evening hours. Informal discussion will follow the address as delegates adjourn to enjoy the social atmosphere of the Inn.

Saturday will be the main discussion day as students, faculty, and administration separate into groups directed toward specific student interests. These groups include Communications, Fine Arts, Dorms, Greeks and Services.

In each group a discussion leader will guide the group towards discussion on pertinent campus issues related to the members of the group.

Dinner Saturday night will be followed by a dance and delegates will have an opportunity to meet with each other in a casual, off the cuff manner not available on campus.

The weekend will end on Sunday as delegates return by bus to campus. As in the past it is expected that SWAP will initiate new proposals, ideas and generate action and interaction between the students, administrators and faculty in dealing with and coping with vital campus issues.

Broken Egg to return. See page 5.

BELAFONTE IN PERSON

Belafonte Concert at Hicks Cage Oct. 2

Harry Belafonte will appear Sunday, Oct. 2, 1966, at 8:30 p.m. in the Curry Hicks "Cage", sponsored by the Student Union Program Council.

Harry Belafonte, today, at the pinnacle of a distinguished career, defies categorical definition of his art.

The content and quality of his presentations cannot be classified as belonging to one specific group, for Belafonte's art relates to everyone. Age, social standing, geographic location, language differences form no barrier to the sound and feeling of his art.

Nipsey Russell, one of the most literate of America's funny men, joins Harry Belafonte, for the first time, in a concert tour, with this engagement. The prolific Mr. Russell, whose easy verbiage punctuates his skill as a man of comedy, is a most natural choice for featured performer in this tour, for he is of that limited coterie of artist who draws their humor from experience. Originally a dancer, he has translated his talent at terpsichory into a fool-proof formula in winning laughter. He adds that vital ingredient in volume to this production.

Mr. Belafonte is joined by a new voice in this production... Nana Mouskouri from Greece. The delineator of a fresh and vibrant style, she sings fluently with feeling in French, German, Italian, Spanish and English in addition to her native Greek tougue. She is a welcome addition to the Belafonte pattern of perfection and sheer artistic beauty.

To see Harry Belafonte in person is more than an evening in the theatre...it is time spent in communicating with one's fellow, in understanding and practicing what we call our daily existence...it is an ear attuned to the footstep of experience and the heartbeat of expression.

Here is Harry Belafonte, the magical man of many moments.

Tickets are on sale in the Student Union Box Office.

"Activist Generation"

Are Students Really Revolting?

Two university presidents agreed Sunday there is a great deal of restlessness and uneasiness on the nation's college campuses—much of it due to the students' concern over the nation's affairs.

Kingman Brewster Jr. of Yale and President Clark Kerr of the University of California, appearing on the NBC radio and television program, "Meet The Press," said the American student is more aware of off-campus affairs than ever before.

Asked about the widespread revolt, Brewster said:

"I think it's more widespread than it is revolting . . . and has more to do with the society than it does with education."

In reply to a question about the large number of student protestors, Kerr said, "Well, just to begin with there are a lot more students than there ever were before."

Kerr, who faced a student revolt on California's Berkeley campus two years ago, said he was certain most students today were satisfied with the education they were getting and that the education was not the source of the uneasiness.

Students are a "self-motivated, detached, extraordinarily independent generation," Brewster said. "They feel free to be critical."

Kerr described them as an "activist generation in the sense of participation (and yet) individualism."

Asked if college professors play too great a role in shaping national policy, Brewster laughed and said:

"I think professors have to be judged just as though they were human beings. Some are equipped for public responsibility and some are not."

He said he believed they would play even a larger policy role in the future and "I think they should."

Physics Dept. Announces 12 New Appointments

The physics department at the University of Massachusetts has announced the appointment of ten new faculty members and two new research associates and plans for a new program in astrophysics and space sciences.

According to Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, head of the department, the appointments will expedite the development of the space sciences program and strengthen the existing University programs in the areas of high energy, solid state, nuclear, atomic and theoretical physics.

The new appointees are: Prof. E. R. Harrison of the Goddard Space Flight Center, Greenbelt, Md.; Arthur R. Quinton of the Univ. of Fla.; Assoc. Prof. Stanley Engelsberg of Princeton Univ.; William M. Irvine of the Harvard Col. Observatory; Robert V. Krotkov of Yale Univ.; Janice Button Shafer of the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley.

Also Asst. Prof. Thomas T. Arny of Amherst Col.; Frederick W. Byron of the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley; Wilfred E. Cleland from CERN in Geneva, Switzerland; Kenneth H. Langley of the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley and research associates Gerald W. Meisner of the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley; and H. Lee Watson of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton.

Dr. Irvine will be chairman of the astrophysics and space program; Prof. Harrison and Dr. Arny will be assigned to the program. Dr. Byron will be on leave during 1966-67 at the University of Brussels and Dr. Cleland will join the faculty in September of 1967, after spending six months at Brookhaven National Laboratory, Upton, L. I.

The University has received four new grants for the physics department totaling over $100,- from the National Science Foundation, bringing the total for the physics department in the past 18 months to 12. The latest grants are for undergraduate instructional and research support, and for graduate research support, according to Dr. Gluckstern.

The grants include: $7,800 for equipment for a new laboratory for sophomore physics majors, Robert L. Gray; $5,600 to supervise the program for participation of junior and senior physics majors in research, Dr. Raysearch into the optical propermond A. Patten; $45,300 for reties of semiconductors in high electric fields, Dr. Claude Penchina; $47,400 for research into atomic processes, using metastable hydrogen and helium beams and targets, Dr. Krotkov.

Berkeley's Red Coed

Everywhere she goes, somebody is always asking University of California senior Bettina Aptheker an obvious question: "What's a nice girl like you doing mixed up in communism?"

Her answer is also obvious.

"Well," she mugs, "who says I'm a nice girl?"

Who indeed. Not her own school administration, which feels she gives the campus a worse image than a panty raid. Not the local police who have slapped her in jail twice for rebellious activities. And certainly not the FBI, which views her as a honey-blonde Red whose objective is the owerthrow of American society.

But, so what? Being pleasant is hardly part of the young lady's design anyway. Hammer-and-sickle oriented Bettina Aptheker, 22, is far too busy being naughty to be nice.

Student Revolution

This school year, for example, she has it in mind to spearhead a student revolution which will hopefully lead to what she calls the "erosion of the democratic form of government" and eventual establishment of Kremlinlike leadership in the United States.

"It's coming," she insists. "The nation is disgusted. One day the people will go to the polls and throw both Republicans and Democrats out of office."

And elect whom?

"Communists! Who else?"

This is tough talk from a 110-pounder who wears her hair in a two-foot braid. But what Bettina lacks in muscle she makes up in Marxism. The daughter of Herbert Aptheker, a Communist theoretician, she is calloused with a thousand girlhood taunts ("Your old man is a crummy Commie!") and additionally armored with every idiom in the communal society's tireless thesis.

"Abolish private ownership," she insists.

"Socialize.

"Leninize.

"Centralize.

"Believe me," she goes on, "its the nation's only hope."

Just how much of this 1966 collegians are willing to swallow is quite naturally unknown. But there is some evidence that this year's student may be less inclined than yesterday's to shrug off communistic persuasion.

Bettina's own case gives a clue. Though openly Red, she has been voted into a key campus office by give-'em-hell students who, by either accident or design, support the leftist approach to school authority ("failing"), U. S. government ("hypocritical") and the war in Vietnam ("We are butchering that entire nation").

"I'm not a Commie," says one bearded Berkeley undergrad, "but Bettina's got guts. To some of us she personifies something that can help clean up this rotten country."

"What the hell," says another, "who cares what she is? She's talking peace, civil rights and guaranteed security. I'm all for the little broad."

To foment this sympathy, the Communist party is expected to back Bettina this year with a small army of scholar-agents. They, trained troublemakers, enroll in many major institutions for the expressed purpose of, as one of their pamphlets says, "starting programs of agitation in which the final result will be civil disobedience."

Thus teamed, Bettina and her aides most probably will move for continuance of already established procedures: student-faculty quarrels, police baiting, government baiting and "stop war" demonstrations.

They will noisily refer to adults as "bastards," recalcitrant fellow students as "scabs," Lyndon Johnson people as "traitors" and military authorities as "murderers."

Clearly, such a battle-ground has little room for a "nice girl." But Bettina doesn't really mind. She long ago decided to forfeit any established patterns of femininity.

And now, she admits, "Most people think I'm just a fink."

Broken Egg to Re-Open

Folk singing again contributes to the informal atmosphere at Broken Egg.

Friday evenings will be again filled with "happenings" as the "broken egg" coffeehouse reopens on September 30th at a new location. The new site for the coffeehouse will be Farley Lodge, a yellowish building behind Machmer Hall. The "egg" will be open every Friday from 8-12 p.m. Since the coffeehouse is run on a non-profit basis, there will be no admission charge.

The "broken egg" was created last year to provide students with a place where they can come together informally to enjoy folk-singing, plays, poetry, experimental films, and, most important, can engage in conversation stimulated by what they see and hear.

Thus, the coffeehouse urges students and faculty alike to bring their songs, poems, and drama to the "egg", so that they may express their own creativity as well as add to the experience of others.

The opening night of the "broken egg" promises to be very exciting. A play reading of The Last Word by James Broughton will be presented. The play illustrates the feelings of a husband and wife, who finally realize the insignificance of their life toegther a half hour before the end of the world.

Also featured will be folk-singing and other "happenings" So, for an evening of fun and challenge, come to the "egg" at its new location in Farley Lodge.

Scrolls Activities

The 1966-67 Scrolls are searching for more and more ways in which to serve the University. Led by President Elizabeth Rogers, Vice-President Ruth Aronson, Secretary Linda Donnelly, and Treasurer Elaine Levine, Scrolls have been on the move since Freshman Week.

In the dorms, Scrolls are keeping up monthly bulletin boards to remind the freshmen of various campus events. The Big and Little Sister Program is being expanded to include activities beyond the first Apple Munch. Of special interest is the hopeful establishment of a Big and Little Sister Program for commuting freshmen women to be set up in connection with a women's dorm.

Ushering at High School Guest Day, programs, and helping out at the Sophomore-Frosh picnic are also among current Scroll activities. This year Miss Schank of the University School of Nursing is serving as Scrolls' advisor.

Georgetown Ends Liquor Ban

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (AP) — Georgetown University has lifted its ban on drinking in men's dormitories in what officials described as a move to develop greater responsibility among students.

Rev. Anthony J. Zeits, director of student personnel at the Catholic - supported institution, said all male students would be allowed to keep and drink both beer and hard liquor in their dormitory rooms. The school has an enrollment of 6,700.

Father Zeits said penalties would be imposed against "those few students who misuse alcoholic beverages."

Senior Convocations

Senior Convocations will be held Thur., Sept. 29 and Oct. 6 at 11:15 a.m. They are held to acquaint the seniors with the facilities of the Placement and Financial Aid Office. Women will meet in Mahar Aud., while the men will meet in Bowker Aud.

These Convocations are sponsored by Mrs. Dorothy Hardesty, Placement Officer for Women; Mr. Robert Morrissey, Director of Placement and Financial Aid Services; and Mr. Robert Gailey, Placement Officer for Men.

Procedures for registering with the Placement Office will be discussed and credential forms will be distributed. Attendance at these convocations is strongly recommended. If one does not attend, he must stop at the Placement and Financial Aid Office in Machmer for information.

Even if some seniors have their immediate plans settled, all graduates should realize that if adequate credentials and references are not obtained and filed while on campus, it is very difficult to do this later on.

Last year over 6,000 interviews were conducted and over 500 businesses used the Placement Office's facilities.

DISLIKE YOUR GRADE? TAKE IT TO COURT

BOULDER, Colo. (CPS) — If you don't like your final grade, take it to court. In a precedent-making case a University of Colorado coed has done just that.

Miss Jacalyn Dieffenderfer has charged her English Literature instructor, Miss Kaye Bache, with improperly giving her a failing grade for misconduct — cheating on a final examination.

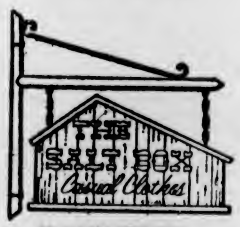
The 20-year-old junior seeks an injunction from Boulder District Court requiring the university to change her grade.

Instructor Bache contends that similarities between Jacalyn's and another student's examinations could not have occurred without cheating.

Miss Dieffenderfer maintains that her work in the literature course deserved a "B" or better.

A university disciplinary committee which was called to hear the case found the evidence against Miss Dieffenderfer insufficient to determine guilt. When no action was taken as a result of the committee decision, the coed decided the state courts were her only alternative.

The suit names as codefendants the University Regents, the President of the University, the Dean of Arts and Sciences, the Dean of Admissions and Records, the Registrar and the instructor.



University Attorney John P. Holloway said he will respond to the summons but is unsure of his legal approach

Milk for Vitality

by DEE SMITH, Day Editor

Milk is a glandular secretion from the breast or udders of animals that suckle their young. Because of its nutritional value, and especially its vitamin and calcium content, milk is very valuable in developing healthy, strong bodies.

It is interesting to note here, that historically, man has used milk from not only the cow, but also from the mare, goat, ewe, yak, camel, ass, zebra, reindeer, and llama as well.

Most milk however, which is sold in the United States, comes of course, from the cow. The milk in our dining commons for example, is cows milk. That which is dispensed through machines on campus is also cow's milk. Perhaps the very abundance of these machines is as encouraging an indicator as any of popularity of this delicious and wholesome drink on campus. It is much to the credit of our student body that they so wholeheartedly endorse this beneficial beverage.

One note which I perhaps should add in the event that conoisseurs are reading this definitive article is that the milk of Guernsey and Jersey cows is particularly rich in butterfat.

Mothers Mean Well

by JACK DEAN, Editorial Staff

Mothers are perhaps the nicest people I know and it is too bad that people ever have to get angry at them. For example, it is apparent that the distinguished matriarch below has suffered much in her lifetime. But for what? Just exactly what was her crime? What did she do to earn the approbation of those who ought to give her love and respect. Why are mothers treated so meanly by their progeny?

Are they blamed by their children for bringing them into the world? Do they get beaten for feeding their children, clothing them and nursing them when they are sick?

Where is the justice of this kind of treatment? Just exactly why are mothers made to suffer? If there is no reason for this brutality, then doggone it, it should be stopped! Mothers mean well and there is positively no excuse for their abuse.

It has occurred to us that perhaps this is an example of what is charitably called "milk toast editorializing."

Letters to the Editor

A Little Squirrel Told Me

To the Editor:

Perhaps this is not a paramount concern to everyone but I hope that in sharing my experiences, I will be able to inspire those who have had or may have a similar experience.

I was sitting beneath a tree yesterday. The tree if you'll recall which is right next to a clump of birches down by the pond. It is an oak I believe. In any case I was sitting there, quietly viewing the water and counting the waves as they rippled in and lapped against the shore when a squirrel above me happened to dislodge an acorn which struck me.

My attention was now focused on this furry little animal and as I watched, he proceeded to stuff nuts into what was apparently a hollow in the trunk. As I watched, I began to think when all of a sudden it came to me.

I was like that squirrel. Forever stuffing knowledge into my brain so that someday, like the squirrel, I would be able to raid my cache and make use of what was stored there.

Mike Gould

Have a Heart

To the Editor:

I don't know how many people have seen him but there is a poor lonely man who wanders the walks of Amherst in his rags and solitude. What is wrong with the people around here that nothing is done to aid this poor individual? Doesn't anyone care? What kind of heart would permit him to continue in his deluded fashion. Here is an individual who can be helped. Here is an individaul who needs to be helped. How uncomfortable he must be underneath that beard and how disgusted he must be that nobody is even concerned enough about his welfare to make him shave it off.

Restitution is in order. It seems that the very least that could be done would be to invite him to the Homecoming Dance where the cheery faces and jovial companionship would perhaps erase from his mind some of the cold, inhuman treatment which he has been accorded in the past.

C. H. Kamp

Bend to the End

To the Editor:

There is a time for silence and a time for talk. This is one of those times when I feel the need to communicate my feelings to others.

In today's fast-paced society it is often necessary to revamp one's thinking and conclude with what is expediant and not necessarily what is right. I feel very strongly about this. And I abhor the conditions which make this moral rape and self-debasement necessary.

There is hope still however. There is hope that the people who are bending so far backwards in an attempt to achieve practical ends will lean a little too far and fall over. This would necessitate their replacement and introduce the possibility of less flexible contortionists.

B. Rappaport

To the Point

To the Editor:

It is with much regret that I feel it is my duty to write in and comment that a correction should be made. Consider the possibilities of last Friday's editorial. Just exactly what does the paper think it is trying to prove? If ever there was a crying need, there is one now, and I certainly hope that my letter will in some way be able to elucidate and expedite matters on this and similar tacks.

Name withheld by request

CORRECTION

In Monday's Collegian, I quoted President Lederle as saying that student publications do exist "as a kind of laboratory for the purpose of testing the absolute outer limits..."

The actual quotation was to the effect that student publications do not exist as a laboratory for the purpose of testing the absolute outer limits.

I express my sincere apology for this gross error.

To Suspend U. of Minn. White Frat

The University of Minnesota chapter of Sigma Chi fraternity has been threatened with suspension January 1, 1968, unless the chapter can prove before then that it is free to pledge and initiate members without discrimination.

The decision of the All-University Judiciary Council stemmed from an incident last April in which the national Sigma Chi organization suspended a chapter at Stanford University after the chapter offered a bid for membership to a Negro student. Several chapters around the country have been suspended from their campuses since that time. The national has denied it suspended the Stanford chapter.

Donald Zander, director of Minnesota's Student Activities Bureau, presented the Stanford incident as evidence of membership discrimination by the national organization.

THE PARKING SPACE

by Franz Calf-ka

It was late evening when K. arrived. The Fall term had just begun at the University. Since he was in a hurry, he looked up and down the deserted streets for a parking place. Unfortunately, all of the numerous parking spaces were labled "No Parking" or "Tow Zone." But K. continued searching for a legal parking space as he might have searched for the answer to a problem of philosophy. K's efforts were less than successful, however, and minutes of searching drew on into hours and eventually into days.

As K. drove round and round the University, the roads and buildings became very familiar to him. As years went by K. learned his way so well that he could drive his route with his eyes closed! (Of course he could not find a parking place with his eyes shut, but K. had seen "No Parking" signs for so long that he had all but given up hope).

Years passed and K. grew older. Weakness and the infirmities of old age caught up with him. One day K. grew so weak that his foot fell off his car's accelerator pedal. As his car drifted to a stop K. was accosted by a University security guard.

K. was quickly losing consciousness but he mustered enough strength to ask the officer, "May I park here?" The officer answered:

"Oh, yes. This parking space was put here especially for you. It was so designated by the Board of Trustees when you were a freshman. But you know how red tape is in the upper echelons." The security officer continued talking about bureaucracy at the University, but K. had already lost consciousness. His life and his search had come to their end.

Faculty Row Still Raging At St. John's University

Controversy again raged at St. John's University after a charge that the former president of a professors' association was forced to resign from the faculty because of his role during a walk-out by 200 teachers at the Jamaica campus.

Dr. Andrew H. Robinson, ex-president of the American Association of University Professors during the March 9 walk-out, was told that he would be paid for the year if he resigned, according to an article by Father Peter O'Reilly in a Chicago quarterly, Continuum.

Father O'Reilly, head of the anti-administration forces, said that a high-placed member of the university's administration telephoned Robinson in June and told him:

"You're not interested in coming back, are you? You'll find an unfriendly atmosphere."

When the call was placed, Robinson was on a leave of absence and serving as a visiting professor at the University of Ottawa.

Father O'Reilly wrote in the article that Robinson, an associate professor of philosophy at St. John's, had a written agreement to return under contract to the university.

He told the unidentified caller that he knew the situation, but had been promised a contract and intended to return to St. John's.

Later, according to the article, St. John's University invited Robinson to return to New York at the school's expense for a meeting with Father Joseph T. Tinnelly, special counsel to the Board of Trustees.

When he arrived, Robinson was told flatly that he would get no contract, but that he would be paid his salary for the current school year if he resigned, the article charged. Father Tinnelly confirmed the resignation, but denied that it had been demanded.

His successor as president o the AAUP, Richard Wall, an as sociate professor of English, i not at St. John's this year either

The 200 St. John's Universit faculty members walked ou and then picketed last winte to protest the school's failure t meet salary standards prevale at other colleges and universitie The walk-out was triggere when the teachers learned that St. John's had $2.5 million in its treasury while refusing to meet the teacher's salary requests.

social implications of the film make it distasteful to many, even today.

"Birth of A Nation, however, takes its rightful place among the high points in the development of cinematic art. The superiority of its construction earned for Griffith the title, 'father of film technique'!"

Members of the administration, including Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Dean William Field, Colonel Marchant, head of University security, met Tuesday afternoon and decided to apply the University policy on demonstrations to the Negro demonstrators..

The policy permits picketing which does not interfere with the flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic. But students are not allowed to carry offensive signs or picket inside of a building. Unsuccessful attempts were made by the administration to meet with representatives of the rights groups.

The film was shown to a capacity crowd, and the demonstrators distributed pamphlets which asked students to question the "responsibility of the artist in a racist society."

The demonstrators claimed that "rightest groups all over the country are attempting to have the film shown," and that they wish to prevent such public presentations.

Carlos Montoya Displays Guitar Mastery

Keeping a steadying rhythm on the bass string of the guitar with the thumb, the melody was then played on the top strings with the fingers.

Striking the strings in rapid succession with the fingers the melody seemed to follow evenly without interruption. With a melody and bass accompaniment being played at the same time Mr. Montoya achieved the effect of two and sometimes three guitars at once.

In the "Zambra," Montoya showed that two hands are better than one. Normally the right hand fingers strike the strings while the left plays the different notes on the finger board.

In parts of this piece and in several others Montoya omitted the right hand and employed only the left to play the notes. This is achieved by hitting the strings in a hammer-like manner between the desired frets.

In this piece Montoya uses his right hand to tap out rhythms on the face of the guitar while keeping notes going by hitting the strings at the same time.

A guitar is a versatile instrument and can be used to achieve many varied effects. The first encore after a standing ovation, proved that Montoya was a master of all the subleties of his instruments.

Mr. Montoya, in heavily accented English explained that there is holy week in Spain when the statue of the virgin Mary is carried through the streets in a procession that would stop when a flamenco dancer would perform on a balcony above the street. The name of the piece was "Saeta" and what Mr. Montoya had tried to explain in English became crystal clear when he played it on the guitar.

By wrapping the two bass strings around each other he sounded the rat-tat-tat of the drums softly and then coming closer and closer.

Next, on the higher strings, we heard the trumpets or bugles with ringing clarity. As the music drew closer a flamenco dancer was represented by improvised single note runs and then the music began to move away again.

First came the trumpets and then the drums with a strong beat. The sould of drums gradually faded away into the distance and only the applause broke the vivid image Montoya had created with his guitar.

A version of the ever popular Malaguena was the second encore and though every guitarist plays some rendition of it, arranged by Montoya it was now new and exciting. Closing with a song "just for us" Carlos played a novel flamenco interpretation of Saint Louis Blues.

This completed a varied concert of Flamenco music showing that the flamenco guitar is truly capable of providing a complete solo concert although originally intended to be used for accompaniment to dancers.

Montoya Concert Scores Big Success

by ANDREA BALBONI, News Staff

Last evening Carols Montoya, world famous Flamenco guitarist, enchanted an overflow crowd at Bowker Auditorium in the first concert of the season.

Although every available space in the auditorium was taken, not a sound could be heard except the stirring rhythms of Spanish music.

All of Montoya's pieces were received enthusiastically, especially a romantic number entitled "Media Granadina". Another favorite of the evening was a lively melody called "Zambra". The pieces "Malaga" and "Zapateao" were also received very favorably.

The audience showed the guitarist its sincere appreciation for a wonderful evening by giving him three resounding ovations. In turn, he honored his audience by playing three extra pieces. The last piece, a Flamenco style version of "Saint Louis Blues", arranged by Montoya himself, especially delighted the crowd.

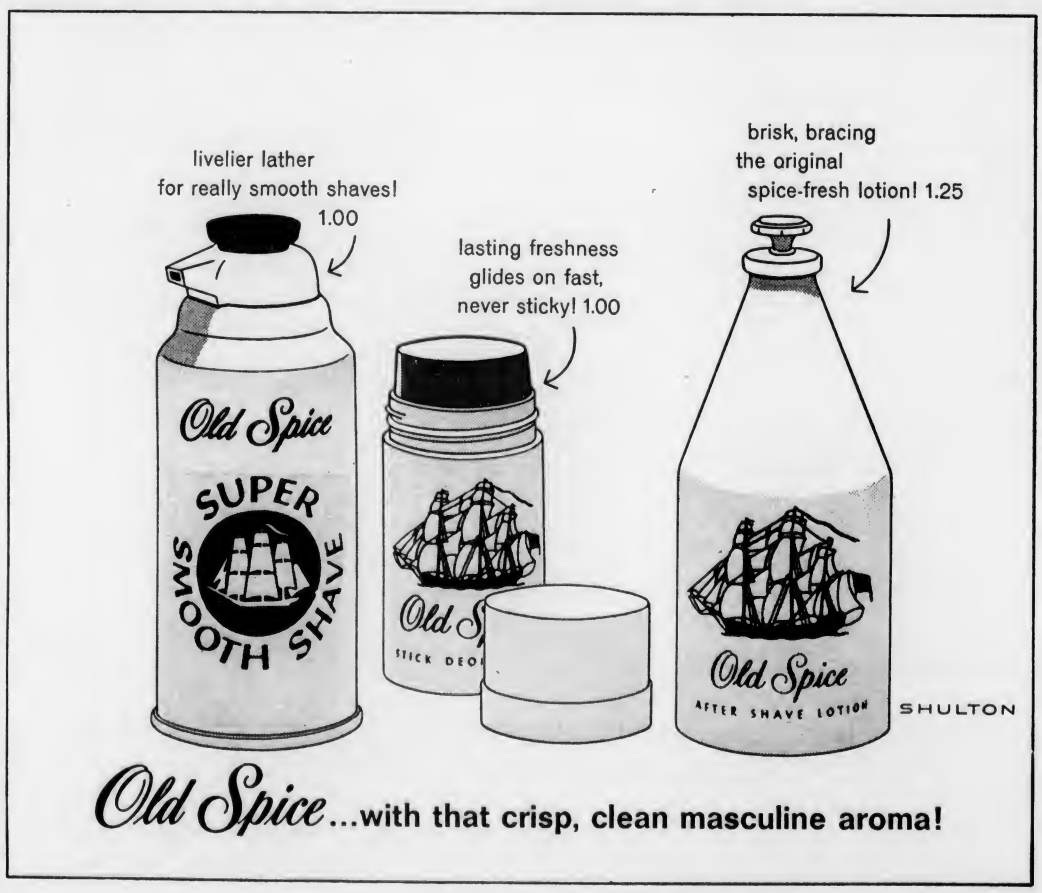
During the entire evening the attention of the audience was fixed on only Montoya. No one in the audience was in a hurry to leave, and the performer himself seemed perfectly happy to keep on playing to an interested and appreciative crowd. The evening proved to be a very successful opening of this year's concert season.

SCIENCE FICTION

Active 3-Day Convention Planned

"Boskone III," the third semi-annual Boston regional science-fiction, will take place this Saturday, October 1 through Monday, October 3 at the campus of M.I.T. in Cambridge.

Registration opens at 10 a.m. Saturday morning, and the program will get under way at 11 a.m. with a film, "Daughter of Dr. Jekyl," a science-fantasy chiller.



Dr. Isaac Asimov, author of over 70 books of science and science-fiction, will speak Saturday afternoon. Dr. Asimov's Foundation trilligy won this year's award as the best science-fiction series of all time at the World Science Fiction Convention in Cleveland.

The Sunday schedule will begin at 11 a.m. with a talk by Mr. Erwin Strauss, vice-president of the M.I.T. Science Fiction Society, about the efforts currently being made to have a world S-F convention held in Boston.

Boston was one of four cities bidding at the Cleveland convention earlier this month to become the site for next year's world convention. Since New York won the bid for next year's convention, Boston is trying for 1970, when the convention's rotation plan will again gring the convention to the east coast.

On Monday evening, John W. Campbell, editor of Analog, one of the world's leading S-F magazines, will speak. Mr. Campbell also spoke here last year.

Although the Science-Fiction Club at the University is not sending an official delegation, any person interested in attending Boskone III can contact the Club's publicity chairman, Joe Ross, in 2212 John Adams (tel. 546-8920), for further information.

SIX STUDENT DEMONSTRATORS LOSE THEIR 1-A APPEALS

Six University of Michigan students who sat-in at the Ann Arbor draft board last fall and were thereupon declared 1-A have lost their final appeal.

The Presidential draft appeal board announced last week (Sept. 19) that the six men are eligible for induction as a direct result of their protest, which allegedly violated Selective Service law. The students were protesting U.S. policy in Vietnam.

A restraining order will probably be sought in the courts to prevent their induction, however, a spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, which is representing the students, said later.

"We think the courts will take the use of Selective Service System to punish dissenters more seriously than Gen. Hershey does," he added. Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey is national director of the Selective Service System.

After the sit-in at the Ann Arbor draft board, 13 Michigan students were reclassified, and five won back their student deferments through appeals. The cases of two others are still pending.

Michigan Selective Service Director Col. Arthur Holmes said that the six probably would not be drafted as long as they have legal action pending in the courts.

Col. Holmes was not very optimistic about their chances, however. "They have a right to the suit, but I don't know what it would be about," he said. "The courts have never ordered a draft board to hold up induction."

"Besides," he added, "the law says that the decision of the presidential appeal board is final." The three-man board is appointed by President Johnson.

University President Harlan Hatcher voiced dismay over the decision. He had earlier suggested that the use of the Selective Service as a "punitive measure . . . warps and could even destroy the entire concept of the draft. I don't think you should draft a student because he protests."

But Col. Holmes contended, "They've been given all their rights and benefits. Somebody has got to go into the service. I don't feel these individuals are any different than anybody else."

The Administrative Council of Antioch College recommended last week that the school stop ranking students for the Selective System.

The action is subject to approval by the college's Board of Trustees at its November meeting and to further discussion next term. The elimination of class rankings for the Selective Service System would take effect in July, 1967.

The action was taken with the clear approval of college President James P. Dixon, who in an unusual show of support cast his vote for the measure. Normally the president votes on the Council only to break a tie.

The Council is composed of faculty, administration, and student representatives. The vote cut across group lines, and the two students split.

President Dixon said that he supported the policy change so long as it was made on educational grounds and wasn't "interpreted as opposition to the war in Vietnam or as an institutional stand of civil disobedience."

Philosophy Professor George Geiger charged, however, that the real reason for the policy change was political. He warned that the change would make Antioch "even more monolithic," driving off students of a more conservative bent.

JUNIOR CLASS EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OPENS ACTIVITIES FOR YEAR

by JERRY HORVITZ
Staff Reporter

Last Sunday evening the Executive Council, representing the junior class, opened its activities for the forthcoming academic year.

Approximately sixty members sat in the Council Chambers of the Student Union and listened to President Richard Wood outline the purposes, activities and organizational framework of the Executive Council.

President Wood began by making it clear that the purpose of the Council was to "make and form class policy" and that it was not solely the responsibility of the Executive Council, but of each member of the junior class.

He said that the class policy was now "opened to the public." He welcomed any member of the junior class, who has a desire, to work on any activity which the class may sponsor.

Plans for the Winter Carnival were discussed with Wood illustrating the committee structure which would be responsible for all aspects of the carnival. All members of the council were asked to make preference as to which committee they would prefer to serve on. Wood also let it be known that if any junior had a desire to serve on one of the said committees, he was to contact him or one of the chairmen.

Publicity — Dick Moriority
Activities — Karen Rose
Atmosphere — Liz Lenfeld
Hospitality—Claudia Dembski
Decorations — Mary Shilu Ryan

Wood made it clear that this year funds were available to present one of the most exhaustive Winter Carnivals in the school's history. He said that as much as forty-seven thousand dollars could be spent, but this was a limit.

After the business of the Winter Carnival was disposed of Wood outlined the representative structure of the Council itself. The council is apportioned by

1) Each dormitory on campus having at least one representative.

2) Non campus housing units such as fraternities, sororities, and commuters having a proportional representation equal to its proportionate number in the student body.

3) The rest of the Council chosen at large by the class officers.

Casting Completed For "Carnival"

Casting has been completed for the fall production of the UM Operetta Guild, "Carnival!" Many new faces, several of them freshmen, will appear along with several of the older ones. The characters will be as follows:

Lili — Heddy Zirin, Smith '69
Paul Berthalet — Robert Emerson, '67

BIG HOLE—President Lederle carries the ball through a big hole for a long gainer in the opening ceremonies of the Intramural football program. Blocking for the leading ground gainer is John Conlon, Associate Dean of SBA, and Warren McGuirk, Dean of School of Physical Education.

Intramural Elevens Fielded

by DAVE JARNES
Sports Staff

President Lederle helped inaugurate the 1966 touch football season Monday night as a record crowd of over 1000 cheered their favorites. Several close games, particularly in the IFC, highlighted the heavy schedule.

In the wildest game of the night Bill Cannata's three TD's sparked ASP to an amazing 27-26 comeback against PMD after ASP trailed 12-0 at the half.

KS, last year's IFC champ and campus finalist, cruised to an easy 31-6 win over ATG. Stanley Karp made an impressive debut as AEP's quarterback with a 13-27 performance while AEP whipped PSD, 25-7.

The passing combination of Jim Donahue to Jeff Larson carried LCA to a 26-12 victory over TKE. Larson had eight receptions and three TD's while Donahue was 24-31. SAM trailed ZN only 7-0 at the half, but lost 26-0.

Another tight battle saw BKP overcoming an 18-12 halftime deficit to beat TC, 25-24. Rounding out fraternity play, SPE edged out QTV, 13-7, as Goose Sagesse starred on defense.

The Chadbourne Maroons served notice that they aren't about to relinquish their dorm title when they trounced the Barracudas 31-0. Dave Sears led the attack with three touchdowns. An identical 31-0 count saw the Grants triumphing against the Buffaloes. Ed Shannon caught four touchdown passes from Doug Meyer.

An intercepted lateral for a touchdown broke the backs of the Webster Rams in the Flaming A's 19-6 decision. The Panthers had three touchdowns called back in a 15-13 loss to the Mills Birches. An 18 point second half gave the Bruins a 25-19 win over the Broncos.

In other dorm games the Aces blanked the Phallics, 21-0, the Colonials upset the Jaguars, 20-7, the Leopards nipped the Commanchees, 9-7, on a Henry Ford score, the Patriots turned five interceptions into a 32-0 win over the Panthers. The Cougars cruised to a 27-14 decision after running up a 20-0 halftime lead.

Turning to the independents, Dick McInerny's three TD passes to Jim Berk enabled the Hangovers to topple the Bombers, 25-12. Land Architecture shut out the Fisheries, 19-0; the Froshites rolled over the Numerals, 32-7, the Foundry whipped Adams, 19-6, and the Griffins beat the Saints, 20-6.

St. Clair, Anderson to Lead Veteran Harriers

by TERRY CARPENTER,
Sports Staff

The cross country team has been doing double sessions twice a week in preparation for a schedule which pits them against five of the top six teams in New England.

Led by Coach William Footrick, currently in his 12th season as cross country and track mentor, the team begins activity at 6:30 two mornings a week while training during regular afternoon sessions.

With the addition of several runners who copped the New England freshman title a year ago, the team appears much stronger. Coach Footrick has all of last year's runners back, including co-captains Steve St. Clair and John Anderson.

In a recent time trial on the home course, sophomores Marc Gelinas, Charley Lang and Paul Hoss placed 1-2-3. They were followed by St. Clair and Anderson. Junior Greg Bowman and senior Bob Croigin closed out the top seven finishers.

The team's initial encounter is Saturday at Franklin Park, Boston, against Northeastern and Maine. Northeastern recently drubbed Yankee Conference champ New Hampshire.

Maine, bolstered by a strong, young contingent, is expected to be much improved over last year. UMass has failed to win the Northeastern-Maine meet since 1962.

"NO CURFEW" CAUSES CLOSING HOUR PROBLEMS

by GENA COREA, Staff Reporter

This year girls returned to the campus to find the old rules governing residence halls swept away and the new rules not completely in effect. Counselors were no longer in charge and, for many, there was some doubt about exactly who was in charge.

Orders no longer came from counselors with the various deans and multiple committees sending only suggestions or guidelines.

Individual dorms reacted differently to this situation.

IN BROOKS HOUSE, the residents held a house meeting and eight girls volunteered to draft a constitution.

Betty Chambers of Brooks said, "We figured no one was going to tell us what to do, so we got together, decided what we wanted and wrote a constitution."

This document is now ready to be ratified, rejected, or altered by the entire house.

IN KNOWLTON HOUSE, the girls elected a Standards Committee. Each girl would have 15 minutes per semester to use for emergencies if she could not come in exactly when the doors were locked. If a girl exceeds 15 minutes, she must appear in front of the Standards Committee.

The girls discussed this system in their individual corridors and voted to adopt it.

According to Denise Donnelly, house chairman, the girls adopted this policy because they do not always have someone to stay up and open the door for latecomers. With this system, girls on the first floor will not be awakened at all hours of the night by someone knocking on the door.

Aside from some confusion, Miss Donnelly said that the girls were "really enthusiastic about the new system. They're a lot more aware of what's involved in running a dorm."

THE GIRLS in Mary Lyon felt some of the same confusion girls in other dorms were experiencing.

They have not set up a Standards Committee because they are waiting for the Women's Affairs Committee of the Student Senate to issue a statement on the jurisdiction of the committee.

In many dorms, including Leach and T-2, some confusion was caused by a directive from Women's Affairs on the screening of applicants for the Standards Committee.

This was subsequently cleared up and it was made plain that a Standards Committee was only a suggestion and not mandatory.

BECAUSE OF the difficulty of finding enough competent men to work during the undesirable hours of the early morning, the University has been having trouble hiring security guards.

The lack of security guards confuses the curfew system. In many dorms, if a girl wants to come in after the doors have been locked and asks her roommate to open the door for her, this has been allowed.

HAMLIN HOUSE, after asking Mrs. Isabelle Gonon, assistant dean of women, did not allow this arrangement.

When asked about coming in after curfew, during this interim period, Mrs. Gonon said, "They're not supposed to. We're fearful from the point of view of security. Safety and imposition on others are the concern."

If a girl must come in after curfew, Mrs. Gonon would rather have her call the head of residence and have her open the door. This is, however, wearying on the housemothers, who have had to stay up quite late during this interim period.

There would be no penalty for coming in late.

COMMENTING ON the current situation in women's dorms, Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Co-Ordinator of Student Activities, said, "Our big problem was that we had so little time to implement the new system before students returned in the fall.

"I really feel confusion reigned because we were not able to communicate effectively with training sessions. We didn't have the time or the organizational talent to run adequate training sessions for students and staff to work out and resolve these problems."

After the confusion about the Standards Committee and difficulties that have arisen in Van Meter and Knowlton, Dr. Noffsinger says he recognizes the importance of having proper channels for taking care of complaints.

"We can't handle problems if we don't know what they are. We want problems brought out into the open where they can be cleared up."

Dr. Noffsinger noted that this is "a time of testing and trying" for the dorms.

WBZ RADIO TO AIR PROGRAM ON UMASS SELF-CURFEW SYSTEM

by JANE ROLAND
Staff Reporter

Three representatives from the University went to Boston Wednesday afternoon to record a program on University Reform for Bob Kennedy's WBZ-radio Contact show.

The three, Dr. Mark Noffsinger, coordinator of student activities and chairman of the Student Life Committee, Senator Betty Chambers, and Robert Wilfong, publicity chairman of the University Reform Committee, spoke on student rights and the changes in the University that have made the self-curfew system possible.

The discussion will be aired over WBZ-radio on Sunday night, Oct. 9.

In answer to a question brought up by Bob Kennedy, referring to the In Loco Parentis argument that it is the University's responsibility to take over the supervision of students that was formerly held by the parents — Robert Wilfong pointed out the differences in life at home and that at school.

"No matter how many rules and regulations there are at the University, we must recognize that the student is not at home and is in a different situation from his life at home.

"The University cannot replace parents because the relationship between child and parents is a personal one. Between students and the Administration there can hardly be a one-to-one relationship."

Betty Chambers added that "although my father had me return home at a certain time, and always waited up for me, it was something we had agreed on together through long discussion."

During the program, Dr. Noffsinger told of the University evolving into maturity. Accordingly, the school is now at the point where the physical phase of building is under control—buildings are up and new faculty members have been hired. Now it is time for the entire Community to concentrate on what kind of a place UMass will be, and what its relation with the student will be.

Also during the tape-recorded session, the subject of academic reform came up. Said Wilfong, "The social problems that were faced last year were those that had to be solved before any major academic changes could be made.

"Although the social issues seem less important, the student had to be respected before he could make decisions affecting his academic life.

"Before the student could make decisions affecting his academic life," continued Wilfong, "he had to be responsible for those decisions affecting his personal life.

"There can be no true intellectual atmosphere as long as the student is treated like a child in his dormitory—told when to come in, punished for breaking rules, having no hand in the running of the dorm."

Excerpts of the show were played Thursday night, Sept. 29, as part of the regular Bob Kennedy Contact program featuring the president of Parson's College, a profit-making school which does not flunk out students, regardless of their average.

Another taping is planned for sometime next month.

600-lb. Bull Moose Plagues Amherst

by BOB GORMAN
Staff Reporter

If you never saw a wild bull moose, now is the time. There is a 600 lb. bull moose feeding with a herd of Hereford cattle in North Amherst.

However, if the local landowners and the Conservation Officers have their way, no one will get to see the moose.

It's not that anyone has anything against the moose. It's the people that are dangerous. Some die-hards have jumped the fence that encloses the pasture to get an eye-to-eye picture of the moose.

If the crowds continue to come, the moose will probably end up at the Franklin Park Zoo in Boston since he is property of the M.D.C. which is in charge of the zoo.

No one knows where the moose came from. He showed up in Northfield two weeks ago and stayed at the Herold Newton's dairy yard with a herd of cows.

The moose was tranquilized and sent to Quabbin Reservoir when Newton became afraid of the moose's reaction to a wild crowd of people.

But, since it's that time of year, the moose needs a mate. Tuesday night as a local gardener was tending her beets, she saw a moose wander through her yard.

The next morning as Dr. Ruder, an Amherst veterinarian, went to work, he looked at his herd and saw the moose.

Things haven't been the same since. The moose is a perfect gentleman, but the people are acting like animals.

Dr. Ruder and the state, which owns the moose, will let it stay in Amherst as long as the crowds don't arouse the moose.

So wait a few weeks before you go to see it. In the mean time, look in any encyclopedia and you'll see exactly what he looks like. However, our moose has flourescent orange antlers—compliments of the Mass. Conservation officers.

Student Senate Amends Budget Act of 1966-67

A budget act of $262,885 for the fiscal year 1966-67 was authorized as amended at Wednesday's Student Senate meeting.

Outstanding in this budget act was the Collegian budget of $74,788. The request for a Volkswagon bus passed by the Senate last spring was withdrawn by the Collegian. Funds were assigned for Collegian staff recruitment and to acquaint the community of the paper's operational procedure.

The Collegian also announced that the number of copies printed each issue would be increased to meet the requests from faculty and UM staff members.

The Index budget of approximately $60,000 includes funds for an additional 100 pages of colored pictures.

Gamma Sigma Sigma and Flying Redmen budgets were also passed.

President Greenquist announced that at a recent Athletic Council meeting it was confirmed that the present ticket policy will be unchanged. Since this policy allows for the sale of unclaimed tickets.

Concerning the complaints over the lack of seats, it was reported that UM students take up three stadium seats per two students.

Students were again reminded that there is still a need for new members on all Senate committees.

NES Seeks Volunteers To Tutor In Springfield

by NANCY ABRAMS, Staff Reporter

The Volunteers for the Northern Educational Service, a Registered Student organization, is now recruiting volunteers to tutor children in the disadvantaged areas of Springfield. NES is financed by the federal Office of Economic Opportunity and is affiliated at UMass with the School of Education.

THIS YEAR twelve Western Massachusetts colleges and preparatory schools will be affiliated with the program, including Amherst, Smith, and Mount Holyoke. NES has bought a new bus, insuring an efficient transportation system.

NES operates several centers in Springfield. Here the neighborhood children can find a clean and quiet place to study. Each center has a well-stocked library of textbooks, magazines, fiction for all age groups, and teaching aids. Special interest clubs also meet at each center. Counseling and trips are offered, too.

THE CENTRAL feature of the center, however, is the tutoring program. Any child who is having difficulty with schoolwork, be it learning the alphabet or doing modern math or chemistry, can request to be assigned to a tutor. This tutor will meet with him once a week.

NES "tutees" often improve in their studies and bring home report cards which they can be proud of and which may be the opening to a brighter future. But even more important, they gain a friend—an older person whom they can really talk to and who will show them a better way of lift than they will learn about on the streets.

The NES bus will leave from the Student Union Monday through Friday at 2:30 and 6:30. Since the tutors have been asked to help pay for the bus, a small amount will be collected from each tutor as a yearly dues.

AN ORGANIZATIONAL meeting will be held soon. At this time Andrew Griffin from the administrative staff of NES will speak, and each tutor will be able to register. All interested in tutoring or desiring more information on NES are urged to contact Barbara Henry at 424 Thoreau or Gerri Genera at 369 Hills South so a time convenient to all can be decided upon for the meeting.

UMASS ROUND-UP

Grant to Study Condensation of Steam

The United States Navy Office of Naval Research has granted the University of Massachusetts $26,733 to continue a research study on the dropwise condensation of steam.

The project, under the direction og Dr. L. H. S. Roblee, Jr., associate professor of chemical engineering at UMass, will study systems in which steam condenses on a surface. In such systems, the heat transfer can be significantly improved if the condensation forms in droplets rather than a film.

At present, the reason for this is not clear. However, knowledge of the factors affecting and promoting the phenomenon are important. For example, in a spacecraft or a submarine where space is limited, the size of a heat exchanger required in a particular application could be considerably reduced by insuring dropwise condensation.

Current work on the project involves taking high speed motion pictures of the condensation phenomenon to determine droplet size distribution, growth rate, population density and movement. These observations, correlated with physical determinations of heat fluxes and temperature variations, will aid in developing a more detailed understanding of the mechanism of the condensation phenomenon.

PLACEMENT STAFF INCREASED

Two new staff members have been appointed to the University of Massachusetts Office of Placement and Financial Aid Services, it has been announced by Robert J. Morrissey, director.

Mrs. Dorothy Baker Hardesty has been named placement officer for women. A graduate of the State University of New York at Albany, Mrs. Hardesty holds a master's degree from St. Lawrence University. Prior to joining the staff at UM, she was assistant director of placement at the State University of New York at Albany, where she worked in both educational and business placement.

John J. Siegrist of Albany, N. Y., has been appointed staff assistant in the Placement and Financial Aid Services Office. Mr. Siegrist received a bachelor of science degree in English from Mt. St. Mary's College Emmitsburg, Md., and is a candidate for his master of science degree in guidance from the State University of New York at Albany. He has taught in the North Colonie and Troy, N. Y. school system, and is a member of the American Personnel and Guidance Association.

HULSEN HEADS NETWORK

A University of Massachusetts faculty member was reelected chairman of the eight-station Eastern Educational Radio Network at its annual meeting in New York City recently.

Albert Hulsen will continue to head the noncommercial network which runs from Boston to Washington, D. C. and includes radio stations WAER, Syracuse; WAMC, Albany; WAMU, Washington; WFCR, Amherst; WGBH, Boston; WRKF, Richmand; WRVR, New York City; and WUHY, Philadelphia.

Manager of Four College Radio-WFCR in Amherst for the past two years, Hulsen earlier this month was appointed an assistant professor of speech at the University of Massachusetts. He spent the past summer in Korea, Japan, and American Samoa studying broadcasting under a grant from the Four College Committee on Asian and African Studies.

AFROTC CADETS RECEIVE AWARDS

During the recent summer AFROTC encampments, four UMass Seniors won the top awards. Cadet Lt. Col. Charles A. Seavey, Commander of the Arnold Air Society, received the Air Force Commandant's Award for the most outstanding Cadet at the training session, competing with 185 other men for this award.

Cadet Col. Albert P. Richards, Jr., Commander of the Cadet Wing, received the Air Force Times Award. This award is for the Cadet who distinguished himself through notable contributions to the moral and esprit de corps of the field training organization.

Cadet Lt. Col. Richard A. Starkweather, Deputy commander of the Cadet Wing, received the Air Force Vice Commandant's Award which is given to the most outstanding Cadet in each flight of the encampment. Cadet Starkweather also won the Air Force ROTC Marksmanship Award for attaining the highest score in small arms firing during the entire training session.

Cadet Lt. Col. James E. Stewart, Commander of the Flying Redmen Drill Team, received the Air Force Vice Commandant's Award for being the most outstanding Cadet in his flight.

The Izaak Walton League of America has invited Dr. Chester . Cross, head of the University of Massachusetts Cranberry Experiment Station at East Wareham, to speak at a two-day Citizens Workshop on Clear Water for America at Boston State College October 8 and 9. The UMass cranberry expert will talk on "Clean Water for Agriculture." The Walton League has received a demonstration grant from the Federal Pollution Control Administration for the workshop.

Dr. Leary Termed "Screwball"

Dr. Timothy Leary, who announced the other day he had founded a new religion based on LSD, is a "first-class screwball," according to the Rev. W. A. Criswell, pastor of the Dallas First Baptist Church, the largest church of that denomination in the world. This pretty well summed up the views of conventional religious leaders gathered in Dallas for a meeting of the International Christian Churches. Dr. Leary, a former Harvard instructor, contends that great religious insights can be derived from the use of the hallucinatory drug.

SBA Series to Begin with Authority on Marketing

A leading U. S. authority on the science of marketing will speak at the Univ. of Mass. Thurs. Oct. 6, at 4 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

Dr. Wendell R. Smith, president of the Marketing Science Institute of Philadelphia, will address the first session in this fall's School of Business Administration Colloquia, a series of lectures designed to bring to campus outstanding speakers from business and related areas.

The speaker, president of the institute since 1962, will deal with current critical issues in the field of marketing in a talk open to the public without charge.

A NATIVE OF IOWA, Dr. Smith holds B.S.C., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Iowa. He was a member of the faculty of the College of Commerce at his alma mater, serving as professor and head of the department of marketing from 1949 to 1954. In 1942 and 1943 he was the senior price specialist for the office of Price Administration.

After a five year association with the firm of Alderson and Sessions, Dr. Smith joined the staff of Radio Corporation of American in 1959 as director of marketing research and development. He was named vice-president for marketing and development on the RCA corporate staff in 1960, a position he held until his election to the presidency of the Marketing Science Institute in April, 1962.

The second talk in the fall SBA series will be a discussion on "Implications of the World Consumer Movement," led by Prof. Colsten Warne, professor of economics at Amherst College. Dr. Warne's talk is scheduled for Nov. 3.

The final lecture in the fall series will be a talk Thursday, Dec. 8, by Dean Willis J. Winn of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance and Commerce. Dr. Winn will speak on the impact of economic change on education.

Stephen R. Michael, assistant professor of management at UMass, is chairman of the series.

St. Peter's Invaded By "Pink-Cheeked" Co-eds

It was like any other semester start at St. Peter's College with one exception: the soft swish of skirts and the faint aroma of perfume heralded a new era on the formerly all-male campus.

Without fanfare, 121 bright-eyed, pink-cheeked coeds on Monday crashed through the 94-year-old barrier against women students. From their point of view, the invasion of the Jersey City campus was conquest at first sight.

"They said there'd be hostility," said one coed today. "But all the boys, especially the upper classmen, have gone out of their way to make sure we found the right classes."

"You'd be surprised," chimed in another coed, "how many boys open doors for you, pick up your books and sort of just let you know where the water fountain is—even if you don't need it. Already they've sort of acepted us into both their social and academic groups."

"My first impression," said one coed, was "when I went to the cafeteria—it looked just like one big men's room. I thought I took the wrong door." traditional Bull Session. "We talked about everything," said a woman student, "but the bull sessions mostly were about Viet Nam."

Last year some apprehensions were voiced by the male students when they learned they would be going to classes with women, Prof. Harold Nager said. The boys were told the girls would bring up the scholastic average and this, said the professor, apparently raised fears of competition.

With 18 boys to every coed, all the girls said they've had plenty of date offers. "I was even asked to join the football team," said one.

The best measure of acceptance was when the boys allowed the coeds to take part in the

Univ. Women Plan Project

The University Women have begun a new service project called 'New Eyes For the Needy.' Over half a million people have been helped by New Eyes for the Needy and The University Women decided to help this non-profit, non-sectarian volunteer organization provide better vision for the poor the world over.

The organization has worked for 32 years to bring precious sight to a needy person in the United States or across the world.

No money is solicited, but what we are asking for are old eyeglasses, jewelry, silver, and metal scrap. Simple non-astigmatic glasses are sent to medical mission all over the world, good plastic frames are reused, and all metal frames, broken jewelry go to the refinery, thereby redeemed for cash for new glasses.

Good antique and costume jewelry and silver hollow ware and flatware are sold for the same purpose.

Boxes will be labelled, and distributed to collection points in Amherst for public donations of glasses and jewelry.

APO Seeks New Members

Has the ride board ever saved you the money of a bus ticket? Did you ever save the price of a textbook by buying it at the Book Exchange?

If either of these is true, then you have come into contact with Alpha Phi Omega, the National Service Fraternity. Of course we do more than just these two projects, and have a ball doing it. We sponsor dances and movies, as well as usher at University Theater, Concert Association and Operetta Guild productions.

Do you remember last year's Homecoming parade, or the Amherst Fair parade in Amherst? If you might also remember the men running around with Walkie - Talkies co-ordinating the units and working toward the perfect step-off, then you've seen us.

Do you enjoy working with children? Last year we worked with the Northern Educational Service and Aid to Underprivileged Kids on campus, and went off campus to work at some of the hospitals in the area. Does it take time? Of course it takes time, but if you're worried about your marks just remember that the Fraternity average for all of last year was over a 2.4.

Maybe you're worried that the men in a service fraternity might not be your type, try us out and discover for yourself. Don't take anyone's word for it. We have two smokers left, Oct. 3 at Memorial Hall and Oct. 5 in the Student Union. Check the posters in your dorm and come and see us.

UMass Places First

The University of Massachusetts Dairy Cattle Judging Team, competing with eleven other teams of Northeastern United States and Canada, placed first in the Intercollegiate Dairy Cottle Judging Contest held at Eastern States Exposition.

Fifteen classes of cattle representing five different breeds were evaluated with the placings substantiated by oral reasons in two of these classes.

THE TEAM, coached by Dr. Sidney J. Lyford, Jr., of the Veterinary and Animal Sciences Department at UMass, consisted of H nry Parsons '69, Westhampton; William Snow '68, Westfield; Gregg Stillman '69; Lunenburg, and the team alternate was Miss Faye Allis '70, Conway.

The team placings by individual breeds were as follows: Jerseys —First, Ayrshires—Third, Holsteins—Third, Brown Swiss—Fourth, and Guernseys — Fifth.

R cognition was received for high individual placings by breeds. Parsons was First in Jerseys and tied for First in Guernseys. Stillman was Second in Guernseys. Stillman was Second in Jerseys, Fourth in Brown Swiss and Fifth in Ayrshires. Snow was Fourth in Jerseys and Eighth in Holsteins.

GREGG STILLMAN was the high individual in the over-all contest winning and coveted First Place award. Parsons placed Fourth, Snow placed Fifth, and Miss Allis was the High Alternate in the contest.

Several individual prizes were received and the University's name inscribed on rotating trophies donated by the breed associations and the Wirthmore Feeds Company.

Illinois Students Aroused By Administrative Action

Student - administrative relations at the University of Illinois took a great leap sideways when the administration promised to consult students before selecting a new dean, and then chose a man whose name was never presented for consideration.

Students have been moving to take part in more administrative-faculty decisions since last year when they were admitted to academic policy councils. They have been working with the administration in formulating social rules for thirty years.

When the Dean of Students position became open last term, however, University President David Henry resisted student pressures for participation in the faculty Search Committee for a replacement.

President Henry compromised with Robert Byman, the Student Senate president at that time. According to Byman, President Henry promised to consult with him if the Student Senate did not push for representation on the Search Committee. Byman was to offer his suggestions to the Committee after seeing the list of candidates.

The Student Senate leader ended up seeing what he thought were only names of preliminary choices. The man subsequently chosen was not included, he said. President Henry contended Byman saw the final list.

In reaction, Byman introduced a bill in the Student Senate last week to censure the President and the Search Committee for "breach of confidence." After Senate debate, he moved to recommit the bill for further study.

AMHERST GRAD NAMED TO HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE STAFF

Kenneth Rosenthal has been appointed to the administrative staff of Hampshire College with responsibilities for developing sources of funds for the college through federally supported programs and through foundations, to assist generally in the immediate problems of the creation of the college, and in a staff capacity for long-range financial planning.

Mr. Rosenthal's title is Development Administrator. He is the fifth member of the group forming Hampshire College and the third to join the staff since June, 1966, when President Patterson arrived in Amherst to assume responsibilities for leadership of the new educational enterprise.

Hampshire College is a new coeducational college being formed in Western Massachusetts with academic support from Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the University of Massachusetts.

Mr. Rosenthal is a graduate of Amherst College, class of 1960, and the Yale Law School in 1963. In 1963-64 he clerked for a judge in the superior court of New Jersey. From August 1964 through February 1965 he was a field director in the Amherst Capital Program, Amherst College's successful effort to raise $20,000,000 in capital funds.

Prior to his appointment at Hampshire College, Mr. Rosenthal was an associate in the law firm of Toner, Crowley, Woelper and Vanderbilt, Newark, New Jersey. He is a member of the New Jersey Bar.

Cody Undergoes Surgery, Will Be Out for Season

The injury plague that has swept the Redmen spread to the defensive backfield during the Dartmouth game. Senior Ed Cody, the starting cornerback, suffered torn ligaments in his knee and underwent surgery on Monday. He will be lost for the season.

The number of would-be starters on the injury list has risen to five. The others are guard Bob Santucci, tackle Ed Toner, center Dan Harrigan, and linebacker Bob Gogick.

All but Toner and Santucci are out for the season. Toner may be ready for the Vermont game October 29, but Santucci's status is in doubt. He has been running at half speed and lifting between 15 and 20 pounds with his bad leg.

Coach Briggs Hopes Booters Shoot Works in Maine Game

by TIM MURPHY, Sports Staff

Someone has candidly remarked on the science of winning that you don't win if you don't shoot.

With this tenet on the one hand and a soccer ball on the other, Coach Larry Briggs devoted much of this week's soccer practice to injecting further offensive punch into his defending Yankee Conference tri-champions.

Briggs' brigade outshot Saturday at Amherst by nearly three-to-one, but the veteran mentor voiced satisfaction with progress made during the week and looked optimistically toward tomorrow's encounter with Maine here.

The contest, first of the year against a Yankee Conference foe, is stated to begin at 1:30 on Varsity Field.

Several Shake-Ups

Briggs has shuffled several players around, hoping to reach continuum on both offence and defense while exploiting scoring potentiality to its fullest extent.

Junior Carl Gustafson is challenging Larry Martin for the starting goal position. Fullbacks wil be Dave Jekanoski and either Dave Hale or Frank Howard. The former played right half against Amherst.

Captain Mike Russo, switched from center half, will command the right half slot, while Bill Allan will be at left half and Aba Ayanaba will move from fullback to center half.

In front, Gary Gibbons, former proprietor of a wing slot, will be at center forward, Gerry Cellilli will remain at left wing, with Dick Rosoff, highly commended by Briggs for his efforts against the Jeffs, and Marty Smith on the insides.

Yet to be decided is the right winger.

Maine Improved

Maine is expected to be vastly improved over the contingent which was ripped, 5-0, by the Redmen a year ago at Orono. The squad is equipped with a year's experience and a new coach in Bill Livesey.

The '65 meeting was the first ever between the two universities on a soccer field.

CORNER KICKS—The big three for Amherst last Saturday were Paffer Kassamali, Cleanthis Nicolaides and Bob Sherman. They accounted for 25 of the 29 shots on the UMass goal with nine, eight and eight, respectively. Leading Redman sharpshooter was Rosoff with four. Smith followed up with three.

The victory by Amherst was the first in three years by a Jeff club over UMass. Last year the final count was 1-0.

Ayanaba has fully recovered from an apparent muscle spasm in his left calf, suffered early in the fourth quarter of the Amherst game. He returned to action after warming the bench for several minutes and has looked sharp in practice.

INTRAMURALS

Taxis, Campus Champs, Appear Team to Beat

by DAVE JARNES, Sports Staff

Last year's campus champion, the Courtesy Taxis, lacked one ingredient-size. This year the Taxis have essentially the same players back plus 200-pound Dick Pulsifer and 256-pound Tony Plaza. Billy Klaus made life miserable for the Lobs as he hit on 19 of 28 passes while the rugged Taxi defense didn't allow a first down in a 32-0 romp.

A combination of Bob Collins' passes (13-25) to Mike Hamilton (seven receptions) and a rugged defense led by Bruce Beauvais and Don Hambridge enabled the Webster Rams to break a 0-0 halftime tie to win going away 21-0.

An injury to one of their players forced the Hawks to play with just five men on the field but Zeke Sweeney's strong passing game (8-12) and Pat Stiriti's fine end play (five receptions) carried the Hawks to a 25-13 win against the Mills Birch.

Aylward Runs Wild

The defending dorm titalists, the Chadbourne Maroons, received a scare from the Baker Bruins, but Dick Aylward's four TD passes boosted the Maroons from a 13-7 halftime deficit in-

Bruce Cochrane--The Making of a Kicker

by HARVEY ELMAN
Sports Staff

By kicking the field goal that pushed the Redmen past Maine, 10-7, Bruce Cochrane put the foot back into UMass football. Ironically, Bruce would not have appeared at all if Ed Toner, the regular kicker, had not been injured.

The 6-ft., 210-pound sophomore fullback began his place kicking career last fall when Coach Shields, of the freshman team, asked for someone to volunteer for placekicking chores. Bruce practiced every day for 15 minutes. Milt Morin, the varsity kicker, often helped him. During the season, Cochrane hit on one of two extra point attempts.

Last summer, Bruce, a brother of Kappa Sigma, practiced two hours daily by himself—running after the ball after kicking it—in order to strengthen his right leg.

Bruce Cochrane—"Repetition is the biggest thing"

Bamberry Helped

When regular practice started August 31, Cochrane kicked before and after each workout, with senior quarterback Butch Caruso holding for him. Assistant Backfield Coach John Bamberry helped by suggesting that Cochrane shorten his step so that Bruce could get the ball off faster. This procedure was repeated many times.

"Repetition is the biggest thing in football," says Cochrane.

Cochrane overcame a slight mental block about the certainty of his kicking by connecting on the point-after try early in the Maine game.

"I would have been nervous it would go under; it didn't

Five of the six members of the Yankee Conference were defeated last Saturday. All but Vermont, which had an open date, met defeat on gridirons throughout New England.

The Ivy League made a clean sweep of its annual showdown with the Conference. The Redmen lost to Dartmouth, 17-7, while Yale was shutting out U-Conn, 16-0, and Brown was running wild over Rhode Island, 40-27.

In addition, Maine was subdued by Boston University, 20-7, and New Hampshire bowed to

'Beaux-Arts' To Give Five Free Concerts

The award-winning Beaux-Arts String Quartet will give a series of five free public concerts this year at the University of Massachusetts, it was announced by Dr. Philip T. Bezanson, head of the music department.

The New York-based group, in competition with leading young quartets in the U. S. last season, won the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation's first chamber music award, which carries a $20,000 appropriation, the largest prize ever given by a music competition.

An innovation at UMass this year will be open rehearsals on the afternoon of each concert, designed to give the University community and the general public a chance to talk to the musicians and to hear their music in an informal setting.

All concerts and open rehearsals will be held in the School of Education auditorium. Rehearsals will be at 3 p.m. and concerts at 8 p.m. Dates will be Oct. 5, Dec. 7, Feb. 1 and March 22. A fifth concert will be held sometime in the summer

The group is led by Charles Libove, violin, a New York City native, Juilliard School graduate and former member of the Paganini String Quartet. Members are Stephen Clapp, violin, a New York state native and Oberlin Conservatory and Juilliard School graduate; John Graham, viola, a California native who was graduated from the University of California in Berkeley; and Bruce Rogers, cello, born in Indiana and a graduate of the Juilliard School.

UMass Youth Orchestra To Start Rehearsals

THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS Youth Orchestra has begun its second year with auditions last week; rehearsals start Oct. 3.

The orchestra, sponsored by the UMass music department, was established in Spring of 1965 to serve young instrumentalists of this area by giving them the oportunity to gain orchestral experience beyond that available in their own schools.

Response has been enthusiastic and representation has included more and more communities, funder and director Prof. Joseph Contino said.

Last year's group numbered 45 and included players from Amherst, Hadley, Northampton, South Hadley, Southwick, Sunderland, Turners Falls and Williamsburg.

Prof. Contino has performed as a clarinetist and has conducted the UMass band and the Amherst Community band, which he founded. He teaches woodwinds and conducting in the UMass music department. The Youth Orchestra will give its first concert Dec. 11.

Our Average Student Reads 4.7 Times Faster Than His Starting Speed WITH EQUAL OR BETTER COMPREHENSION
The internationally famous EVELYN WOOD Reading Dynamics Institute INVITES YOU TO ATTEND A FREE DEMONSTRATION OF THIS UNIQUE METHOD
Where you will:
- See an amazing documented film about Reading Dynamics
- Learn how Reading Dynamics can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater retention.

HOW DID IT START?
Eighteen years ago Mrs. Wood made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward her masters degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 80 pages at 6,000 words per minute — with outstanding recall and comprehension.
Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read from 1,500 to 6,000 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of testing, you can benefit from this great discovery.

AN OUTSTANDING SUCCESS
Results have been reported in Time, Newsweek, Business Week, and Esquire. Demonstrators have appeared on television with Jack Paar, Garry Moore, and Art Linkletter.
Describing Reading Dynamics' impact on some of our nation's legislators, Time said, "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."
Senator Herman E. Talmadge, Georgia: "In my opinion if these reading techniques were instituted in the public and private schools of our country it would be the greatest single step we could take in educational progress."
Senator Proxmire, Wisconsin: "I must say that this is one of the most useful education experiences I have ever had. It certainly compares favorably with the experiences I've had at Yale and Harvard."
A Reading Dynamics class at St. Louis University had an average beginning speed of 357 words per minute, an ending speed of 1,810 words per minute. Average comprehension rose from 73% to 83%.

HOW IS IT DIFFERENT FROM OTHER COURSES?
No machine are used. You learn, instead, to use your hand as a pacer — a tool you always have with you.
Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute.
Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,500 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

GUARANTEE
We will guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student by AT LEAST 3 times with equal or better comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition of any student upon the completion of his course who does not obtain at least the tripling of his reading efficiency as measured by the beginning and ending tests. This guarantee is conditioned upon the student's attending all of the required classes (or making up any missed sessions with an instructor). He also must have completed the required number of homework hours according to directions.

Kenya Dignitary Visits UMass

Do-It-Yourself Dorms?

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (CPS) — Do-it-yourself dormitories may soon house students at the University of British Columbia. A chronic housing shortage has sparked plans for self-financing student-owned cooperative apartments.

There are presently 1,400 students waiting for unavailable UBC residence accommodations. Another 5,500 are seeking scarce off-campus housing. The housing shortage, described as a possible panic situation, may soon force some UBC students into distant Vancouver slums.

To alleviate the situation students have formed the Alma Mater Society and plan to borrow money for the housing project which may cost up to $1,000,000.

"The suites we are planning will only accommodate 100 to 175 students," said AMS president Peter Braund, "but if someone doesn't build something, we're not going to get anything done about the situation."

Getting Younger

YAF Expands Program

Young Americans for Freedom is getting younger all the time.

The conservative organization has recently dropped programs to mobilize the young voter while adding a new division for high schoolers.

Almost a hundred secondary school chapters have been chartered in the two years YAF has been actively recruiting them, Executive Director David Jones said in a recent interview. Things have been going so well, he continued, that the national office is setting up a special high school department. YAF, primarily a college organization since its founding in 1960, has found that it pays to organize people early.

High school students, many of them coming from conservative backgrounds, are searching for causes and are eager to discuss the issues, Jones said. Won over early, the student going on to college often assumes a leadership position there.

Jones' remarks followed by several weeks the demise of another YAF arm, the Political Action Committee. YAF-PAC was engineered last fall to develop a strong organization capable of dealing directly with the voter.

In its first effort, which "left much to be desired" according to Jones, YAF-PAC focused on the upcoming congressional elections, attempting to assist friendly candidates.

YAF national Chairman Tom Huston expressed the thinking behind the venture last year when he said that "YAF's most urgent task is to mold together a political coalition which can gain the support of a majority of the people and invest us with governmental authority."

Now, however, the tactics have been reconsidered. Young conservatives are not going to be any less active in the Iepublican Party, Jones indicated, but YAF thinks it can be more effective by educating them than by trying to coordinate their manpower directly.

Nevertheless, Jones' thoughts about Republican presidential candidates in 1968 indicate that YAF is not planning to drop out of the political arena by any means.

"For the young conservative," Ronald Reagan is the only clear-cut choice, he said, "but Reagan will probably not be nominated."

Rejecting Michigan's Governor George Romney as far too liberal, Jones concluded that perhaps the "practical view" fell on Richard Nixon. From the conservative perspective, Nixon has a good anti-communist stand and he campaigns on a sound fiscal program, Jones noted.

The trouble is, he said, Nixon is unwilling to speak out against "unconstitutional issues" such as civil rights legislation, and he supports some "big government" legislation just to get votes.

APO Fraternity Centralizes Lost and Found Articles

This year, for the first time, a sincere effort is being made to return lost items to students with as little delay as possible. Brothers of Alpha Phi Omega, the service fraternity at the University, have set up an efficient and much needed lost and found system.

IN THE PAST, lost articles have been turned into the office of the building in which they were found. The items were then kept at the various offices until the end of the semester after which they were transferred to the main lost and found department located at the Lobby Counter in the Student Union.

Now, with the new system set up by Alpha Phi Omega, lost articles will be collected weekly from the major buildings on campus and taken to the Student Union lost and found. After each collection the brothers will sort and identify the articles.

To aid the student in his search, a column listing some of the items collected by the Brothers will periodically appear in the Collegian. In this issue the listing can be found on Page 5. Students looking for lost articles are asked to go to the Student Union lost and found on Mondays between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m. They may also contact the Brothers through the Student Activities Office. After a proper identification has been made, the article will be gladly returned to the student.

if I hadn't gotten that first extra point. The field goal was just reaction, I didn't even have to think about it," he said.

With five minutes left to play, Coach Vic Fusia told Cochrane that if UMass got inside the 20-yard line a field goal try would be attempted. Bruce knew that everyone on the squad was depending on him, but he tried not to think of this when he was kicking.

It's in the Teamwork

"My part is really the easiest," Cochrane explained. "The hardest part belongs to Bruce Gombar, the center, to make an accurate, quick snap back to the holder, and to Butch. The whole thing is teamwork.

"I knew it would be straight. I saw it about 20 feet from the bar. I thought have the trajectory, spinning end over end. I thought I had let the team down."

While Bruce welcomed the chance to come off the bench and do something to help the team, he felt it unfair that ehe received all the glory. "The rest of the team got the ball there — I just did my job." he explains.

Cochrane's personal goal in football is to be "a good fullback. When I get the chance to play fullback, I want to make the most of it. Coach Fusia showed confidence in me, and this gave me a lift."

to a 26-19 triumph over Ed Polchlopek and company. In other East League games the Eagles whipped the Barracudas, 20-2, and the Grants edged the Broncos, 18-12.

Danny Kausel's three TD runs kept the Grayson Aces' unbeaten record intact as they bopped the Panthers, 25-0. An impressive performance by Alex Vyce (six TD passes) paced the Redwoods to a 40-0 romp against the Seagrams. Both Flaming A's teams scored easy wins. The Grayson Flaming A's blasted the Cherrys, 40-0, while the Tower Flaming A's rolled over the Hemlocks, 36-6.

Pedro Excels

Joe Pedro's five TD passes, four of which were thrown to Dave Armstrong, led the HiLo's to a 47-7 plastering of the Elms. In other South League action the Trojans toppled the Maples, 28-14, the Hoovers blanked the Hicks, 19-0, the Oaks cruised by the Pines, 27-6, and the Limes nipped the Bulldozers, 7-6, by virtue of an edge in first downs.

Mike Gould's spectacular performance (two touchdown runs and one touchdown pass) gave the Numerals a 20-6 victory over the Bombers.

ATG's 19-18 upset of TKE highlighted the fraternity scene. Gilmore passed for two TD's in leading ATG from a 13-7 halftime disadvantage. ATG was formerly considered a "patsy" but they served notice that they will be rough on all their opponents.

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN FORUM

You're In Charge

by JACK DEAN, Editorial Day Editor

The situation is totally new; there are no precedents. Naturally there is bound to be some confusion in adjusting to the aftermath of a successful revolution. The smoke of cannons lingers on.

A new policy of dorm self-regulation exists. It is now time for detailed implementation. All students should realize the opportunity at hand; all students should act.

The residents of each dorm have the power to decide their needs and wants, and to write a constitution which will serve them. Gone are the archaic rules. Gone is interference from counselors, housemothers, and Women's Affairs.

Assistant Dean Barnard, in a pamphlet distributed to counselors and Heads of Residence, stated: "A social reform has taken place! Students can now more fully function as the full-fledged persons they already are. And the University has made it more possible for them to shed child-like ways and gradually learn to be adults."

It is you, the students, who must utilize these changes; and it is you who must live with the rules you make.

So take charge.

Black Power . . .

by MIKE HERSH, Editorial Staff

Recently there has been a cartharis of emotions directed against advocates of Black Power and, in fact, against the term itself. On September 26, Senator Jacob Javitts asserted that certain civil rights legislation had been killed because of "white backlash" evolving from "inflammatory statements by Negro demagogues" (N.Y. Times, Sept. 27). Senator Javitts also stated that "white backlash" resulting from violence in the Negro ghettos in Watts and Cleveland was the "catalyst which brought about this disastrous reaction—disastrous for the nation as well as for the Negro".

Mr. Javitt's concept of "white backlash", and, in fact, his entire line of reasoning, are ludicrous. White backlash implies a sudden reversal of attitude or feeling. This definition would apply only if, as Javitts claims, Negro "demagogues" did indeed create this sharp turnabout. It would be more realistic, however, to believe that these "inflammatory statements" served to expose basic white attitudes, not create a backlash. As the N.Y. Times reported on Monday, Sept. 19: " 'It's not so much a backlash,' said Dr. Thomas F. Pettigrow, a social psychologist at Harvard, 'but, rather an out-from-under-the-rocks phenomenon.' "

He said the nation was seeing a " 'real mobilization of the hate that was always there' " . . . What seems to be the case, then, is not the so-called danger that Black Power implies, but rather, the latent racism in the majority of Northern whites. The death of Malcolm X., who symbolized the the strength of Black Power, has not prevented the exposure of this widespread racism, nor has it halted the radicalization of more and more blacks in the United States. On the contrary, it has stirred a sense of determination among the capable leaders chosen to fill the void created by his political assassination.

White Americans should not be horrified at the growing militancy of large number of black people. On the contrary, they should be violently disgusted at the amount and type of racism and bigotry existing in this country.

Letters to the Editor

"... wallowing in opulence."

To one of the many Editors:

Before herds of coeds descend upon the university to seek out that "poor, lonely man" (immortalized in the Collegian Forum and known to thousands of students simply as "the catman") to bombard him with shaving cream, levis, C.P.O. shirts and warm female companionship, let us first re-evaluate the state of his human condition as it was so colorfully drawn by C. H. Kamp.

What Kamp indelicately calls the catman's "rags" are obviously not rags at all but garments of the highest and most durable quality, evidenced by the fact that he has been wearing them for at least the past five years. Neither is he the "poor individual" that Kamp would mislead us to believe. Just recently he was spotted sitting in the Hatch with a whole bottle of milk set on the table.

This wasn't plain old run-of-the-mill yaks milk but America's best Guernsey glandular secretion. Compared to the average student whose budget allows for only 1.2 half pints of milk per day, the catman is wallowing in opulence.

In order to banish the solitude that the catman, in his "deluded fashion," continues to fend off the cold world with, we are urged to trot him off to the Homecoming dance which would give meaning to his meaningless life in the university community.

When I came upon him the other day puttering about the shrubs near the library, I jovially asked him to save the first dance. Startled out of his solitude, he retreated a few paces, looking at me as if I had said, "the jig is up." I repeated the question, a little less jovially.

After a devestating silence he replied, "I won't dance. Don't ask me."

Sam Spark Speaks Out

Hardly a day passes without reading a sensational headline on escalation of the Vietnam war, or of an increase in the draft call. Such news sends shivers up and down the spines of every pretty little long-haired beauty on campus. It also scares a lot of the other guys.

Our present commitment to the Vietnamese and the ever-present threat of escalation has caused a lot of hard thinking about our policy in Vietnam and the equibility of our draft system on college campi throughout the nation.

Knowing the alert UMass student to be representative of today's quick thinking collegian, I decided to take a poll of the males in the student body to find out just what they think of the Vietnam war.

From the seven questions I asked, one can easily see how today's college students view the war. The first and most general question was, "What do you think of the progress of the war?"

What War?	58%
If the Germans think they're going to win they've got another think coming	15%
No opinion	27%

2. Should the Viet Cong be represented in peace negotiations?

Who are the Viet Cong	41%
What are negotiations	10%
Why	4%
Why not	12%
No opinion	33%

3. Should George Hamilton be drafted?

Not unless he can take his mother along	2%
Not unless he can take Lynda Bird along	4%
Not unless he promises never to act again	2%
All of these	30%
1 and 2 only	3%
1 and 3 only	5%
No opinion	14%

4. Assume Premier Ky does not run for re-election, whom would you support?

Who's Premier Ky	37%
President Lederle	20%
Bobby Kennedy	27%
Lyndon Johnson	2%
Richard Nixon	14%

5. Should the student deferrment be continued?

What is the student deferment	1%
Yes, until I'm 26	54%
Until I stock up on lace panties	45%

6. What should we do if Red China enters the war?

Is that as expensive as white china	46%
Who's side are they on	24%
Offer them statehood	12%
Throw them out of the U.N.	18%

7. Who do you think will eventually win the war?

What war	58%
The L.A. Dodgers	10%
Japan	4%
The administration	20%
The Kennedy clan	8%

"The justification for a university is that it preserves the connection between knowledge and the zest of life, by uniting the young and the old in the imaginative consideration of learning. The university imparts information, but it imparts it imaginatively . . . A university which fails in this respect has no reason for existance."

ID's Not Necessary for Football Admission Now

I .D. cards will not have to be shown to gain admission to football games. In addition, the parking fee has been totally eliminated, and a new procedure has been set up to replace lost books, according to Mr. Evan Johnston, chairman of the Ticket Policy Committee of the Athletic Council.

The new procedure is that a student wanting to obtain a ticket to a football game will go to two large tables to be placed at the lower lobby in Boyden. He will show his I.D. and turn in his coupon in exchange for a reserved seat ticket. At the stadium gate, only the ticket for admission need be presented.

Johnston said that the Ticket Policy Committee made the changes because they did not feel personnel was adequate to handle the job, and they did not feel any student should be required to identify himself twice.

Senate President Greenquist Attends

Johnston also mentioned that Senate President John Greenquist, who was at the meeting "represented the students interests very well." Greenquist asked "why can't the students do what they want with the ticket once it's theirs?"

Asked about obtaining a ticket for a date with a UMass girl, Wally Novak, assistant to Robert O'Connel, business manager of Athletics, said "The girl will have to come down."

O'Connel explained that if one person is allowed to pick up a ticket for another, then you have to let everyone do it. He also said, "If you allow the person to pick up one extra ticket, the next thing will be for two or three. Then it will be for floor or frat," he went on. "This will lead to peddling tickets."

Asked about the necessity of a girl coming down with her date to get her ticket, Johnston said, "This is a problem. If we have any real big kinks in it we will have to adjust. Maybe he can get her I.D. card and come down with it."

Since all tickets are for reserved seats a couple or any group of friends that want to sit next to each other will have to come down at the same time to make sure that they get adjacent seats.

Two Days To Pick Up Requested Tickets

However, O'Connel said, "Mr. Novak will hold the ticket for the seat next to one for which a ticket was picked up for about two days." This means that a student's date or friend need not come with him to Boyden, but must come within two days. This will be done on a student's request, O'Connel said, but he envisions severe problems if there should be thousands of such requests.

The new system gives priority seating to seniors and juniors. They are able to come in earlier to turn in their coupons than are freshmen and sophomores. On the question of upper and lower classmen wishing to sit together, O'Connel said, "Lower priority prevails." Upperclassmen will have to wait until their lower classmen friends can obtain tickets if they wish to sit with them.

Informed about an objection to this raised on the floor of the Senate and why it couldn't be first come first served, O'Connel said any system will have objectors. He said Harvard, Dartmouth, B.C. and others all give priority to upperclassmen. Freshmen are so enthusiastic they may take all the good seats, he went on. They may have a change of heart as

PRESIDENT'S OPEN OFFICE HOURS

President Lederle will hold open office hours on Tuesday, October 4, from 4 p.m. on. The purpose of these hours is to give any interested students a chance to meet informally with the president and discuss their problems or any topics of general interest. No appointments are necessary, and the president is hoping to meet a large segment of the campus community.

Noffsinger Calls for "Answers" In Keynote at SWAP Conference

Editor's Note: The coverage of the SWAP conference is not complete with this issue. Further stories on individual discussions, follow ups and editorial commentary will continue this week.

by FRED PILON
Staff Reporter

When SWAP Chairman, John Webster, introduced the keynote speaker as a "confirmed ally," he was not anticipating the divergence in unity that Dr. Mark Noffsinger, coordinator of Student Activities, would create.

Dr. Noffsinger pointed out that although the questions that will be asked during the school year are not necessarily new, there is "a critical need for some new answers."

Noffsinger asked that the delegates particularly direct their attention to four major areas: 1) Student self-government; 2) advisorship for student organizations; 3) student publications, and 4) student responsibility for interaction with faculty and administrative groups.

Student Self-Government

Noffsinger noted that student government is at a pivital point for at least three reasons:

- Newly developed residence areas have no traditions, no pre-conceived notions of judicial procedure, and totally new personnel and students.
- Great increases in student enrollment requires establishment of more local and less central government units, with independent authority for the residents.
- The newly earned social and residence freedoms carry the concomitant responsibility for self-regulation.

Noffsinger stated that "Within the next few years, it seems perfectly clear class officers and their meetings, and the Student Senate and its meetings will be much less effective —if, in fact, they are still in existence." The reason, he continued, is that "The primary channel for university communication, student executive and judicial functions will be the living unit, which may also be the academic unit as well."

Speaking of the existing governing body, the Student Senate, Noffsinger noted that it lacks long-range goals and is often sidetracked by items that "clog its agenda and by those who are more interested in parliamentary procedures for personal victory than they are willing to comprehend and work on significant issues."

Advisors

Delving into the second major area, advisors, Noffsinger quipped that some advisors found themselves listed as advisors and others wished they had never heard of their groups.

Dr. Noffsinger proposed:

1. Student organizations should be permitted to exist without an advisor.
2. Recruitment and recognition of advisors must be shared by the students, faculty, and administration.
3. Ground rules must be mutually agreed upon and followed by both working parties.

Student Publications

"Student publications on our campus," according to Noffsinger, "need more than criticism, they need help." He believes that the Yahoo affair may have focused critical community attention on publications just in time to spare us from other public pressures for University action against all of the student publications.

Interaction

Speaking of the fourth major area, student interaction with faculty and administration, Noffsinger suggested that what is needed is "a common spirit of trust and respect." He continued, "I have been on few campuses where faculty members, from instructors to full professors, are so genuinely interested in and available to students and their various activities." And he noted, "when the chips are down and issues of magnitude are before them, students have in the past and will continue to go to the faculty."

Finally, Noffsinger suggested that the delegates "remember to examine the offense without being offensive, and deal in critical thinking without being negative."

His last comment was, "To paraphrase the Collegian, will the real student leaders please stand up?" Over one hundred rose applauding.

Belafonte

Great Concert (Natch!)

by JUDITH KUHN, Feature Staff

To say that a performer is dynamic is perhaps trite, but dynamic is the easiest and most appropriate word to use in describing the personality of Harry Belafonte.

Despite the lines stretching from Curry Hicks Gymnasium to Machmer Hall, and despite the stuffy, crowded conditions at the Cage itself, Mr. Belafonte and his group of performers provided a unique and enjoyable three hours of entertainment for a Sunday evening.

Belafonte's music is a blend of the traditional and the popular songs of the world, arranged and accompanied in a modern, unusual manner and delivered in a style that is unmistakable his own. Performing in the open-throated shirt that is his trademark, he sang such songs as Jamaica Farewell, Hava Nagila, and Sally Ann. Also included were a Haitian harvest song, Merci Bon Dieu, and the familiar No One To Talk My Troubles To.

Performing with Mr. Belafonte were Nipsey Russell, a comedian, and Nana Mouskouri, a young folk singer from Greece. Nipsey Russell, dressed in a freshman beanie and a UMass sweater, dashed on stage and proceeded to keep the audience laughing for a full half hour with his witty remarks on many subjects, including civil rights, the draft, and UMass. The crowd especially enjoyed his tabletop dancing exhibition.

University Reform

A Voice In The Decisions

by BRUCE BALBONI, Staff Reporter

The University Reform Committee has not had a long history, yet, in a short time it has managed to provide the impetus needed for abolition of women's curfews.

The URC was formed, in the words of Chairman Ken Hardy, because "students had little or no voice in making important decisions affecting their academic and social lives. We were constantly being told what to do, when to come in at night, what to study, and when to study it. We felt that our rights to make these decisions and our responsibility for their consequences had to be recognized and accepted by the University."

The goal of the reform committee was, at first, to work toward academic problems. It held its first conference in discussion of this goal in early March but found a lack of enthusiasm. At this time the URC decided that it would have to concentrate on social problems.

Committee Coordinator Wilfong Comments

Robert Wilfong, information coordinator for the Committee, said "When we started working on reform we were mainly interested in academics, that is, grades, requirements, independent study, etc. But we learned that before anything could be done in these areas we had to do something about curfews, sign out sheets, judiciary problems, and dorm self-government. How could we demand respect in the classroom when the University was treating us like children in the dormitories? The social problems were and are basic to University reform. Before we can start building a community of scholars we must have a community based on respect for the integrity of the individual."

Later in March the committee held another forum to deal with women's regulations, alcohol on campus, dorm self-government, and other social factors' affecting student life.

Assistant Dean of Women Isabel Gonon was one of the panel speakers. Heated discussion followed the subject of women's curfews.

Dean Gonon's reply to the question of change in curfews was — students set their own rules. This statement made it apparent that with enough student support women's curfews could be abolished.

PRC Petitions Began Curfew Change

The URC started a petition around campus with the intention of obtaining a majority of women to sign for the abolition of their curfews. The petitioners with the help of Collegian publicity got 70% of all women to sign in denunciation of curfews.

There were many factors leading to the death of curfews. Dean Field formed the Student Life Committee in March of '66. This committee was composed of the assistant Dean of Men, assistant Dean of Women and Dean of Students.

Another development which helped to create an atmosphere in which curfews could be successfully challenged was the abolition of dossiers. Dossiers had been used as recommendations for jobs, graduate school etc.

On March 1, 1966 the Collegian published a special supplement on women's regulations, attacking sing-out sheets and curfews. This widespread publicity contributed greatly to the growing spirit of reform.

WAC Visits Charge in '66

When Asst. Dean Gonon implied that students made their own rules she was referring to the yearly visits of the Women's Affairs Committee to every women's dorm. The WAC went to the dorms in the spring in order to obtain opinions from the women as to what should be changed.

The largest attendance of any previous WAC meeting was seven. Because of the URC's campaign and the interest it created in the problem of curfews, the 1966 spring meetings were packed.

The women began to ask for other basic changes besides an end to curfews. They wanted parietal hours, and more say in dorm government. The URC held coffee hours on these topics in an attempt to arouse further enthusiasm among students.

Curfew Change Established In the Spring

The change in the curfews was decided in the spring of 1966. The Women's Affairs Committee recommended to the Student Life Committee that curfews be dropped for all except freshmen women. The Student Senate passed a resolution supporting the end to curfews. Finally, the Student Life Committee recommended to President Lederle that women's curfews be abolished. This recommendation was passed, but modified to include curfews for freshmen.

The recommendations even went beyond what the URC had hoped for. Dorm self-government became a reality at least on paper.

Reform had become such an issue that two candidates for president of the classes of '68 and '69 ran and won largely on the issue.

From the new spirit evolved out of social change, the URC sees the beginning of widespread student interest in academic change.

Progress Continues With Residential College

The University administration, as it did in social affairs, has already begun to make progress in academic reform. Provost Tippo announced last year that a University College will be soon built.

This residential college within the large university framework will provide more intimate contact between students and faculty, more independent study and fewer required courses. This is a step toward the goal of the URC —emphasis on the individual rather than impersoal masses.

The Department of Arts and Sciences has established a Curriculum Committee to study the need for all the liberal arts requirements. This, as well as the change from extensive to basic undergraduate science courses, is welcomed by the URC. The committee feels, nevertheless, more can and must be done.

As a university UMASS is only 20 years ago. At first the major problem was getting the physical plant built. Now that this is well underway it is time for the University to take hard lok at itself. Where are we going academically? What kind of school are we going to become? The students and the URC are both striving to bring this educational quality to our University. The time is riped for change. Faculty administration and students must realize this fact and move together to make UMASS a leader in higher education.

Wilfong Sums It Up

Wilfong summed up the situation, saying, the University is only 20 years old and still developing. At first the major problem was building up the physical plant and recruiting an adequate faculty. Now that these problems are being solved it is time for UMass to pause and examine itself Are the rules fair and realistic? Are the courses relevant? What kind of school is this going to become? The University is changing, and faculty, administration and students must recognize this fact. Recognizing each other as essential elements of the University. We can make UMass a leader in higher education.

BELAFONTE . . .

Miss Mouskouri offered a change from Belfaonte's deep, masculine voice. Her singing began sweetly and delicately, in a voice that soon developed strength and power uncommon in the voices of many of today's popular female folk singers. Outstanding in her performance was the beautiful love theme from the movie The Umbrellas of Cherbourg.

She also sang several Greek folk songs accompanied by Belafonte's group and by her husband who is an accomplished guitarist.

Belafonte's last number for the evening was one he is well-known for—the rousing Matilda. The song lasted quite a while, with a break for the introduction of Colonel John Glenn who was seated in the audience.

The remaining part of the song included a large amount of audience participation.

At the start of his program Harry Belafonte referred to the structure of the interior of the Cage as the "new Noah's Ark," and said, "I am here to entertain you for forty days and forty nights."

If the audience response to his performance was any indication of his popularity, he could easily have done it.

Advanced Training Offered by ROTC

With the increasing number of faculty and student officers in the Army Reserve and the National Guard, the Army has set up a branch of the advanced officer training program on campus.

The program is designed to alleviate the inflex of G.I. Bill students, and the growing number of faculty reservists.

Usually any candidate for advanced officer courses must travel to Springfield. However, the new program is centered at Dickinson Hall.

The program is designed for all company grade officers of the Army Reserve and National Guard who want field ratings. It trains officers with modern weapons and techniques of today's warfare.

Lt. Col. Harold Gatslick (professor of Wood Science and Technology) will be the principal instructor. Col. Gatslick has been in the Army for 24 years. He is a combat officer and has taught many officers' training programs.

Local officers attending the program include undergraduate Lt. Victor Covoleski, graduates Lts. Peter Wood, William Gunlicks, Henry Hyde, and George Schoning; and faculty members Maj. Marian Raye and Capt. William Springer.

There are still 11 openings available. Any officers interested in increasing their officer rating should attend this course. Meetings are held at 7:30 Thursday night at Dickinson Hall. Anyone interested should call Col. Gatslick at 545-2191 days or 549-0312 nights.

Quest for New Answers

Academic Workshop

Requirements or . . .

Injecting a practical note into SWAP's workshop on Academic Reform, Dr. Robert Stanfield of the Sociology Dept. commented that "It is impossible to abolish requirements until you have a strong advisory system." It was upon these two issues—the advisory system and the abolition of requirements—that the afternoon workshop centered.

Headed by Ken Hardy of the University Reform Committee, the discussion warmed up with complaints from students over areas of the curriculum and in particular the math, science and language requirements of liberal arts students.

Science for Non-Majors

While both faculty and administrators explained that Chemistry, Physics and Botany Departments were now offering special courses for non-majors, many of the students still argued that the overall background, which Hardy called "the substance of liberal arts education," is still being lost in courses dealing with specifics of sciences.

One student, citing the experimental History of Science course being offered in the Orchard, commented that there is a "need for courses in science for non-science majors that have application toward practical aspects of life."

Professor Gamble of the Economics department feels that requirements are outdated and he added that the arguments for keeping certain courses are "presented by faculty in order for them to keep their jobs."

Gamble also cited a need for better advisors and suggested that pay increases and promotions be used to encourage a better advisory system.

As a compromise between the arguments for and against the core curriculum, Hardy suggested "a general course system, flexible so that if a course appears which the student either can't understand or does not like he can get out.

Publications Workshop

The Challenge

The basic premise of SWAP's student publications workshop was that the communications media on campus needs some improvement.

Picking up the challenge from Dr. Mark Noffsinger's address the night before, the publications conference discussed the problems of the publications and raised the questions of censorship vs. freedom for college editors.

One of the first topics on the agenda was the issue of a publications board. Members of the University's Publications Commission, first reported on the work of the summer and explained the proposed "Board" which the Commission will be proposing in a few weeks.

Pub. Board

The Publications Commission, established last spring to review student publications and consider the possibilities of a Pub Board, has drawn up what co-chairman of the Commission, Lew Gurwitz, called "a board designed to help the media and not censor them."

Moving into the area of press control, the conference defined censorship as "prior restraint of publication material from an outside source."

The media representatives ruled out any justifications for obscenity in the news media and stressed that each publication needs a definition of its goals and an understanding of the community which it portends to serve.

Moderator of the discussion, Mr. Alvin Oickle, advisor to the Collegian, summed up the discussion on censorship: "Freedom of Expression must be backed up by responsible judgment and it must take into consideration the community which the publication serves."

The group wrapped up the day with an airing of problems which the media are faced with.

The general complaint of the media was organizational weaknesses based on lack of interested students to fill out staff positions.

Recognizing problems common to each publication, the discussion group, representing Index, Critique, WMUA, Spectrum and Collegian agreed to call an editors' meeting for Tuesday, Oct. 11 in order to continue the discussion.

TICKETS . . .

they become upperclassmen. He felt seniors should have first crack at good seats because they have been here longer.

Obtaining a ticket for a friend from another school is relatively easy. Novak said that when a student comes to pick up his own ticket he may purchase a reserved seat ticket for the seat next to him at the regular purchase price. Prices range from three dollars for the UConn game to four dollars for the B.C. game.

No Parking Fee Refunds

Johnston explained that the Athletic Council decided to abolish the parking fee in order to expedite access to the stadium. There will be no rebates to those who purchased season tickets.

If a student loses his reserved seat ticket after turning in his coupon, he must purchase another ticket at the regular purchase price, Johnston said.

On the question of lost coupon books, Johnston said that the Committee had three possible solutions. They rejected the idea of replacing coupon books free, and the idea of a specific price for a new coupon book. Rather, the new policy is that a student with a lost coupon book can purchase a ticket for a home game at one dollar less than the regular seat prices. Johnston said the student will be given a card to verify that he has lost his coupon book, and that he will present this with his I.D. to purchase his ticket.

It was decided against replacing a book free, Johnston reported, because when Holy Cross tried it, the first week they had 200 lost books reported.

Johnston explained that the Council lacks ticket window space and personnel to run the system they way they would like to. Dartmouth, he said, has 40 feet of ticket window space and eight ticket men. "Mr. Novak is doing it all himself," he went on. He added that an attempt will be made to get some part-time help and to move some offices to allow for more space.

Asked why there was a change in policy from last year, when only an I.D. shown at the gate was required for admission, Johnston stated that about 300 or 400 I.D.'s were passed through the fence and used again, some three and four times.

He emphasized that although part of the Athletic Fee is used to pay off the bonds on the stadium, no part of it is used to operate the stadium. The revenue for this comes solely from ticket receipts.

Johnston complained that the stadium lacks adequate seating capacity. It holds 17,400, increased to 21,000 with bleachers.

Boston College wanted to purchase 10,000 tickets for $40,000, but he said that we were only able to sell them 5,800 tickets in order to have enough room for our own students.

The purpose of the new policy, Johnston said, is to better predict how many students plan to be at the game. This way it will be known how many hot dogs and sodas to buy so that as little food as possible will be wasted. Also, those tickets which have not yet been picked up by the Friday before the game can go on general sale.

Last year, Johnston continued, end seats had to be sold, while middle ones reserved for students who never came, remained empty.

Asked if the accusation that someone was trying to make a profit out of the football games was true, Johnston said that football at UMass was a purely non-profit venture.

However, he continued, "Yes, we would like to have some income beyond our expenses. Nobody is going to pocket the money . . . If we can make more income per game, we can expand into other areas and support more sports."

He explained that they would also like to improve facilities at the stadium, for example, installing water fountains. For this, some working capital is needed.

Charges Dropped For Chicago Editors

Disorderly conduct charges were dismissed September 26 against two Chicago student editors who tried to interview Cicero residents immediately preceding a scheduled civil rights march into the racially-sensitive Chicago subarb.

David Satter, present editor of the University of Chicago Maroon, set out with an associate, August 25, to find out what the "average Joe" felt about open housing. They spent the afternoon in jail for their trouble.

Th area has benn tense for several weeks. Over 2,000 Illinois National Guard troops had been called up to protect the would-be marchers, who called off their open housing protest at the last minute.

The charges were filed when a school store owner complained to police after she was interviewed by the pair. Both journalists contended that they had no idea she was upset until they were apprehended by Cicero police an hour later.

At the station, the two were confronted with a file of articles they had written for the Maroon. "They showed me a story I had written earlier in the summer predicting riots on the West Side, and asked me how I could be so sure that there would be trouble before it happened," Satter said. "The whole idea of them having a file on me before arresting me is sort of disturbing," he added.

The intended story never materialized. The store owner was the first person they interviewed.

Bad Spot

Another serious accident occurred at the intersection of Clarkhill and Stockbridge Road (beside Fernald Hall) at 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

Although no one was injured, the two car collision resulted in damage over $200 to the station wagon and sedan involved.

The station wagon, driven by Boyd Richardson, 20, of Greenfield, was heading south on Stockbridge Road when it was struck broadside by the sedan, driven by James Miller, 20, of Braintree, which was coming down the hill.

The front right fender of the sedan was jammed against the tire. The rear left door window of the station wagon was smashed in.

Birth and Rebirth

by JACK DEAN, Editorial Day Editor

Spring — it's definitely the best season.

Its beauty is that of birth and rebirth; exhilaration and romance; contentment; a profound sense of closeness to nature and man.

It's a time of excitement; a time for discovery. Ideas are born. Attitudes are modified. A new world takes shape and new avenues are opened—intellectually, spiritually.

Then, when nature has reached her zenith, autumn appears. In a blazing spectrum nature dies, too soon saying farewell to those who love her freshness and admire her vitality.

So alive she was! She should have had more time—deserved more time—to develop even further.

But she did not choose to die. And in truth she did not. A rest is her only desire. Even nature cannot maintain youth and vitality without rest.

The days may grow dark. The land may become dreary. Yet the remembrance of nature at her best will remain, and work will be easier more bearable.

And if we have faith, the warmth will one day return bringing anew the joy, discovery, and outward growth.

Then can it be said, joyfully, "It's April. It's beautiful."

E-ducere--To Bring Out

by DON ALIFERIS, Editorial Staff

Education—to bring out man; to bring out his productiveness, creativity and potential—for his happiness, to conquer the augur of the human situation.

What is education today? What is it like here—its purpose? What is the meaning of an education that consists of "required" technicalism?

The function of an education defined as course requirements and academic confinement is to produce parts for a machine. The purpose is to supply automatons for life-as-alienation; to produce humanoids for cog-to-cog relationships; to reinforce our society as systemized sterility.

"You pays your money, but you don't gets your choice." You're given an education that will allow you to obtain some of the goods, services, and statuses that you've been taught to want. To this end your requirements are somewhat relevant; to no meaningful or fulfilling end are they significant. The denial of choice is part of your training.

You take a load of bits and pieces as your required curriculum. In the name of profession, you sacrifice general understanding and become a "bit." Your education is the threading of a screw. And that is the style and range of your life.

If you don't understand what you've just read you may already be fitted into your notch. If you do, you probably share the writer's pain, but that is hope. It is the energy with which you can force change. It is the motivation with which you can urge professors, student senators, trustees, state legislators. It is the base from which you can demand freedom to choose — the first exercise in creativity, preparation for life with a pulse.

EDITORIAL POINTS

To the Editor:

There must be some logical reason why Southwest Commons does not allow the cash purchase of meals. It certainly is frustrating to parents who wish to eat with their son or daughter.

Most of us know how to say nothing. Few of us know when.

If classes must be held in Curry Hicks, at least bells could be provided so that classes won't run overtime. (Mahar Auditorium could also use a few bells.)

Celebrate by having a good time you'll never forget — not one you can't remember.

Letters to the Editor

"Inconsiderate, disrespectful, and A General Pain!"

To the Editor:

All dormitories have some residents who are inconsiderate, disrespectful and a general pain to others around them. Fortunately, their number is small. Yet, this small group is a big nuisance, especially in the Gorman-Hills area. Usually, fellow students in the dorm are able to enlighten these comedians, or with especially dense subjects, make it clear that "guys" who interfere with the rights of others will not be tolerated—no matter how much "cool" they have.

This process, of one student asking (or telling) another student to be quiet, is part of maturing. It is an essential aspect of self-government and self-control within the dormitory. The requesting student has realized that it is his responsibility to speak to the nuisance, or else accept repeated invasions of privacy. The comedian, hopefully, will realize that he does not live in a vacuum; he will see through the cloud entitled "I".

If our clown stops thinking about himself and his popularity for awhile, he'll recognize that his noisy actions affect the lives of other people—other "guys" like himself. Of course, some people either don't want to mature or they aren't mentally equipped to do so. Well, it is their privilege to do any darn thing they want, providing their actions to dot interfere with the lives of other students.

So, you loud-mouths in Hills and Gorman, shut up! There are guys who work their way through college. There are guys who are considerate of others. There are guys who are not bored with life. These guys want to learn, they want to study. They do not want to listen to idiots advertise their stupidity by screaming seventh-grade expressions out of windows. If you poor, mixed-up souls don't like school, do yourself and your family a favor and leave. You're wasting time, money, and a deserving student's chance to learn.

This letter has been specifically addressed to both the clown and the timid soul who's always a "nice guy", and does not want to ask his neighbor to be quieter. Well Jack, it's your life he's "tampering" with. People will exploit you the rest of your life, if you always give them the chance. Let the other guy play his little games, but why should you allow him to repeatedly bother you?

Finally, Mr. Comedian, if you persist in screaming vulgarities out of the window, you will find that when you face the inevitable consequences, your buddies will be laughing at you and not with you.

Milk, Motherhood, and Straws

To the Editor:

Thank God (or someone) that there is the Collegian editorial page to enlighten and inspire us. Misquoting and silliness are sins uncommitted by uncommitted editors. Entertainment value may be nil, but the Collegian serves the public well and the truth faithfully. Such high standards have enabled both administration and students to take your editorials seriously.

Such a press is very powerful. The day after your milk and motherhood stand pervaded the campus a straw vote poll was taken among students drinking milk with straws in the North Commons. The results are one-hundred per cent: these students not only liked milk but also loved mother. One of the boys polled put it succinctly, "I wouldn't be here today without my mother. All of us had mothers, but we all can't be one." Students like to read and are strongly influenced by your intelligent, serious, and accurate editorials.

A final word of praise to the sun rising to light a new world of journalism; the omission of God and country was well considered. A live God might well divide both campus and country. And a well-defended flag might do the same.

So this is why the Collegian continues unrivalled in popularity. To quote the Commons man again, "Milk and Motherhood now and forever one and inseparable!" Such editorials lead us to come and reason together. The need for good journalism is great but so is the Collegian !

"Poor Judgment . . ."

To the Editor:

In reply to Rev. Criswell's statement printed in last Friday's Collegian concerning Dr. Timothy Leary: Reverand W. A. Criswell is a "first-class screwball."

In your effort to publish something of interest to this college community, you have used very poor judgment in selecting such a biased and pointless article. People have various opinions of Dr. Leary and his work, granted. However, to publish one religious leader's fanatic "decree" against a person whom he obviously does not understand seems to be in extremely poor taste and shows very little concern by you and your fellow editors for printing objective, worthwhile news.

It is not my intention to praise Dr. Leary at this time, although perhaps he deserves such praise, but only to point out your poor judgment in printing only one person's extreme views on such a controversial matter. Rev. Criswell's "decree" is a typical example of the verbal attacks Dr. Leary must face from a large portion of our uninformed society.

May I wish the Collegian better luck in selecting articles of general interest and import, and the best of luck to Dr. Leary with his League for Spiritual Discovery.

Dirty Tactics

To the Editor:

As a past officer of James House, I am dismayed at the tactics of certain campaign committees. Malicious and unfounded rumors, and the refusal of the originators of the rumors to state openly their reasons for name-calling are disrupting the foundations of dorm government.

I congratulate those candidates who last year debated the issues involved. More such debates are needed to bring issues into the open, rather than the unfounded rumors which only blacken the names of candidates.

"Peach of His Eye"

An open letter to the head of North Commons:

I assume, in writing this letter, that you have never heard that variety is the spice of life. In the three weeks I have been here, I have been treated to 21 straight days of having peaches. Now I used to like peaches, but not after seeing them at every third meal. Unless you do something quickly to correct this situation, I will be forced to try to have you imPEACHED. We DO have an orchard full of apples, you know.

The Pilgrims Knew

Facts About Beer and Wine

Would you believe that the Pilgrims stopped at Plymouth Rock instead of Virginia because they'd run out of beer?

Original Diet Drink

Or that the original diet drink may have been spiced wine, distilled and mixed with sugar?

Or that raw cabbage seasoned with vinegar is a hangover remedy and fried owl eggs, a cure for alcoholism?

Fact or folklore, all these stories are part of the remarkable history of wine and food that is described in a recently - published encyclopedic volume by William Younger. He was a Scottish poet-novelist who may be best known to the reading public as William Mole, author of five thrillers, including the best-selling Hammersmith Maggot.

Younger's posthumously-published Gods, Men and Wine is a thriller of sorts itself. But the amusing and sometimes outrageous stories like the aforementioned must be dug out of a mass of scholarly detail and speculation about wine's early development and progress through the centuries.

Cites Pilgrims

The Pilgrims report is contained in the brief final chapter on American wines that was written by John Hutchison, who attributes it to the Pilgrims themselves.

Younger theorizes that wine was discovered by a woman and tells one mythological version of its origin.

In ancient Persia, a member of King Jamshid's harem supposedly sneaked a drink from a jar labeled poison because she preferred death to an incessant headache. The jar contained grapes that had fermented accidentally.

The myth continues that the lady, who didn't even suffer a hangover, liked the wine so well that she polished off the remainder before confessing her secret to the king, who promptly ordered more of it made.

The book, which is handsomely and profusely illustrated, is as much a history of eating habits as it is of drinking.

Among the well - documented food facts the author includes are:

Cheese cake was popular as long ago as ancient Greece.

Roman Breakfast

Skimpy breakfasts date back at least to early Rome. Coffee and doughnut-dunkers take note:

"The Roman breakfast, the jentaculum, was little more than the barest satisfaction of hunger. A piece of bread, with perhaps a few olives or raisins, seems to have been usual, though boys might eat a pastry. . .but in general it was a meal of no importance eaten in haste, and quite without ceremony."

Remember the old nursery rhyme about "four-and-twenty blackbirds baked in a pie"? That was no joke in the Middle Ages. Younger writes that medieval men were big meat eaters who preferred tame or game meat to fish and that ". . .the dinner table was often graced with 'small birds', among which were partridges, quail, larks, pigeons, swifts and blackbirds."

He fixes the beginning of gastronomy, the art or science of good eating, in Elizabethan times, when those who could afford it lived largely on "meat and game, geese and chickens and a cer-

Discussions Planned On Campus Life

Mortar Board President Anne Yakavonis has announced that during the first two weeks of October, members of Mortar Board and Adelphia will be moderating discussions on scholarship, social life, and student responsibilities on the UM campus.

These discussions will be held at all Freshmen women's dorms. The moderators will be reflecting on their own experiences as members of the 'college community, examining the new freedoms and responsibilities of college students, and confronting questions presented by the Freshmen.

In order to facilitate the discussion, freshmen are invited to jot down questions and topics which they would like to hear discussed, and place them in the Question Boxes provided in their dorms.

Mortar Board is the Senior women's honor society whose members are selected annually on the basis of scholarship, service, and leadership in campus activities. Adelphia is a men's honor society with a similar selection basis.

Discussion will begin at 7 p.m. on the following nights:

Oct. 3: John Q. Adams (middle dorm); Eugene Field; Lewis; Melville; Coolidge (middle dorm).

Oct. 4: Leach; Emily Dickinson; John Q. Adams (lower dorm); Coolidge (lower dorm).

Oct. 5: Crabtree; Mary Lyons; Dwight; Johnson.

Oct. 6: Hamlin; Van Meter North; Van Meter South; John Q. Adams (upper dorm).

Oct. 10: Knowlton; Emerson.

Oct. 11: Thoreau; Coolidge (upper dorm).

Newman Retreat Ends

by KAREN KARPOWICZ

The annual open retreat, sponsored by the U Mass Newman Center came to a successful close last Wed., Sept. 29. Father Benedict of the Passionist Monastery in West Springfield held a short talk each evening from Sunday, Sep. 25 through Wednesday.

Father Benedict instructed the participating students in many different aspects of life. Included in his talks were the following thoughts: Man goes by instinct rather than by intellect; A student will allow the cultural stream to pull him along because he is anxious to belong to the in-group; A college student supposedly has to have an out; He finds pseudo-peace in L S D, Marijuana, and liquor; He is tortured by the inner feeling of aloneness and is lonely and isolated and totally unable to communicate with other people.

Father Benedict also mentioned his stand on evolution. He said that man evolves from the sublime to the divine. Man could have been created suddenly or could have evolved from lower forms of life. In either instance, God was the maker—either by directly creating man or by creating an organism which through many years developed into man.

Father Benedict reinforced the forcefulness of his speech by wearing a black cape. Anyone at the retreat could not help but notice the cape as a symbol of the power with which he presented each talk.

Radcliffe Studies Dorm Reform

by TOM McNIFF

A House is not a Home at Radcliffe, but college officials are studying a plan that might possibly bring Radcliffe's present house system in line with the delights made famous by the Harvardian residential arrangement.

Generally, plans call for the establishment of three 270-resident houses, and eventually a "one girl, one room" living arrangement.

Architect, Ronald Gourley, formerly associated with Sert, Jackson and Gourley, has been retained to make a year-long study of ways to integrate Radcliffe houses into a system comparable to Harvard's.

For those uninitiated in the ways of the Harvard, a "house" is a complex of dormitories served by common facilities such as dining halls, kitchens and commons rooms.

Radcliffe's present plans call for the merger of the present East and South Houses into one residential unit, the retention of an unchanged North House and the completion of a third house.

Construction of the newest house has been stopped until Radcliffe has been able to raise $5,000,000 necessary for the finish of the complex. Planned renovations of existing dormitories will cost an estimated, additional $9,000,000.

Some of the present Radcliffe buildings are already served by common facilities that act as connecting passageways between the buildings of a house. Gourley is considering a plan to either build underground passageways or above ground facilities to interconnect the dormitories.

The "one girl, one room" accommodations would be provided after completion of the third house. Existing dormitories would then be renovated, converting double rooms to singles, and, at the same time, faculty suites, commons rooms and dining facilities would be built on lower floors.

Teacher Corps Dies

The National Teacher Corps will meet an untimely death on June 30, 1967—a victim of Congressional apathy and Congresswoman Edith Green's hostility.

This outcome was almost assured Thursday (September 22) when the Senate Appropriations Committee cut the Corps' budget request to $7.5 million — just enough to carry it through the 1966 fiscal year.

Earlier this year, in April, the House Appropriations Committee denied the Corps' entire budget request for its activities.

The Senate move was a setback for the Johnson Administration's efforts to combat teacher shortages and sub-standard education in slum areas. The Corps has had rough going in Congress since its establishment under the 1965 Higher Education Act and has operated under supplementary budget funds since its founding.

The Corps provides for the training of college graduates in special teaching techniques to serve in slum areas. The program was designed by the Administration to attract the youthful idealism often claimed for Peace Corps and Vista recruits.

After receiving their training, Corpsmen teach in slum areas and supplement the regular school curriculum by offering students remedial reading, language laboratories, and cultural tours.

For their efforts, Corpsmen reecive the same salaries as local teachers and pursue government-paid Master's degree programs to earn teacher certification. Corpsmen for the expenses of attending training centers, and cates. Travel funds are given to they are paid $75 a week during summer training.

The compensation the Corpsmen receive has brought strong opposition from Representative Green, a key figure in shaping most educational legislation. The Oregon Congresswoman has arged that the financial benefits received by Corpsmen, combined with the special attention and reduced teaching loads they receive, discriminates against local school teachers and lowers morale at their schools.

The inexperienced Corpsmen, she adds, might lower teaching standards at the schools where they are assigned.

"Ridiculous," according to aide to Senator Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.), a strong supporter of the Corps. The teachers in the program are all college graduates, undergo extensive training, and are well-prepared to teach, he said.

But the opposition of Edith Green did not in itself kill the funds for the Corps. The program has met with little enthusiasm among voters and Congressmen, and legislators have been unwilling to raise domestic expenditures while the Viet Nam war continues and inflation threatens the economy.

The mood was glum at the Teacher Corps office after the Senate vote, as officials worried about the effect of the budget cut on prospective Corpsmen. For the past few weeks, Corpsmen, who were expecting regular Does College Help?

New findings show that low man at Bartlett Hall this year might be a Wall Street big man after graduation. There seems to be no direct relationship between high grades in college and professional success in later life, two recent studies indicate.

Dr. Eli Ginzberg, a New York researcher, studied a group of Columbia University graduate students who had won fellowships to the school between 1944 and 1950. Ginzberg's task was to find out how successful the 342 students had become 14 years after they completed their fellowships.

The findings showed students who had graduated from college with honors, who had won scholastic medals or who had been elected to Phi Beta Kappa were more likely to be in the "lower professional performance levels" than students who had not distinguished themselves while in college.

In another survey, a team of University of Utah professors found there is almost no relationship between the grades a medical student gets and his later performance.

He added that the study caused him to question the adequacy of grades not only in selecting those who should be admitted to medical school but also in measuring a student's progress.

There are numerous theories attempting to explain these surprising findings. The most common one affirms that the overemphasis on grades which begins when a student is in junior high school and continues throughout his academic career tends to destroy interest in learning for its own sake.

Educator John Holt observes that current school methods destroy love of learning by encouraging students to work for petty rewards—names on honor rolls, gold stafs, for the "ignoble satisfaction of feeling they are better than someone else."

Two Awarded Medals At Ceremony

Meritorious achievement during service in Viet Nam by Army officers from Northfield and Amherst was recognized at ceremonies on the University of Massachusetts campus Thursday.

President's Order

On direction of President Johnson, Lt. Col. Stephen W. Bachinski of 40 Main St., Northfield was presented his third Air Medal, and Capt. Thomas A. Wilson, 2d of 16 Webster Ct., Amherst received the Bronze Star Medal in a ceremony in the parade area of Dickinson Hall.

As part of the progarm, UMass President John W. Lederle presented proficiency ribbons to 18 senior ROTC cadets, earned through achievement in training.

Lt. Col Bachinski, an 18-year Army veteran who returned from Viet Nam in June, is assigned to the UMass graduate program through the Army civil schools program, and is a candidate for a master's degree in economics. Capt. Wilson is an assistant professor of military science in the UMass ROTC program.

A Political Tale

Holy Cross student Maurice P. Bois, Jr., noticed when he came home from college on the weekend before the New Hampshire Republican primary that there were only five candidates for the six-member GOP state convention delegation in his Manchester ward.

He launched a write-in campaign and won. Bois, 22, is a political science student at Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass.

Bois was among those against a platform committee proposal which would put the party on record indorsing a reduction of the voting age in New Hampshire from 21 to 18.

Saying he does not think people have enough maturity at age 18, Bois voted against it at the GOP convention in Concord. The vote made the difference as the convention rejected the proposal by 185-184 Monday.

Astronomy Club Opens Tonight

The UMass Astronomy Club will be holding its first meeting of the season this evening, Oct. 3, in Room 134 Hasbrouck, at 7:30 p.m. The Club's office is 244 Hasbrouck.

Two short films, "Ranger Moon Pictures" and "Solar Prominences" will be shown, to be followed by a business meeting.

For the first time since its formation, the Club has equipment geared for both the novice star-gazer and the serious amateur astronomer.

The club presently owns a new 8 inch reflecting telescope and accessory equipment for making timings of astronomical events. Equipment for astrophotography is also available.

At the disposal of the Astronomy Club are the University's 20 inch reflecting telescope, and Mt. Holyoke's 8 inch refracting telescope.

Music Faculty In Off-Campus Recitals

Faculty recitals will move off-campus this year under a new "Music from the University of Massachusetts" program sponsored by the UMass music department.

Customarily given on campus with the public admitted free of charge, the faculty chamber music series this year will be made available on a request basis to schools, community concert groups or any other educational or cultural organi-

Booters Outmud Maine, 5-0

Russo, Ayanaba Star in Rout

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

A rain-soaked Varsity Field was the arena of competition as the Redmen slashed to their initial 1966 Yankee Conference soccer victory Saturday at the expense of Maine, 5-0.

The inexperienced Black Bears, in their second season of Yan Con competition, were outplayed and outmaneuvered throughout the contest, but it remained for Phil Bozenhard to toe the leather into the net on an assist by Gary Gibbons early in the second period to give the Redmen a lead they never relinquished.

Goals, fittingly, came spatelike in the third canto as Marty Smith at inside right set the precedent for mates Jerry Cellilli and Pete Nakambera when he tallied to open the session.

Cellilli's boot was a fine, hard shot on a penalty. Maine goalie Frank Stewart, lauded by UMass Coach Larry Briggs while peppered with 34 shots during the long, wet encounter, was unable to negotiate the save on the wet ground.

Bruce Allen found the range in the fourth quarter and finished the day's scoring activity by driving home the fifth Redmen tally.

The Black Bears, only in their fourth year of varsity soccer play, dropped the contest by the same count a year ago.

Briggs praised the efforts of outstanding center half Aba Ayanaba and Mike Russo, left halfback and team captain.

"Both played outstanding games considering the condition of the field and without question slowed down the Maine offense immeasurably." He also was immeasurably." He also was Cellilli and Smith and was "extremely satisfied" with the play of the team as a whole.

The Redmen's ledger now stands at 1-1 for the season, as the victory represented a complete about fare from the Amherst game. While the Redmen played well against the Jeffs, they lacked the offensive thrust exhibited against Maine.

The showing against weak Maine may or may not augur well for the future performances of Briggs' boys. A more concrete determinant will be Saturday's encounter with the 1965 tri-Yan Con champion, Connecticut, set for a 10:30 start here.

Last year the Huskies dumped UMass, 5-1, while tying the Redmen and Vermont for the Beanpot bounty.

Huge Frosh Gridders Open at West Point

by AL PEAKES
Sports Staff

The UMass freshman football team will be putting the finishing touches on its offense and defense this week in preparation for its opener Friday at West Point.

The squad, under the leadership of Coach Burley Crowe and assistants Dave Kelley, Steve Trbovich, and Sam Johnson, has been working out for about two weeks and is rapidly rounding into form.

Coach Crowe, formerly a defensive coach at V.M.I., Villanova, and Vanderbilt, is new to UMass this year. He played his college ball at Shepherd State College in West Virginia, where he was a center.

"Thus far," Crowe said, "the primary emphasis in drills has been on team play. The sooner the boys get used to each other the better they will jell."

Seven states are represented on the squad. Some come from as far away as Ohio, while one is an Amherst product.

The team's most noticeable asset is its large line. Some of the anchors of the forward wall will be 6'6"—285-pound Dick Donlin, a tackle from New Britain, Conn., Bob Goc, a 220-pound All-Scholastic guard from Everett, and a pair of Pennsylvania natives, Kev Kelley and Mike Cooney.

Among the promising backs are Gerry Grasso a standout at Exeter Academy last fall; John Decembele, a halfback from Canton; and quarterback Ken Hughes from Denville, New Jersey.

A full-time trainer, Frank Welles, is a new feature of this year's squad.

LA Wins Pennant

Sandy Koufax turned in a clutch performance beating the Phillies. 6-3, to give the Dodgers their third flag in four years. If the phenomenal southpaw had failed, the San Francisco Giants, who swept three games from the Pirates, would be playing the Reds in Cincinnati today in hopes of tying LA for the top. Koufax prevented that.

Furious Intramural Action Lures Sadistic Fans

by MIKE GOULD, Sports Editor

Is the only loser in intramurals the non-participant?

There are several ailing individuals on campus who might well disagree with this motto of director Chet Gladchuck. A painful feeling inside tells each of them that he is a loser.

Once upon a time touch football was a game of speed and finesse. These remain the essential factors for success, but winning and surviving are two entirely different events.

Touch football, as exemplified here at the University, has become a game for big boys and courageous or masochistic others. The physically frail fellow who is shy of contact, may just as well stick to a safe game of backyard two-on-two.

Intramural football here at UMass is a terrifically rough game. If you are skeptical, try your luck at football, intramural style. If you are nerveless, glance over the injury deferred lists of the various intramural squads on campus. They make Vic Fusia's renowned ledger of walking wounded look like a resume of Cassius Clay's boxing injuries.

Lack of equipment is not the sole reason for the rash of injuries which has kept the infirmary so busy of late. The games are in the evening hours, and the grass is usually damp. Sprained ankles and knees are thus inevitable.

In addition, the highly spirited competition among the teams, especially in the fraternity leagues, encourages extra-hard blocking and generally more contact.

Certainly no one is immune to injury on the intramural field, but the guy who really takes the brunt of the contact is the pitiful blocking back. This valiant warrior's mission is to protect his quarterback. To do so, he must bear the blows of the charging defensive men whose task it is to get at the passer. The collisions between defensive end and blocking back are earth-shaking, and the blocker usually gets the worst of the mess. To last a full game at blocking back is a minor miracle.

Although the games are rough, they are well organized and officiated and can be great fun. They also serve as an important physical and emotional outlet for the frustrated and depressed collegiate males. Nothing like a bone jarring block to make one forget the exam he has recently flunked.

Whether you are naturally sadistic or would enjoy watching hard-nosed football games played by surprisingly talented individuals, come down to the intramural field some weekday evening. The hard-working, devoted intramural players need your moral and vocal support, for unlike the efforts of our varsity stars, the intramural players are not financially rewarded.

INTRAMURALS

KS, LCA Clash Tonight

by DAVE JARNES
Sports Day Editor

Rain forced postponement of Thursday's games. However, the first week's activities produced some interesting statistics in the respective divisions.

The usual powerhouses are on top in the fraternities. Kappa Sigma, AEP, and Lambda Chi all have perfect 2-0 slates in the "B" league. The feature game of the week will be tonight's big clash between perennial champ KS and LCA. BKP, SPE, ZN, and TEP all have unblemished records in the "A" league, but this situation is certain to change very shortly when the leaders confront each other. Epstein of TEP is the leading passer percentage-wise (.714), but Ed Godek of KS has thrown nine TD passes in two games. McDonough of KS is the leading receiver (10) while Kane of BKP and Scully of KS are the top point producers (24).

Turning to the dormitory leagues, the Grayson Flaming A's, the Grayson Aces, and the Webster Hawks all are 2-0. Zeke Sweeney of the Hawks is the leading passer (.667) and Tufts of the Mills Birch is the leading receiver (nine).

Surprisingly, the Cougars are the only unbeaten team in the Southwest League. Ward of the Cougars is the leading passer (.647) and Healy of the Cougars is the leading scorer (20). Pettingill of the Colts has caught the most passes (7). As usual, the Maroons are on top of the East league, although the Eagles and Grants are also unbeaten. The Maroons dominate the individual statistics with Alyward as the leading passer (.615), Murphy the leading receiver (ten), and Sears as the leading scorer (30).

The National League is the only independent league to release its first week's statistics. The Hangovers, Griffins, and Froshites dominate the standings with 2-0 records. Rossi of the Griffins tops all passers (.818), O'Sullivan of the Griffins and Berringer of the Foundrymen have caught eight passes, and Howland of the Froshites has 30 points to his credit.

SWAP DISCUSSIONS SPAN CAMPUS-WIDE TOPICS

MEN'S DORMS: The Students' "Home"

The future role of the dormitories in relation to the expanding growth and evolution of UM was discussed at the SWAP discussion of men's dorms.

The discussion revolved around the desire to alter the social, cultural and governing functions of the residence halls. This is an attempt to deal with the alienation of the student from the University community.

It was the hope of the participants that the residence hall will eventually become the student's "home" rather than just a place to sleep.

Student participation in dorm life was also viewed by participants as an attempt to give students a sense of responsibility and a sense of "belonging and identifying" with the University.

FOUR POINTS

The discussion touched on four points of dorm life and the representatives offered suggestions toward the improvement of them.

- Self-government and the role of the judiciary.
- House Council meetings should be open to all residents and run by the students.
- The proposal was also agreed upon that the constitution for each house should be available to each member with the students having the power through referendum or petitions to alter any rules they feel are unjust.
- In regards to judiciary, the representatives proposed that House judiciary be expanded so as to envolve itself with infractions of University regulations. It was hoped that Men's Judiciary could then become an appeals court.

The discussion group stressed that a student must be informed of his rights when he is accused of a crime and suggested that judiciary session be open to the public.

ROLE OF THE HEAD OF RESIDENCE

Besides being an advisor to dorm government, the panel defined the head of residence as an organizer of room assignments and counselors and as a liason between the students and the administration.

ROLE OF THE COUNSELORS

Concerning counselors, the representatives stressed that students should be allowed to solve their own problems whenever possible but noted that it was the responsibility of the counselor to enforce the regulations of the residence hall and the University when students themselves failed to do so.

OPEN HOUSE PRIVILEGES

Beginning with the premise that "college is an experience in living," the dorm discussion group put forth the statement that "the right of privacy must be given more significance and importance".

Concerned here with the issue of parietals and representatives issued this statement:

The evolution of this University has placed more faith and responsibility in the students. Thus the administration must have confidence in the students' maturity so as not to believe that they will abuse any social privileges that are given to them."

The representatives further proposed that open house privileges should be extended from once a month to every Friday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon with restrictions to consider the interests of all the students in the dormitory.

WOMEN'S DORMS: 8 Resolutions

Delegrates from all the women's dormitories presented eight resolutions after two discussion periods held at the Red Lions Inn in Stockbridge.

The Women's dormitory conference at SWAP proposed:

1. The Heads of Residence will receive screening, briefing, and training before they qualify for their position; this training will be continued annually.

2...There will be a semi-annual (end of each semester) evaluation of the Heads of Residence conducted by the Women's Affairs Committee of the Student Senate and reviewed by the Dean of Women's office with the Head of Residence.

3. There will be a semi-annual evaluation of the dormitory counselors conducted by the Women's Affairs Committee of the Student Senate and reviewed by the Dean of Women's Office with the counselor.

4. The Women's Affairs Committee will establish a committee to study the selection process of counselors.

5. Definite measures will be taken by the Dean of Women's Office to increase contact and communications between their office and individual women through social and academic interaction.

6. There will be definite measures taken by the Dean of Men's Office, Guidance Office, and Health Department to increase contact and communication between their offices and students through interaction.

7. The Dean of Men and Dean of Women's Offices will issue a statement on their stand of confidentiality concerning any student initiated communication; such a statement to be written into the handbook.

8. Parietals will be decided completely by each individual dorm.

There was consensus among the delegates that the guidance office should extend their professional services to the dorms. Delegates suggested that there should be a professional, whose knowledge of requirements and courses would be superior to that of present faculty advisors, in residence within the dormitory.

TEDDY and the PANDAS and the BOSS TWEEDS, will be at the Soph-Frosh Picnic on Saturday. The picnic will be held on the S.U. Terrace immediately after the UConn football game.

Senate Page Born

Plans have been formulated for a weekly Senate page in the Collegian. This page is intended to explain Senate procedure, clarify issues, give an up-to-date report on the various committee activities, and interview student and faculty Senate members.

One of its most important features will be a sounding-board column in which students may ask questions or voice complaints regarding any Senate or University matter. The purpose of the column is not only to answer, if posible, all questions, but to inform students of which committee or individual to contact in order to take action on complaints.

Any material for this column will be accepted now in the Collegian office c/o Senate Editors.

LONELY LEDERLE?

Out of a campus population of approximately 13,000 students only two had taken advantage of President Lederle's open office hours by 4:30 yesterday afternoon.

President Lederle believes this shows the average student is missing an excellent opportunity to counter beliefs that they are more than IBM numbers from a computer-controlled campus. In addition, he feels the students are missing a chance on this campus to personally speak to administrative heads such as the president.

He mentioned the fact that the existence of IBM cards and student numbers are necessary on a large campus such as this one. It would be impossible to run a large university without this system.

But he pointed out that a large university has more advantages than a small liberal arts school by the very fact there are more opportunities, both academic and extracurricular, available for the student.

A large campus is rich in this respect and more "life like" since the student will find himself classified after college (social security, etc.) and will find himself faced with the same number of wide opportunities.

Lederle ended by saying that the student who does not avail himself of such opportunities as open office hours is "missing one of the most important sources of information."

"My office is always available for people to come to see me," he added.

Comenting on the approval of the Yahoo budget by the Student Senate recently he stated, "There won't be any Yahoo for the time being."

He said no action will be taken until the report of the faculty-student committee on communication is submitted. He feels that until this report is received no position for or against the magazine can be taken and the action on the budget is of no force and effect..

MOOSE CAGED

The north Amherst moose has been taken away to the Franklin Park Zoo in Boston. It needs a mate since curious visitors wouldn't leave it alone with a herd of cows.

Monday, the director of the state fish and game department, James Shepard ordered the moose tranquilized and sent to the zoo.

Since it arrived in the area a week ago, crowds have been flocking to the Amherst farm of Dr. Ruder where the moose was staying.

The crowds not only were large, but also dangerous. Some people threw rocks and sticks at the moose to attract the moose's attention. Even though the moose was a perfect gentleman, state oficials were afraid that even a gentleman would lose patience under such conditions.

The moose came from Quabbin Reservoir after being removed from Northfield. It wandered into Amherst a week ago and settled with a herd of Holstein cows.

Because the M.D.C. owns Quabbin, the moose is its property. Therefore, when the crowds began acting like wild animals, the moose was moved to Franklin Park Zoo, which is operated by the M.D.C.

So, now you have to go to Boston to see the once wild moose. The moose is now behind bars. Not to protect the people, but to save the moose.

Behind the Scenes

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Somewhat domestic in outward appearances, yet so business-like behind its huge single wooden door is red-bricked Munson Hall. Walking up the beaten, cracked walk, the sound of the rolling presses can be heard faintly.

And if the signs on the front didn't clearly spell out University Publications and University Press the dull noises might possibly be mistaken as coming from the new administration building under construction nearby.

A firm grip on the weathered but ornate knob along with a good tug opens the way into a den of doors with the gnashing of typewriters beating away from within.

The unexpected is first—a 4-H office located on the immediate right. Here literature is prepared for distribution to all 14 Massachusetts counties on such topics as agriculture and home economics. Country-wide 4-H programs have their main offices located in their state universities. This is the part of the 4-H Club involved with the paperwork rather than the cows, a clerk explains.

In the corridor again, you find yourself face-to-face with a photo-display of the campus. Farther down the hall the noise becomes louder, indicating activity in one of these cubby-holes.

Through a door ajar are seen two University Press staff members leaning on a pile of paper atop a desk. The work for 19 published books has been done here under University support and graduate authority. This two-year old organization prides itself in publishing scholarship works whose market is too small for consideration by commercial publishers, a staffer explains.

From a huge window above the squeaky stairs the Tower tenants on their way to classes are visible. The smell of brewed coffee, the ringing of the phone and office upon office marks the entrance of the second floor University Publications rooms.

Catalogues, posters and brochures are the main bulk of the $80,000 printing work this year. This office has no connection with any student publications or with the University Press but will provide editorial and design services to all campus organizations. With coffee close by, the seven-man staff sees most of their proofreading done in their largest room around an eight-chaired table. Above the many file cabinets close at hand are graduate bulletins, summer session catalogues, and the President's Annual Report.

The cover for the Student Directory ? Where did it come from? Second floor, Munson Hall where design artists work on such things as last year's Winter Carnival posters, a sample of outside work done for students.

Out of the maze of connecting rooms, the stairs lead upward, but only toward storage space and dusty boxes.

But the presses do roll down in the basement in the quarters of the Duplicating Service. The old walls of dull green are somewhat covered by reams of paper—different textures, sizes. The early model refrigerator in the corner seems rather out of place but then so does a bottle of instant iced tea sitting near the preservative solution. Here fascinated workmen stood close by to watch the week-old multilith machine in action.

An annex right behind Munson Hall takes the guise of a garage. The few students who know about this "academic building" are those fortunate enough to get into overcrowded Ceramics classes. Both undergrad and graduate programs are given here under the Art Department. The wheels spin around and pottery is shaped by the hands of students working with clay in a comparatively new course which seeks to increase sensitivity of the mind, eyes and hands. The kiln for firing the pottery reaches 2,300 F as one the most informal classes on campus is conducted.

SWAP Discussion on Fine Arts: Council a Benefit to All

FEE OF $4.00

At the SWAP discussion on Fine Arts the proposed Fine Arts Council was seen as advantageous to the organizations involved. (Band, Chorale, Concert Assoc., Art Club) The alleviation of scheduling and placement problems and the raising of both quality and quantity of cultural events on campus, together with the consolidation of funds under the proposed $4.00 Fine Arts Fee were seen as immediate benefits of the Council.

An Obstacle

The postponement of construction of the Fine Arts Building was seen as a major obstacle to immediate fruition of plans for the organization.

Other difficulties considered were the precise definition of "Fine Arts"—where does one draw the line in "fine arts"—what type of talent does it include and exclude, the problem of infusing and developing culture among students and the question of what consititutes a "successful" concert.

Regarding the role of Fine Arts in relation to other organizations, it was recommended that the Fine Arts Council serve as advisors to other groups sponsoring concerts (Homecoming Committee, Classes, etc.) and further that it collaborate with DVP in an effort to improve concert entertainment.

Publicity

Publicity became a main topic of discussion with proposals offered to improve the Collegian's coverage of events. It was suggested that the Colegian contact art majors, graduate students and faculty to critique exhibits, films and lectures.

Agreeing that a good criticism is better than complete ignoring of an event, it was felt that this would serve to attract a larger group to these functions. Taped interviews on WMUA with personalities who found it impossible to visit the campus were also suggested.

Brought into focus were the difficulties that the Art Department had previously encountered with the administration regarding the censoring of art exhibits as "obsence". Here the importance of free choice, the the responsibility of full education of all those interested in art was stressed by faculty members of the Art Department.

In summary, it was reaffirmed that Fine Arts truly does have a place at SWAP by virtue of its important place in campus life at UMass. Hopefully, the Fine Arts Council, in full operation, will mold and magnify the position of fine entertainment and participation at UMass.

SWAP on Fraternities:

Individual Development

Under the leadership of William Barnard the morning conference on fraternities discussed rushing and attempted to define what fraternities had to offer.

Bob McNeil described a fraternity as, "A group whose purpose is individual development."

It was agreed that a frat man developes along two lines:

Experience — organizational and administrative.

Social.

From the discussion the following statements also evolved: Fraternities also offer identiy. A student can live with and identify with people of similar background and their cohesiveness makes them an elite group.

The afternoon discussion considered the topic of pledging and proposed that a committee be formed to study possible improvement in pledge procedure along the lines of making it a more educational experience.

NOTICE

Students interested in handling coverage and feature articles on the Student Senate are asked to attend a meeting with the Senate Editors Thurs. at 5:30 in the Collegian Office.

Arnold Air Society Meets

If a UMass student were asked the question, what is the Arnold Air Society, he would probably give one of three answers. He might first say that because he is not in ROTC, he doesn't know. Another answer might be that it is an AFROTC organization that . . . Well, he established basically what it is. A third answer might be that it is an AFROTC men's organization that sponsors activities in conjunction with a group of girls called Angel Flight.

While some points have been established, a more complete answer would be along this line. Arnold Air Society is both a service and honor organization composed of AFROTC Cadets in colleges and universities all throughout the country. With its sister organization, Angel Flight, it works to promote better public relations on campus and in the local area.

Among its specific activities here at the University are such projects as: ushering at home football games and other University functions; work with local Boy Scouts and Civil Air Patrol groups; and volunteer work at the Belchertown State School.

SELECTIONS TO BE HELD

Men's Judiciary, the seven member undergraduate board representing the entire male student body in disciplinary matters, will select one junior man.

Selections will take place on Sun., October 16 at 1:00 p.m. in the Worcester Room of the Student and are based on a series of interviews by the committee on Men's Affairs and the current Men's Judiciary Board.

Although vacancies are limited on the board, selections are held on a highly competitive basis and the board encourages all interested people to apply.

Applications may be picked up in the RSO office and should be returned there before October 14, 1966.

Record Number Transfer Students

by JOHN M. CAHILL

The University of Massachusetts has the largest number of transfer students in its history. In the words of one administration representative, "We expected quite a few, but not this many."

But numerical size was the least of the problems faced by the 800 transfer students. For one thing, there is the awe-inspiring size of the campus. Most of these students went through their freshman and sophomore years, as in the case of Berkshire Community College, in one building, where the longest walk was fro mthe basement to the third floor. As one student so aptly put it, "This place is so . . . so . . . BIG ! ! "

Another is the distance between faculty and students. Although many stated that it was too soon to tell, a great number had come to the conclusion that the student enrollment at the University is too large and diverse to allow the faculty to be as considerate of personal problems, as could the instructors at the smaller Community and Junior Colleges.

But, as one student realized, this problem is not insurmountable "I'll just have to make myself known," was the solution. Another stated, "It's just about time that I realized that I'm not a little boy anymore."

But, not all the problems faced by transfer students have a negative connotation. Far from it. In fact, the majority are overjoyed at the newfound fredom which they have encountered on campus. Overjoyed, but not overwhelmed. The last thing they will allow is to let the freedom go to their heads. Said one: "Although I am away from home and my parents' jurisdiction for the first time, I fully realize, with the help of the experience gained in the last two years, that I'm here to study." This is indicative of the general feeling that they are here not to exploit this freedom but to utilize it to its potential, and in proving themselves to be responsible, mature adults.

As past of their waturing, transfer students welcome the inexistence of a cut system. At most schools they attended before, the administration allowed each student only three cuts per course. Transfer students tend to agree that the cut system is "high school stuff".

Another factor which pleases transfer students is the amount of time which they have to devote to their studies. Commuting students whose homes were far from school had to bend and twist studying to fit around bus and car pool schedules, and, in a few cases, part-time jobs. Besides, as one student said, "With four younger brothers and sisters, my house wasn't the ideal place to cram for an exam."

Many believe dorm life is not so difficult for studying as friends had led them to believe, and that, in truth, it is almost conductive to study.

Pressed for comments on the food at the different Commons, they were unanimous in declaring that the food is much better than they had expected. The complaints were few but one cropped up again and again—lack of imagination in planning salads. "I suppose that lettuce and pineapple are healthful," said one student, "but I've eaten so much of both that I can't decide whether I'm a rabbit or the sole support of the Hawaiian pineapple industry!"

Although the University and the life are new and strange to transfer students, they neen not worry. A senior who just last year was a transfer had these words of encouragement: "Even though, at this point, you could probably think of a million places you'd rather be, you will come to realize the great opportunities offered here, and, in a few months' time, you will feel so much a part of the University that you will wonder how you could ever have felt out of place."

Joint Reception Held

On Thursday evening, 29 September, the members of the Scabbard and Blade and the Colonel's Cadre held an informal joint reception for the officers of the University of Massachusetts Army R.O.T.C. Instructor Group and their wives. Attending the gathering were Col. and Mrs. Joseph A. Bohnak, Lt. Col. and Mrs. Delter B. Wiseman, Capt. Donald C. Anselm, Capt. and Mrs. Ronald W. Gingras, and Capt. and Mrs. Thomas A. Wilson. Col. and Mrs. Robert Sadler attended as special guests of Col. Bohnak.

Col. Bohnak took the opportunity to announce that Miss Sandra Holmes, a member of the Colonel's Cadre and a sister of Chi Omega Sorority, would be the Honorary Colonel for the 1966-67 year. As her first act, Miss Holmes awarded black berets to 41 new members of the Bay State Special Forces.

Campus Humor Magazines Explored

by JEANNE MERCIER

Operating from its home base at the University of Massachusetts, the Collegiate Journalist fall issue features that peculiar college phenomenon, the campus humor magazine, its purpose and after-effects.

The cover story deals with the Charlatan, its originator, Bill Killeen, and his magratory attempts on a dozen campuses to give his baby a permanent home.

Killeen's mag has been accused of being "profane, obscene and offensive," which puts it in the same class as other collegiate attempts to satirize the world. The Collegiate Journalist questions Killeen's obstinacy in expresing his wit where it is not wanted.

Included also is a review of the case of the UMass Yahoo and its tangle last May with the state legislature.

While the spotlight is on the smut peddlers, The Collegiate Journalist manages to sneak in a successful report on the Harvard Lampoon. It tells of how "Poon's sophisticated antics," steeped in tradition, have won the favor of celebrities in journalism, politics and entertainment.

In a variety of features and photos, The Collegiate Journalist not only answers its own question—are humor mags filthy or funny?—but also answers this one: What makes a good humor magazine?

TCJ is edited by Dr. Dario Politella and sponsored nationally by Alpha Phi Gamma for the campus journalist.

UMass Is Criticized By State Auditor

State Auditor Thaddeus Buczko charged Monday that the University of Massachusetts has kept Federal grants totalling more than $1,000,000 in recent years, instead of turning the money over to the State's General Fund.

"The Department of the State Auditor is in complete disagreement with the University's contention that it can withhold such Federal funds and use them at its own discretion," Buczko said.

"We maintain that these overhead allowances were included in the grants for indirect costs such as heat, light, administrative expenses, and the use of University facilities, and should rightfully be paid into the General Fund for the benefit of the entire Commonwealth which has had to foot the bill," the auditor said.

Buczko said he has requested that the University contact the attorney general's office for an opinion on the practice, but that it has failed to do so.

Buczko said that "such an opinion would also clarify the cases of five private corporations receiving Federal funds for research work at state institutions.

"In all," Buczko said, "this has amounted to millions which, we contend, belong to the state and not to specific institutions and private corporations."

Senate Discusses Final Exam Exemption

Tonight the Student Senate will conduct its final meeting before the Senate elections.

To be considered is a bill by Sen. Mike Garjian proposing that students with an A average in a course after compietion of two major (hour) exams will have the option of taking or not taking the final exam for that course.

According to this bill, instructors of courses in which only one hour exam and a paper or other materials from which a grade has been derived will enforce the finals exemption policy at their own discretion.

The Student Senate passed the budget realizing that the administration will not approve any expenditure of funds for Yahoo.

The Senate meeting is scheduled to convene at 7:00 p.m. in the Senate Chambers. All interested students are invited to attend.

McCormack Blasts Volpe

Former Atty. Gen. Edward J. McCormack, Jr., Democratic nominee for governor, blasted Republican Gov. John A. Volpe for cutting the budget for the library at the planned new UMass Med School from $250,000 to $1,000.

"This," said McCormack, " is a true indication of the lack of interest the governor displayed when confronted by the pressing problem of improving educational facilities for our young men and women."

The challenger had demanded Sunday that Volpe face him in a debate on education. McCormack pressed the attack Minday in a speech at Merrimack College. He said a large appropriation for the UMass library was necessary at once, so the job of assembling it could be begun.

In a second campaign statement, the Democratic candidate said the state should do more to promote the arts. He proposed exhibiting local artists' works in public buildings and an annual state arts festival.

Math Team Competition To Be Started at UMass

For the first time in nearly a decade the University of Massachusetts will be represented in the William Lowell Putnam competition in mathematics.

Professor W. W. Comfort, one of the coaches of the team, admitted that "it is unrealistic at the moment to expect our team to place near the very top of the country's entries."

But, he added, "We have several bright individuals capable of drawing the national attention that comes with high scores, and it would be a pity not to give them a chance to represent themselves and the University."

Comfort stated that the tests, given simultaneously throughout the country to about 1500 students on different campuses, require more shrewdness and insight than outright knowledge or recollection of facts. "Many smart professors, who seem to know all there is to know about mathematics, do poorly when confronted with Putnam questions," he said, "while an apparently mediocre undergraduate whose problem-solving ability has never been stimulated will do far better."

Contestants compete as individuals against all others, and each school nominates in advance three contestants who constitute its "official team." This University's team has not yet been named, and the coaches have another month to decide on its composition. The next coaching session, to which interested undergraduates are invited, will be on Monday, October 10, at 2:30 p.m. in EDUC 130. Problems from earlier exams will be discussed there.

Centrex Who?

Editors Note: Inasmuch as there apparently is a breakdown of communications about our new communications system (i.e., Residence Hall Centrex), we would like to present an article by Robert N. Brooks, Assistant to the Dean of Students, in reply to a number of questions that have arisen about this system, and at the same time to clarify several issues raised by the September 16 Collegian editorial "Teed Off".

WHAT IS CENTREX ?

"Centrex" is a telephone dialing system which provides direct dialing, without charge, to any telephone in Amherst, Northampton and Belchertown; direct dialing of station-to-station long distance calls; automatic charging for long distance (toll) calls; direct inward dialing to campus from one telephone to another; and campus, long, and long-distance information service.

PLANNING THE SYSTEM

The plans for residence hall room telephones at the University began in response to the Administration's concern several years ago for providing a more up-to-date and viable intra-campus communications system. The Student Senate had also been raising questions as to means of improving the then overburdened campus telephone service. For the past 3-4 years, hundreds of man hours were spent, in cooperation with representatives of the New England Telephone Co. and Bell System, to engineer an installation that would serve the growing requirements of an expanding campus.

We reviewed students' suggestions, visited other universities, and literally developed from the ground up a system that would serve the needs of resident students. It became apparent that room telephone service was an appropriate solution, rather than adding more public pay phones. The new "#5 Crossbar Central Office" on Fearing St. was built with these ends in mind, incorporating the provisions of Centrex noted above.

THE ADVANTAGES

In addition to the inherent advantages of the Centrex System, the administration (and the students consulted) felt that other desirable features presented themselves, given the size of our campus, both physically and in terms of resident population, which numbered 9,100 at the beginning of this year. These features were: the opportunity to consult with other students or faculty members on study assignments; privacy and freedom of discussion (social or otherwise); an expeditious means of disseminating and retrieving information for students involved in extracurricular committee work; reducing time spent in travel to faculty and administrative offices and libraries to make appointments and obtain information available over the telephone; considerably reducing the frustration level of any one who tried to get a women's residence hall telephone; reducing the necessity of cross campus trips for business (social and academic) that otherwise was virtually obviated by an overburdened telephone, etc., etc.

In the high-rise residence halls, they largely replace the intercom systems, which as any visitor to a residence hall has discovered is less than an efficient system. Further, within several years, room telephones will have direct access to tape banks in the language labs and to other recorded educational information such as lectures by distinguished individuals, readings by noted interpreters, etc.

Remote access to computers will also be possible in the near future. So it can be noted that the room telephone has the immediate potential of an educational as well as social instrument.

THE COST

In terms of costs, in negotiations with the Telephone Company, a special tariff rate was developed and filed which would provide greater and more flexible service at a lower rate than that available to other subscribers. In this area, a private one-party subscriber pays a monthly charge of $5.10 plus federal tax plus toll charges, reconnect, disconnect charges and special service charges.

Student service costs about $1.00 per month less and, unlike other subscribers students are not being charged for connect-disconnect charges when the system is not in service (during academic vacations and at times when conferees might be utilizing rooms). Each student is paying for approximately 119 days of service per semester only. In addition the educational features noted above are available.

WHY NO CHOICE

Under the advantageous tariff terms the the regulations of the Company and from an engineering standpoint, it is not possible to give a choice of having or not having a room telephone, within a residence hall wired for this service. However, prior to room choosing, the April 18, 1966 Collegian listed residence halls that would have room telephones in September. In addition a notice incorporating this information was given to Summer Counselees and discussed at Summer Counseling sessions.

CREDIT CARDS

Several students have inquired about Credit Cards. Under general provisions of the "General Commercial Letter" of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. establishing the business terms of an educational institutions' Centrex systems, issuing of Bell System Credit Cards is discouraged until credit information and experience with individual students indicates that such is desirable.

The rational here, other than the understandable financial one, is that insofar as the records of the Company are concerned, under this system they bill the toll charges to a telephone number "dedicated" to a room rather than to a named student. That telephone number always will stay with the room. Therefore, with a Credit Card, others previously occupying the room could continue to bill calls to the room after they have left school or moved to another room.

AN APOLOGY

Apologies are in order for the harsh sound of "Mandatory Charge" on the semester bill. An explanation should have been made, and perhaps greater publicity should habe been given at the end of the spring semester to an explanation of which residence halls would have no room telephones and why.

RECAP

You should find residence hall Centrex a genuine, inexpensive service — access to more than 4,500 campus telephones from your room is of itself a great advance in campus communications. Nevertheless, this installation is a vast new undertaking and there well may be some modifications that can be made if the need is indicated. If there are still questions about Centrex, please feel free to direct them to the Northampton Area Business Office of the Telephone Company or the appropriate campus representative.

Please remember to follow the dialing instructions in the Preliminary Student Directory and to dial the "Student Information Number" (5-1123) if you wish to ascertain a student's residence address and/or room telephone number.

Where the Faithful?

To the Editor:

Having viewed football at the University of Mass for two years, I have regretably come to the conclusion that UMass fans take winning for granted! This decision is based on the apathetic attitude exhibited by the students at all athletic contests. More specifically it has become a point of obvious notice and concern, when one realizes the lack of support shown for a continuously winning team.

There is no doubt that winning-football has become a tradition at UMass.

However, what has happened to the student body that in 1962 faithfully followed the Redmen down to the city of Philadelphia when odd-makers strongly favored the home team of Villanova? These fans were rewarded by a stunning and emotional UMass upset victory, that has not been forgotten.

My call is for a more aggressive student participation ... participation that will offset the most spirited followers of our arch rivals. It is the power of a spirited and enthusiastic student body that turns a good football team into a great football team.

This Saturday UConn visits Amherst with a train load of 3,000 noisy Husky fans — intent on seeing a win brought back to Storrs. What can the Redmen fans offer their team in answer?

Letter from the Weary

Thos students, particularly seniors with cars, who are snuggly located in the Orchard or Southwest need read no farther unless you are concerned with what transpires on "the other side of the tracks," namely the quad.

Discrimination has become an everyday term for all of us, but we believe it's being practiced right here in the obscurity of our corner of campus.

Forgetting that not one of the quad dorms has been or is being presently equipped with room phones and that only the quad still has curfew at dorm-closing, this letter is an attack on the quad parking facilities or, better stated, the non-existence of such facilities.

Quad cars must be parked in the Southwest lot, below the tower dorms, which is a good half hour's walk from the quad. Without elaboration, the inconvenience of this situation should be painfully obvious. But aside from the inconvenience is the aspect of personal safety. Excepting Thatcher, the quad is, of course, composed of women's dormitories. Obviously there are times when it will be unavoidable to return to school in the evening and we consider it negligence on the part of the University to expect us to walk from a completely unilluminated parking lot all the way across campus to our respective dorms. It's a prospect that not one of us appreciates being forced into accepting.

For those of us without meal tickets, eating off-campus has been a relaxing interval between classes and concentration, but for a group of girls to get out of class, get a car in Southwest, drive somewhere to eat, park the car upon returning, to campus, and walk half an hour to the dorm takes too much time to be feasible with studying to be done at night.

Student responsibility is the vogue for '66-67 so we must protest in every possible way, but we as a minority need HELP! If you don't live in the quad maybe your girl or some of your friends do; if you aren't a senior, hopefully you will be someday, and if this policy becomes old practice your chances as a senior to effect a change will be far slimmer than they are now.

We aren't asking for a new lot, or special consideration—even parking in the old quad lot from 6:00 P.M. until 8:00 A.M. would help greatly! We expect the rights and privileges common to every UMass student, and we don't feel we now have them in particular, we want a place to park at night in our quad, not in another dormitory complex parking area.

Charge

Dear Sir:

An amazing display of manners was seen near the Cage Sunday night. Starting at about 7:30 P.M. a parade of inconsiderate students began to march forward accompanied by a large band of visiting adults. Being extremely proud of their talents, they made their way along the jeering crowds convinced that they were the chosen ones—the ones to lead the procession into the Cage. A little effort and a lot of courtesy would have helped these people to reach the end of the line.

In the future it might be better to indicate which doors will be open and then open the earlier.

Sincerely,

JUNIORS

Spending $45,000 Interest You?

by MELINDA KRIENSKY

Wanted: people to help spend $45,000.

Interested Junior Class members may apply now to help the 10-day Winter Carnival next February.

Class President Dick Wood said today he welcomes any interested juniors to participate in Carni program committees.

He stressed it is not necessary to be on the executive council. New ideas from any source will be appreciated, he added.

The committees have been constructed to coordinate events so the result will be 10 days of activity. Proposed dates are Feb. 17-26. Among the events will be two Sunday afternoon concerts, Feb. 19 and 26, and one on Saturday evening, Feb. 25.

From a fund of $49,000, $45,000 will be used for Winter Carni. Because last year's budget was only $17,000, this year's professional entertainment promises to be superior.

All traditional events of other years will be repeated. A Soul Jazz concert featuring blues singer Marianne Williams will be given Feb. 21. This will be co-sponsored by the D.V.P. Two or three dances, a ski trip and a fashion show will round out the week's activities, for the midweek highlight.

Juniors desiring to work in Winter Carni preparations may contact the following: Dick Moriarty, publicity; Mary Sheila Ryan, decorations; Karen Rose or Jackie Hall, activities; Liz Neufeld or Betsy Singer, atmosphere; and Claudia Dembski, hospitality.

Belchertown Volunteers Needed

Every Saturday afternoon during the school year the children at Belchertown State School for the Retarded await the arrival of UMass students who volunteer their time, energy, and talents in an effort to help the children there. A free bus is provided by the Student Senate to take volunteers to Belchertown, it leaves the North Commons parking lot at 1:15 each Saturday and arrives back on campus by 4:30.

Belchertown State School is an institution for the mentally retarded of all ages. Most students at the school have almost no contact with those outside the grounds or their families; their only hope are the volunteers.

Each week an orientation is provided for new volunteers which consists of a further explanation of the program and a tour of the school. Coming once puts you under no obligation to come again. You may

HOW DO YOU RATE AS A DATE?

As a new year on campus gets underway, the following "quiz" may help some UMass coed fill up an empty Saturday night.

Why do some girls start out by having little boys carry their books to school, and end up by having men pushing their wheelchairs — while other girls never seem to learn the secrets of attracting men at any age?

To find out why some women always rate high as a date, a writer at the Shulton company rescheduled male opinion — and some of the results may surprise you.

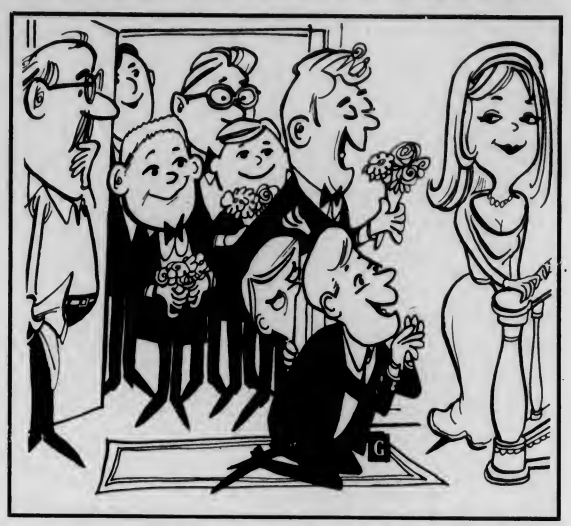
Here's a ten-question quiz on what they said:

1. Does a girl need a perfect toothpaste ad smile to attract men?

No . . . it's what she says with her smile that counts. Even some high fashion models have a slightly crooked tooth or two. One girl who had "that sort of look" every man liked but couldn't define said she owed it to a tiny space between her front teeth.

2. Are men attracted by an exaggerated hip-swinging walk?

Yes . . . but only as a kind of gag — and remember, no date wants you to be conspicuous when you're out with him.



Besides, it's actualy been proved in court that no woman can help swinging her hips a little when she walks.

3. Is a girl's most potentially attracive asset her voice?

Yes. Many men say a soft, low-pitched diction makes them feel vulnerable as all get-out — and nothing repels them quite so much as a strident gabble-gabble when they associate with female domination.

4. Does a girl need a perfect complexion?

No . . . if you're thinking of a mole on your chin. But serious blemishes definitely attract the thought of help rather than romance.

5. Is being insensitive to his moods the worst crime you can commit?

Yes . . . but this doesn't mean you have to be Sweet Alice who trembles with fear at his frown. If you let him be silly when he feels like it, morbid when he thinks the sky is falling down, practical and goal-oriented when he's thinking ahead—you'll really rate. Probably tops, and maybe even headed for marriage, is the guy who allows himself to be downright dull for an hour or two—asking your indulgence.

6. Is the greatest physical asset you can bring to a date—good walking feet?

Yes. Trying to find a cab can be harrowing, especially if you're only going a few blocks—and the girl who offers to hoof it rates high with a man.

7. Should you let him suggest the evening's entertainment?

Yes . . . because you aren't certain of the state of his finances. But it's nice to be prepared with suggestions, in case he asks you.

8. Should you let him kiss you on the first date?

Yes . . . as long as it's a goodnight kiss, but after that say goodnight and go into the house. Save the long soul searching conversation for another time, another place; in short, leave a little future in your relationship.

9. Do you call him if he doesn't call you?

No. Old fashioned as it may seem, most men prefer to take

Nothing, from UMass to Harry Belafonte, escaped the tongue of comedian Nipsey Russell at Sunday night's concert. Although the audience "took a while" to catch some of his lines, his quickness and open-minded style brought many a tender subject into the openness of laughter.

UNITED CHRISTIANS GROUP PROPOSED

"The Broken Egg," Amherst Tutorial Program, a campus newsletter, and experiments with worship on campus were among the topics discussed at a recent meeting of concerned Christian students. This group, of Catholics and Protestants alike, came together to voice their awareness of a need for a uniting body for Christian at UMass.

It was the feeling of the group that the majority of students today are no longer concerned with denominational differences on Sunday mornings. Indeed, many people try various churches until they find a friendly congregation, or service to their liking.

This being the case, the suggestion was presented that worship on campus, in some manner which would address students as United Christians, and as significant human beings instead of as Methodists, Baptists, etc., would speak significantly to the denominationally uncommitted student.

There are many activities already taking place at UMass which are "ecumenically" run, but have no actual group supporting them, such as the Tutorial Programs.

Likewise, there are those groups which also take part in addressing the moods and feelings of the student today such as the "Broken Egg" coffee house. Becoming involved in these areas is a possible task which this group might undertake.

At the present time, everything is still in the planning stage. Ideas and criticisms are now needed from more students as to the effectiveness of such a group at UMass, and the direction which it should take.

Toward such an end, a meeting has been scheduled for tomorrow night, Oct. 6, at 7 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Computer Talk

A series of evening lectures describing various programming langnuages available on the Center's 3600 will be given by the Center staff, beginning in October. Meetings will be held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, for three consecutive weeks, with classes lasting two hours each.

It is hoped that sufficient interest in this series will be demonstrated to warant a continuing cycle of instruction throughout the academic year. Languages presented will be FORTRAN, COBOL, COMPASS, SIMSCRIPT, in that order. The initial session (FORTRAN) of each series will asume minimum knowledge of computers and computer programming. The subsequent sessions will assume familiarity with at least the FORTRAN language. The schedule is:

FORTRAN — Oct. 18, 20, 25, 27, Nov. 1, 3
COBOL — Nov. 8, 10, 15, 17, 22, 29
COMPASS
SIMSCRIPT — To be announced

Classes will meet in room 307 of the Engineering Laboratory (where the RCC is housed).

10. Should you ever offer to go Dutch?

Yes . . . but beforehand, such as getting tickets to a play, or inviting him to be your guest at a banquet.

Score: If you scored 5 or less, you may have a talent for attracting men but you need more experience. If you scored 6 to 9, you're a good date to take out anytime. If you got all 10 correct, men say, it isn't fair—you know entirely too much!

CORRECTION

A headline in Monday's paper, "Advanced Training Offered by R.O.T.C.," was erroneous in saying that the program was being run by that unit. The U. S. Army RESERVE is running the program but the R.O.T.C. is providing the facilities. Col. Harold Gatslick, who heads the program, has been in the Army active and reserve for 24 years. He can be reached at 545-2831, days, or 549-0312, nights.

PQT*

Professional Qualification Test—A prerequisite to qualify for a career position with the National Security Agency.

WHEN: December 10, 1966
(Get a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office)

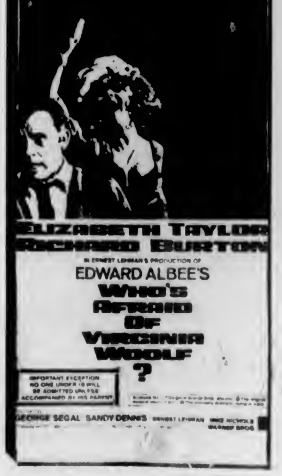
If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1967, register for the Professional Qualification Test. Taking and passing the PQT doesn't commit or obligate you to anything, but we urge you—even if you are not now fully certain of your future interests—to investigate NSA career opportunities.

An Agency of national prominence, this unique civilian organization is responsible for developing "secure" communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. How and why does that affect you? Because NSA has a critical and growing need for imaginative people—regardless of your academic major.

You will participate in programs of national importance, working in such areas as: Cryptography (the making of codes and ciphers), analytic research, language research, data systems design and programming, and administrative management.

At NSA, your professional status and earning power grow rapidly from the day you begin, without having to wait for years of "experience." Starting salary of at least $6,451 (for bachelor's degrees), regular increases, excellent advancement possibilities . . . and all the benefits of Federal employment. Another advantage is NSA's location, convenient to both Baltimore and Washington and a short drive from ocean beaches and other recreational attractions.

Plan to take the PQT. It could be your first step to a great future!



IMPORTANT: THE DEADLINE FOR PQT APPLICATIONS IS NOVEMBER 25. Pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office. It contains full details and the necessary registration form. Applicants must be U. S. citizens, subject to a complete physical examination and background investigation.

"Jules et Jim" To Be Shown

Doing anything tonight besides your homework? Why not make it a special (and cultural) evening by attending the first of a series of outstanding films presented by the University's French Corridors? (Who knows; you may see your French 107 prof. there!) But even if you don't speak French, come anyway—all the films have English sub-titles!

Tonight's film, JULES ET JIM, starring Jeanne Moreau and Oscar Werner will be shown at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

Even TIME magazine praises JULES ET JIM, calling it:

"So spontaneous, sincere, generous, naive and natural that a spectator who sits down feeling old and dry will rise up feeling young and green. It bubbles up like the spring of life itself."

The price for a single ticket is 50c, and for a series ticket, $2.00. Tickets are available at the door prior to the film. Other films in this award-winning series include: HIROSHIMA MON AMOUR (November 2), LE BLE EN HERBE (November 16), DU RIFIFI CHEZ LES HOMMES (November 30) and LES ENFANTS TERRIBLES (December 14).

Moliere Gone Mod

For its ninth annual American tour, Le Treteau de Paris will present Moliere's LES FEMMES SAVANTES at Amherst Regional High School Auditorium, on October 20, 1966 at 8:00 p.m., sponsored by Men's and Women's French Corridors at UMass. Tickets may be obtained from the Student Union Ticket Office, or by writing the French Corridor, Eugene Field House, University of Mass. Don't miss this opportunity to see an outstanding French classic adapted to the 1960's!

There is a surprise in store for those who expect to see a typical seventeenth century play, as the director, M. Guy Parigot has finally rescued Moliere from the dead hand of tradition. It is quite evident that LES FEMMES SAVANTES, placed within the framework of the 17th century no longer concerns us.

But, replaced into the midst of a comfortable middle-class family of the 20th century, the play rediscovers its comic force, and avoids misconceptions which would arise under the 17th century staging references.

Gone is the usual outlandish array of powdered wigs, red heels, beauty patches, and knobbed canes. Instead we find a stage setting designed in the "pop" art manner, and a bar where whiskey flows like water, keeping the characters almost continually 'high'.

Miss Dominique MacAvoy as Henriette and Gerard Paquis as Clitandre in Moliere's "Les Femmes Savants."

Four-College Friends: Informal Escape

The Four College Friends group meets about once a month to think, talk and feel together. In the true Quaker spirit, the meeting begins with a short period of silence, a time for each person present to think for a few moments about himself or whatever is most on his mind.

If someone wishes to share his thoughts aloud, the rest will listen, perhaps comment, and then be silent again.

The informality and the momentary escape from behind that invisible shield worn outside is considered by members most refreshing.

This month, the meeting will be on Sunday evening, October 9, at the Friends Meeting House Leverett, Mass. (6 miles north of the Amherst center on Route 63).

It will begin with supper at 5:30 to be followed by meeting for worship at 6:30. From 7-9:15 students are invited to stay and exchange with experiences and insights gained this summer . . . or just listen if the student prefers.

If rides are needed contact Lorna Sass, J. Q. Adams 2215 (546-8591) and be in front of the of the Student Union at 5:15.

ALPHA PHI OMEGA

Serving the Campus

FRESHMEN!! Have you ever felt that you weren't really a part of the University yet? Do you still feel that you're only a number, and nobody cares if you stay in school or not, besides your parents, who are far, far away. If you do, then maybe you ought to look at Alpha Phi Omega at the smoker tonight.

If you think you might like to do service while you are making friends, we are for you. Service is the reason we're together, and you might be surprised what good things happen to friendships when brothers usher at an overcrowded house, like the Carlos Montoya concert, or when they get together to set up over a thousand chairs for the Harry Belafonte concert.

Of course, we have our social fun, too. Gamma Sigma Sigma, the National Womens Service Sorority does quite a few projects with us, and we do have occasional parties together, even if we don't have a fraternity house.

If you would like to be a living part of this University, and not a faceless name on a lecture roster, or a soulless number on an athletic ticket booklet, come andfind out if you fit in. We're really very easy to get to know, and you may end up as a brother of THE National Service Fraternity. Alpha Phi Omega may be YOU!!

ROD BROOKS

Profile of a Redman

Co-captain Rod Brooks

By RICHARD KLINE, Sports Staff

"The best offense is a good defense" the saying goes, but who ever hears about defensive gridmen? It is an accepted fact that the offense, and particularly the backfield, gets most of the glory on any football squad.

Little glory, for example, is given the big job done by co-captain Rod Brooks, whose linebacker spot is one of the key slots on the team. The 6'0", 206 lb. senior, who has been plagued with injuries throughout his college career, is the nucleus of the powerful Redmen defense and combines a mixture of determination and dedication with devastating power.

Hailing from Ayer, Mass., Rod started playing football as a freshman in high school and developed fast into a first rate guard and linebacker. Recognizing his talent, Redmen coach Jack Delaney recruited this package of dynamite from under the noses of B.C., Columbia, and B.U. Once at UMass Rod wasted no time in making a name for himself and was elected captain of his freshman team.

Since then he was sidelined a year, due to a serious back operation, but came soaring back last season and captured a starting linebacker spot. His biggest thrill, however, was being a part of an undefeated squad in his sophomore year. His most enjoyable moments this year are "those certain plays" in which the linebacker is the key man and really runs the show. "But," said Rod, "I think all linebackers love those."

The twenty-two year old (as of last Friday) senior, who is a Hotel Management major and plans his future in that field, is highly optimistic about the remainder of the season and his UMass football career. "We're going to be good," Rod said. "I think we'll win all the rest."

Managers Needed

Freshmen interested in helping the freshman football team while becoming part of the squad are urged to contact George Albrecht in care of the Football Office, Boyden. The post as team manager is an important one: he handles finances as well as servicing the needs of the team. Those interested persons who cannot come to the offices may call 256-8908 after 8:30 p.m., according to Mr. Albrecht.

KS, LCA, Patriots Sweep, AEP Falls in Intramural Action

by DAVE JARNES, Sports Staff

Although the Kappa Sig-Lambda Chi game was billed as the feature attraction Monday, several other games turned out to be more exciting.

KS continued to roll along by whipping previously unbeaten LCA, 18-7. Jim Donahue completed 20-25 passes for the losers, but many of these passes were for very short yardage. Meanwhile, Ed Godek was picking LCA's defense apart with 18-32, six of which were caught by Bruce Domina.

The most exciting game of the night saw Sig Ep edge BKP, 20-19, on a long bomb from Bob Miller to Rich Scagland with about a minute left. Scagland had quite a night as he scored all of Sig Ep's points. However, BKP protested the game and the outcome is still to be determined.

AEP's unbeaten skein came to an abrupt end at the hands of a winless but fired up TKE. TKE took a 13-0 half-time lead behind the fine quarterbacking of Garbutt and held on to win, 13-6.

In other fraternity games, TEP stayed unbeaten by topping ZN, 19-6, SAM got shut out for the third time in a row, 32-0, against TC, ASP blanked upstart ATG, and PMD bombed PSD, 38-6.

Although they received their toughest competition of the year, the Chadbourne Maroons managed to rally from a 6-6 halftime deadlock to edge the Broncos, 25-13. Dave Sears caught two TD passes for the winners.

Bob Mason was the whole show for the Plymouth Patriots as he scored 25 points and intercepted two passes in his team's 26-0 whitewashing of the Cougars.

The Webster Hawks lost a heartbreaker to the Panthers, 21-20, on an advantage of one first down. Jim Riley caught two TD passes for the losers and big Bill Jessen was a giant on defense but Dick Pepin's passing proved to be the difference.

Rounding out the dorm action, the Comanchees nipped the Colonials, 7-6, the Colts toppled the Jaguars, 31-15, the Eagles shutout the Buffaloes, 13-0, the Birch upset the Rams, 12-0, and the Flaming A's got surprising opposition from the Phallics before winning out, 26-19.

Turning to the independents, the Griffins topped Mike Gould and his Numerals, 13-6, the Hangovers clobbered the Adams family, 32-6, the Lucky 13's whomped the Fisheries, 20-0, and the Froshites came back from a 6-0 halftime deficit to nose out the Foundrymen, 13-12.

Cards, Packers, Cowboys Win

by RICK CURWIN
Sports Staff

Three teams remain undefeated in the N.F.L. after last Sunday's action. In the Eastern Division St. Louis won their fourth in a row by bombing Philadelphia, 41-10. The high-powered Dallas Cowboys trounced the fledgling Falcons, 47-14. The third perfect team is the Green Bay Packers, whose fourth win came at the expense of Detroit.

Los Angeles remains a game behind Green Bay after crushing San Francisco Friday night. Baltimore holds third place after a week of rest, followed by Detroit (2-2), the disappointing Bears (1-2), and winless San Francisco and Minnesota.

In the East, after the top powers, Cleveland is in third place after defeating New York. Former UMass star, Milt Morin, played a fine game for the Browns. Tied for third are Washington and Philadelphia. Pittsburgh after a good start has fallen to sixth. New York and Atlanta have yet to win a game.

Both the Bears and Forty-Niners had been figured as contenders in the West, but have been unable as yet to show championship form. Los Angeles, who won only four games all last year, has been the biggest surprise, winning every game except a close one to the Packers.

The Eastern race is as expected with the exception of the red hot Cardinals. This was a rebuilding year for coach Charlie Winner, but the Redbirds just continue to win.

Next week Cleveland should win their third in a close game against Pittsburg. The Jurgenson-to-Mitchell combination will be more than enough for Washington to conquer Atlanta. St. Louis always seems to have trouble with New York, but this week the Redbirds will have little problem. The Cowboys appear headed for their fourth straight in a tough game with the Eagles.

In the West, Green Bay plays the Forty-Niners. In spite of San Francisco coach Jack Christainsen's prediction, Green Bay will roll. In other games the Colts should have no less trouble than the rest of the league in stopping Gale Sayers and the Bears. L.A. will take a close one against Detroit.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE IN THE COLLEGIAN

Coach Fusia--Fighting The 'War with Rules'

by TOM FITZGERALD, Sports Staff

His day begins at 7:30 a.m. He has breakfast with his wife and three children, two young sons and a teenage daughter. "It's the only time I get to see my kids during the football season," he says.

He belongs to a singular breed of half spiritual-leaders, half drill-instructors: he's a football coach. As head coach of the University of Massachusetts, Victor H. Fusia's job may well depend on how well his team lives up to his first name.

Fusia arrives at his desk in the Boyden Building around 9. After reading his mail and cleaning up his desk, he conducts a meeting of his coaching staff. During the meeting, which may last from 20 minutes to an hour, "we quickly go over the day's work," he says. From 11 to 12, Fusia completes the large amount of correspondence a head coach must handle.

VIC FUSIA

Talking strategy with his quarterbacks occupies Fusia's lunch hour. "Due to their heavy class loads," he says, "I will meet them at this time at their convenience."

At 1:30 another staff meeting is held to plan the afternoon's practice schedule. This session lasts a half-hour, or, in the coaching vernacular, 210 minutes (seven men, 30 minutes). "By meeting then and making a well organized practice, we make every minute count."

While the rest of the staff is ocupied with working out game assignments and meeting with players, Fusia views game movies and evaluates scouting reports on the next opponent.

At 4 the staff leaves for the Stadium, and from 4:30 to 6:30 the coaches and players are on the practice field, "trying to put our plans in motion."

The day is still far from over. After practice the coaches and players eat together at the North Comons' training table. But the coaches have plenty of work left, mostly in watching movies of the opponent and taking notes on tendencies that they detect in the opponent's team and individual performances. At 11 the day's work is finally done.

Fusia's policy of "making every minute count" has apparently paid dividends: his teams have so far compiled a record of 35-12-1. UMass football has reached its zenith during Fusia's brief tenure, resulting in two Yankee Conference championships and a total conference record of 22-4.

Fusia, who hails from Pittsburgh, was an outstanding tailback for Manhattan College, from which he graduated with a B.S. in 1938. After teaching at a New York boys school for a year, he entered the Navy and served in the Pacific before being discharged in 1946.

At Rankin (Pa.) High School, his teams lost only two games in two years, and at Indiana (Pa.) High School he climaxed three successful seasons with an undefeated team in 1950.

After four years as backfield coach at Brown, Fusia moved to the University of Pittsburgh, where he served as Coach John Michelosen's first assistant. He remained at Pitt for six years before being appointed head coach here.

"My concept or philosophy of coaching," says Fusia, "is that football can be an integral part of an education because it teaches one how to be a generous victor as well as an ungrudging loser.

"Of course, it will never replace the library or the English class but it does play a big part in the total educational program and does add breadth to the total development of the student athlete.

"We work on the premise that chance favors the prepared mind. And we are what we repeatedly do."

In addition to having a carefully planned time-table for each day, Fusia and his staff operate on a specific plan for each day. For instance, on Sunday the coaches view the game films and note strengths and weaknesses in the team. Monday and Tuesday are spent in showing the team its mistakes, and in pointing out what to expect from the next opponent.

Thursday is "polishing day," and Friday is "unity day," as the coach puts it. But Saturday is "our spiritual day." All the squad members are asked to pray or go to the church of their choice in the morning, and at 1:30, "we try to put the week's work together."

"We now think that we're mentally, physically and spiritually ready to fight the war that has rules."

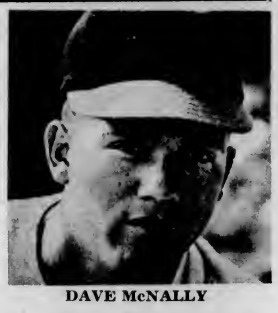
Grid Tickets May Be Sold Friday

The sale of student tickets for Saturday's game against UConn may be extended through Friday until 5 p.m. for students who are unable to procure tickets by 6 p.m. tomorrow, according to Evan Johnston, head of the Alumni Association and chairman of the Ticket Policy Committee of the University Athletic Council.

Johnston urged students to exchange their coupons for tickets today or early tomorrow to avoid the late rush. There will be absolutely no student tickets on sale at the Stadium. The tickets have been selling at a rate of almost a thousand per day.

Johnston and Business Manager Robert O'Connell remind seniors that they can not expect priority treatment this week.

They said that the reason that student tickets are now sold on a reserved seat basis is to accomodate more spectators. Previously, they said, 8,000 student seats were being taken up by only about 6,000 students. Knowing that past efforts on the part of ushers to make the students take up less room have proved futile, Johnston, O'Connell, and Ticket Manager Wally Novak felt that reserved tickets would be the only solution.



They believed that once all the students are fully aware of the new ticket policy, there would be fewer ticket exchange problems, although Johnston contended that "the Stadium was built too small to begin with." He said that the matter of adding about 30 rows onto the east side will be discussed at the next meeting of the Athletic Council.

Dodgers Picked to Pluck Birds As Series Opens in Los Angeles

by MIKE CURRAN, Sports Staff

The 1966 World Series opens this afternoon with the Baltimore Orioles, American League champions, meeting the Los Angeles Dodgers, National League victors, at Chevez Ravine.

Oddsmakers figure the former Flatbushers to be 8-5 favorites, but anything can happen in the October Classic.

The Birds are hoping that their superior hitting, in the persons of Frank Robinson, first triple-crown winner since 1956, Brooks Robinson, Boog Powell, Curt Blefary, and Louis Aparicio, will overcome what they lack on the mound.

Manager Hank Bauer plans to use three youngsters, Dave McNally, Jim Palmer and Wally Bunker as his starters. The bullpen of Stu Miller, Eddie Fisher, Dick Hall and Moe Drabowski figures to see a lot of action, since the composite ERA of the three starters is well over 3.50.

The Bums depend on the arms of Don Drysdale, Sandy Koufax and Claude Osteen to lead them to their second straight world championship, a feat unaccomplished by a National League club since the Giants, then in New York, copped back-to-back world titles in 1921-22.

Los Angeles lacks a power hitter, but every man in the Dodger lineup can deliver the clutch hit. Look for Jim Lefebvre, Lou Johnson and Johnny Rosoboro to drive in the runs.

In today's game southpaw Dave McNally will oppose the veteran Don Drysdale. Tomorrow's starters are Jim Palmer and the great one, Sandy Koufax.

After tomorrow's game the action shifts to Memorial Stadium in Baltimore where the middle three games will be played.

Frosh Booters Set for Start

by JOE DUFFY
Sports Staff

Prospects for this year's freshman soccer team look brighter than ever thanks to the great recruiting efforts of Jack Leaman, last year's frosh coach.

New mentor Pete Broacha hopes to pick up where Leaman left off and improve upon last year's fine 5-2 record.

The squad features some of the state's finest soccer prospects.

Leading the halfbacks will be John Mercury, an All-State first team pick from Lincoln - Sudsbury Regional High School. Paul Bregoli, Mike Phippard and George Ryan round out the halfback positions. Starting in the fullback slots will be Ralph Etna, Ken Berestka and Ed Schmitter.

The forewards will probably be John Way, Dick Meyer, Tony Rossell and Mark Joyce. Goalie is still a tossup between Tom Malone of Granby and Pete Scoville of Deerfield Academy.

In addition to Mercury, Lincoln-Sudsbury has supplied three other starters—Way, Joyce and Phippard. All should see plenty of action this year.

The frosh play a perennially tough opponent Saturday in Amherst College. Game time is 12:-30 at Amherst. The contest is the team's first in 1966.

Students must exchange Athletic Book Coupon No. 2 for reserved ticket to University of Connecticut Football Game.

EXPLORING AMERICAN EDUCATION

MASS MEDIA TO SCRUTINIZE UNIVERSITY

by FREDERICK PILON, South College Reporter

They have been hopping around the East, stopping at various universities and colleges. They disembark and commence with their heart-stopping, hair-splitting questions.

These movant mass communicators, principally Education Editors for magazines and newspapers, will visit the University of Massachusetts on the fifth day of an eight-day tour this weekend as part of their overall view of American education in New England.

Starting Friday evening with a reception-buffet supper at the President's house, the group will attend a wide variety of conferences, designed to provide a cornucopia of facts and figures about the University.

At eight o'clock the group will hold their first major discussion in J.F.K. Tower on the Southwest Residential Area and the proposed university college.

Representatives from the surrounding schools will join the group at 8:30 when the topic will switch to the Four-College Cooperation Program.

After a student-writers breakfast in the Copper Kettle, briefs will be presented by University administrators. The speakers will be: Provost Tippo, Undergraduate Academic Program; Treasurer Johnson, Campus Planning and Construction; Dean Moore, Graduate School Growth; Dean Tunis, Enrollment; and Dean Field, The University Student in 1966.

Late Saturday morning will be free time for the press. Writers attending include: Paul Abramson, editor, College Management Magazine; Francis Barton, freelance writer, Yankee Magazine; David Behrendt, education reporter, The Milwaukee Journal; Diane Divoky, education editor, Boston Herald; James Donohue, staff writer, Associated Press-Boston; Arnie Garson, education writer, Omaha World-Herald; Grant Salisbury, general editor, U. S. News and World Report; Howard Spergel, education editor, WGBH-TV-Boston; Semin Ustun, script writer, Voice of America; and Allan Wade, executive assistant, United Press International.

The University will provide campus guides for these writers to enable them to contact professors for interviews.

Window Displays

Southwest Complex 'Creating Image'

by RICHARD KLINE

Is it suggestive? Take it down.

"What's funny to one person may not be funny to someone else," said Donald Tepper, assistant dean of men in charge of the Southwest Residential College, concerning the "window messages" appearing on the high rise dorms. "Will it really be offensive to anyone? The line is drawn by the residents themselves."

As far as any action on the suggestive window displays, Tipper said, "Up to now it's been left up to the good taste of the residence directors. We don't want to put thumbs down on people. Our aim in Student Personnel is to keep a lid on things."

Tepper stressed two basic points: that the signs should not be offensive, and that they should not be in bad taste. Current campus attitude calls for good taste in any sign displayed.

The students at UMass and those of the Southwest College in particular are "creating an image," as Tepper calls it. The complex is a $40 million showpiece for parents, visitors and newsmen and must be kept as just that—a showpiece.

"Students are living up to expectations we had," Tepper continued. Students when given responsibility take it. They're diving in student government with vigor; truly going at it full speed ahead and assuming responsibility that we knew would take if given. A few minor crises have been met with absolute maturity by the students."

The section of the Southwest now under construction, will be ready for occupation next fall. In two years a third dining commons and the rest of the complex will be completed. Many classes will be held in the Southwest area at that time, Tepper announced.

Suggestive? . . .

"High rise number three," said Tepper, "contrary to popular belief, didn't sink into the grounds and wasn't stolen."

The architects and the University abandoned their original plans and decided to replace the 22-story structure with a smaller one to increase the architectural beauty of the area. At the present time, there is no plan for another high-rise dormitory.

"What we've done is attempt to create a small college atmosphere in a large university," Tepper explained. "The Student Personnel are always looking out for facilities that students want. I think we have the answer to large university problems in the residential area unit."

Senator Morse to Appear At DVP Program Sunday

This Sunday nite, Oct. 9, the Distinguished Visitors Program of the University of Massachusetts presents Senator Wayne Morse at 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Among the Democratic ranks, Senator Morse is a key figure in opposition to the Johnson Administration's policy on Viet Nam. His outspoken criticism of Johnson policies and legislation has made him a leading figure in the news today.

At the opening of the 89th Congress, Senator Morse was a member of the Senate Committees on Foreign Relations, Labor and Public Welfare, Small Business, the District of Columbia, and the Special Committee on Aging. He is Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee's Subcommittee on Latin American Affairs, and of the Education Sub-committee of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

Senator Morse holds a Ph.D. degree from the University of Wisconsin, an Ll.B. degree from the University of Minnesota, and J. D. degree from Columbia University.

In 1929, he was appointed assistant professor of law at the University of Oregon Law School. In less than two years, at the age of 30, he was named Dean of the law school.

Following a distinguished background in government service, Wayne Morse ran for the United States Senate in 1944 as a Republican on a program of "Principles Above Politics." He was reelected to the Senate as a Republican in 1950. In 1952, he resigned from the Republican Party, and in 1956, he was reelected again as a Democrat in 1962.

James House Debate Brings Forth Issues

by Diane Dube and Kathy Wenzel

A forum was held in William James House Tuesday night to give the senatorial candidates an opportunity to make clear their qualifications and platforms to their constituency.

Each candidate spoke for five minutes with a general question and answer period following. The three candidates were Marshall Nadan, Louie Smith, and Jack Walsh. Richie Marcus announced his withdrawal from the race just before the forum opened.

All candidates included a phase of academic reform in their platforms. Nadan favored a reduction in the three-year Liberal Arts requirements, Smith advocated abolition of finals for students with an A+ average in the course, and Walsh felt that students should be allowed to single out the professors they want, which is done at Marquette University with a student population of twelve thousand.

Two candidates, Smith and Nadan, also favored a "wet campus" policy. Both felt that this would reflect the realization that students were mature enough to handle the responsibility.

Smith and Nadan, also promised to try to improve the advantages and facilities supposedly inherent in the "residential college" concept of the Southwest Complex. Nadan felt that students and guests should be allowed to purchase meals at the Dining Commons on weekends. Smith promised to look into facilities for cultural, social, and athletic events and to prompt the administration to allow classes to be held in Southwest as is done in the Orchards residential college.

Hampshire Valley

Radical Changes Planned

In cooperation with faculty and administration, students in the Hampshire Valley are developing radical educational plans for their colleges—the University of Massachusetts, Smith, Amherst, and Mt. Holyoke.

Last year, a $6 million donation, establishing a trust fund, gave impetus for a four school cooperative college, free from tradition, trustees, rigid curricula and departmental divisions. Named Hampshire, the school is planned to encourage intellectual initiative through a community as open as possible to the unpredictable development of ideas.

The original plan for this residential, coeducational school, written by professors from the area college, maintained that students could be taught to educate themselves under a faculty as small as 50 for 1,000 students. The plan advocated intensive seminars with 12 students each, beginning in freshman year, to train students for an active role in their education.

After the report was issued, students from Smith and Amherst Colleges submitted proposals advocating a highly flexible academic program in which the curriculum would have no requirements, and faculty and student assessments would substitute for grades.

Newly selected vice president of Hampshire College, Charles Longsworth, said the student report was "interesting; we'll consider it."

A faculty committee working with the presidents of the four colleges and newly appointed Hampshire College president. Franklin Patterson, formerly director of the Carnegie Corporation Committee on Educational Television, will release plans for the college this month.

Meanwhile, the area schools are re-evaluating their own programs. This semester, Smith College, following Mt. Holyoke's lead, changed from a five to four course system with fewer requirements and an increased opportunity for independent study.

At Amherst, a faculty committee issued a "student life" report last year which discussed the relationship of the student to his educational experience. The committee made suggestions from abolishing fraternities to improving faculty-student relations by having faculty live in dormitories. The college is looking into implementation of the plan.

Now students and faculty are forming a Free University similar to those in New York, Los Angeles, Austin, Boulder, Chicago, Philadelphia, Ann Arbor and San Francisco.

As most Free Universities, the new school offers unconventional courses not included in college curricula. These include black nationalism, the fiction of James Purdy, works of Sartre, a critique of modern democratic society, Latin America, and folk-music.

Student Loan Fund Short

Despite expansion of student loan programs by Congress and private sources, mounting student applications for loans have outpaced the available supply of funds, a Collegiate Press Service study has revealed.

The House of Representatives voted in May to grant 190 million for student loans under the National Defense Education Act. The Senate Appropriations Committee recently approved this increase over last year's 179 million, but the full Senate has not yet voted on it yet.

In the commercial sector, the American Bankers Association (ABA) initiated a campaign last June to persuade bankers to increase student loans. Financial institutions, which lent nearly $150 million last year to students, are expected to provide up to $400 million this year.

The shortage in funds is due to soaring college enrollment, not to fewer bank loans, according to the ABA's legislative counsel, James Smith. College enrollment for 1966 is estimated by the Office of Education at six million, a ten per cent increase over last year.

To accommodate the growth, colleges must expand, and over three-fourths of American colleges and universities have recently raised tuition and board, according to surveys by the Life Insurance Management Association.

Tuition and room fees for at least 25 schools are 3,000, and costs are expected to rise.

Possible cheating in loan applications may account for some increases in requests. Parents may be borrowing money through their children because of low interest rates granted to students, Smith said.

Meanwhile, other parents have sold their stocks to obtain money, despite a twenty per cent drop in stock market prices over the last months, and some students will work this year instead of joining the class of '70, according to Smith.

Under the NDEA student loan act, undergraduates can borrow up to $1,000, and graduate students can receive $2,500 yearly, not to exceed $10,000 for undergraduate and graduate study combined.

Students pay no interest on loans while in school, and only three per cent after graduation.

Federal allocations, divided among states on the basis of school enrollment and requests, are granted to students through financial aid offices of colleges. Schools must match government funds by providing 10 per cent of every government loan.

Under commercial loan programs, students borrow directly from banks or loan companies, instead of their colleges. Interest rates are held at six per cent, although commerical rates range from six-and-one-half to eight per cent.

While a student attends college, the federal government pays the interest, then he pays three per cent when studies are completed. Thus the cost to the student for loans at commercial banks is equivalent to that under the government NDEA program.

On the whole, of the nation's 14,000 member banks of ABA, 7,000 banks, representing 75 per cent of the nation's total banking assets, participate in student loan programs.

The loan shortage might have been intensified, had Congress accepted President Johnson's proposed revisions for the federal student loan program.

Last January, President Johnson urged eliminating the NDEA program and establishing government backing to banks for more student loans.

Bankers strongly opposed the President's insured loan plan and their own student loan program.

"Federal insurance of student bank loans is of no consequence," Mr. Smith of ABA said. Banks would still not have the funds for both programs.

States and private organizations, such as the United Student Aid Fund, insure private student loan programs now.

Representative Edith Green (D.-Ore.), chairman of the House education subcommittee, accepted the bankers' arguments and called the President's proposal premature.

The administration withdrew its proposal and suggested extending the federal program for another year with a $29 million cut in appropriations.

The House and Senate Committee rejected this proposal, and increase the loan program.

University Theater Presents

LILIOM at Homecoming

Rehearsals are now under way in Bowker Auditorium for Liliom, the first University Theatre offering of the season. Liliom, which will see production during Homecoming Weekend (Oct. 19-22), was first staged in the United States in 1921 by the Theatre Guild of New York City.

The 10 year Continental career of the Hungarian play, prior to its highly successful production by the Guild, ranged from mediocrity to dismal failure. Liliom was a great success in New York because it provided the theatre-goer with an imaginative release from the drawing-room realism prevalent at that time.

The lyrical, suggestive qualities of Liliom were later capitalized upon by Rogers and Hammerstein who used it as the dramatic basis for the well-known musical Carousel. The play's allusiveness is further illustrated by the various terms which have been used to describe it. Some critics have called it a fantasy, others have referred to it as a fantastic comedy. The author himself, Franz Molnar, said that it was "A Legend in Seven Scenes and a Prologue."

Whatever it may be called, this provocative piece of theatre has entertained and delighted generations of Americans and promises to be one of the high points of the Homecoming Weekend. Tickets for Liliom, and also for the entire University Theatre season, are now on sale at the Student Union box office.

SDS Workshops This Weekend

The first New England Regional Students for a Democratic Society convention for this year will be held in the four-college area this weekend, October 7-9.

At least 50 representatives from all over New England will attend the conference which will be held at Chapin Hall at Amherst.

Speaking at different discussion groups will be two members of the Committee for Non-violent Action: Suzanne Williams, an Amherst Regional High School girl who spent 90 days in jail for non-cooperation with the court, and David Reed, a conscientous objector who recently burned his draft card.

Workshops will center on radical education projects, the draft, and campus reform.

Registration will start Friday night, October 7, at 5:00, at Phi Psi Fraternity House, Amherst College.

'Statesmen' Plan Active Year

With the start of another year, THE STATESMEN, a small men's vocal group, are preparing to start on their busy schedule.

Since the organization in the mid 1940's, this group has been chiefly the only men's singing group on campus. Composed of from 8 to 12 men, the group is a close knit unit.

Although no member of the group is a music major, each member has a good knowledge of music. Equally at ease singing any type of music, THE STATESMEN have a busy year ahead of them. In the near future, the group will appear on a local television program, and hope to cut a record. There is also a possibility of a trip south during the Spring.

Like all campus organizations, THE STATESMEN are always willing to accept qualified men. If anyone is interested in joining the Statesmen, auditions will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 11, at the Old Chapel.

WFCR to Air Cello Series

Beginning Friday, Oct. 7, radio station WFCR (the Four-College radio station in Amherst, 88.5 on the FM dial) will broadcast a series of six hour-programs of music for cello. The recordings of cellist Emanuel Feuerman will be heard from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m., also broadcast over station WGBH in Boston and WAMC in Albany.

Seymour W. Itzkoff, assistant professor of education at Smith College, will act as host for the programs, discussing the art of the cellist and the works performed. A cellist himself, Mr. Itzkoff for a number of years has collected the recordings of Mr. Feuerman, who died in 1942, and has interviewed his widow and sister.

The program will include the Haydn Cello Concerto No. 1 in D, Opus 101, and Bloch's Schelomo, or Hebrew Rhapsody. The other five programs in the series will be broadcast on succeeding Friday evenings at the same hour.

LEDERLE PRESENTS RIBBONS

Pres. John W. Lederle congratulates Cadet Col. James H. Boyle of Springfield, whom he presented with a Senior Cadet Military Proficiency Ribbon in recent ceremonies at Dickinson Hall. Col. Joseph A. Bohnak, right, commander of the ROTC contingent, assisted Pres. Lederle in presenting ribbons to 18 senior cadets.

Historian to Speak On 18th-C. England

J. H. Plumb, noted British historian and authority on 18th century English, political and social history, will speak at the Octagon, Amherst College, at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, October 12. The lecture entitled "How England Achieved Political Stability," is open to the public without charge.

Mr. Plumb, a fellow and vice-master of Christ's College, University of Cambridge, holds an M.A., a Ph.D. and a Litt.D. and is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquarians. He was visiting professor at Columbia University in 1960 and, last year, he was Ford's Lecturer at the University of Oxford.

MUSIC HOUR

All UMass students and friends are invited to attend the MUSIC HOUR on Sunday, Oct. 9, at 3 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge.

This event, sponsored by the Arts and Music Committee, will feature a new folk-singing group on campus, Rich Eber, Jane Lanin, and Ruth Steinberg. Take a study break and come!

Did SWAP Flop?

By Jim Foudy, Managing Editor

It was on the bus riding up to the SWAP conference that our suspicions of the relative success of the weekend developed. Being our first trip to SWAP, we heartily looked forward to meeting with the lesser known policy makers in the administration, and anticipated sounding out some of the University's more distinguished faculty.

Our first disappointment came when we learned that only a few of the people we had expected to see had been invited. And worse, because of the carless manner and short notice with which invitations were sent out, some of the few invited weren't even coming.

Determined to make the best of it, we settled back into our seats on the bus and listened to the drift of the conversation. For the duration of the trip only an occasional word on campus problems passed by. We thought that either the majority of the representatives didn't know or care about campus issues, or that they had privately agreed not to discuss them until SWAP officially opened. We preferred to believe the latter only to eventually discover the former.

The bus talk was of booze and who could drink whom under the table (we didn't stay around Saturday night to see who won, but Friday it was pretty much of a tie). This intended goal, for at least a good percentage, was to hustle up a date.

As to the conference, it opened well. Dr. Noffsinger's address pulled no punches in outlining the essential problems facing the campus. However, with the exception of the discussion group on class officers, we are afraid that his call for "new answers" went unheeded.

In the dorm discussions the question of parietal hours (it seems that the campus will never mature without them) once again raged and the question of producing a real program for the establishment of dormitory self-government was left unanswered. Tinkering around with the running of House Council meetings, and the role of the counselors and house mothers is not what we consider serious critical thinking about the problems facing student government or the structure of the residential college.

At the discussion on fine arts, the group reaffirmed the necessity for a Fine Arts Council (nothing new), condemned the delay in the Fine Arts Building, and assured themselves that they had a place at SWAP. Where was the critical eye toward improvement of the Fine Arts Program? Where were the suggestions for increased student understanding and therefore appreciation and participation in fine arts? And why, given the controversy over some of the past art displays, wasn't a definition of fine arts included in the report?

The academic workshop in the afternoon served only as a sounding board for individual complaints about the core curriculum and the advisory system. No concrete proposals were pulled from the few whisps of constructive and realistic thinking that managed to crop up in the sea of idealism.

Greeks, in the midst of a period of change on campus, are faced with the necessity of defining the role of the Greek system to the many who doubt its value. The fraternity discussion, according to the report, came out with this gem:

Fraternities also offer identity. A student can live with and identify with people of similar background and their cohesivness makes them an elite group.

Does this show an understanding or a concern with the problems facing Greeks today?

Finally, did anyone discuss the issue of curfews, and attempt to sift the truth from the confusion which even the administration admits?

So, our suspicions on the bus were confirmed. Not only was SWAP poorly planned, but the critical eyes which the students were to have focused on campus problems were for the most part blood - shot.

In the future, perhaps a challenging and thought provoking speech like the one Dr. Noffsinger gave Friday night should be presented to the University community well before the SWAP weekend. Maybe then SWAP would be planned not as a social exercise, but according to its theory — as a place for students, faculty and administrators to discuss and constructively think about campus issues.

And maybe then the representatives will take it seriously and sacrifice one weekend of socializing for the good of the campus. It is definitely needed.

Ticket Troubles . . .

To the Editor:

So the UMass population has to go to all this ticket trouble because 300 or 400 ID's get passed through the fence and are used over again, and we need that money to run the stadium. Okay.

Let's say 400 people sneak in (giving Johnson the benefit of the doubt). and say the ticket purchase price is $4.00 (giving Johnson the benefit of the doubt again), and say also that this happens every game this football season—which amounts to 5 home games.

400 times $4.00 times 5 games equals an $8,000 loss. At least 8,000 students pay an Athletic Fee.

If the others are like myself, I think they would be willing to pay an extra dollar on their Athletic Fee to cover this loss, rather than spending an hour hiking through red tape for 3 out of 5 games, signing this, reserve that, don't lose this, what date do I have to go here, can't forget to bring that....

The Vietnam Question

"An Immoral War"

To tne Editor:

During World War II we were advised and compelled through gas rationing to conserve gasoline in order to contribute to fighting Hitler's aggression and sadism.

At the time we agreed with Pres. Franklin Roosevelt that our frontier was the Rhine River. That was necessary for the preservation of our country, England and France, also the Low Countries, Denmark and Norway. A slogan used in the drive to conserve petroleum was: "Is this trip necessary?"

The people, through patriotism, responded in large numbers, except in Texas where oil was pouring out of the wells.

The year 1966 is a generation apart. Our frontier has been extended from the Rhine to East Berlin. We shall buy that until NATO is liquidated.

Where is our frontier in the West? Is it not surely the East Coast of the land mass of Asia. It may be the Phillipines, Okinawa, Japan or Australia.

Is this war in Vietnam necessary for the security of our country? NO. Is this trip to the land mass of Asia necessary? NO.

Johnson's administration and his military establishment is building secretly at the cost of a billion dollars of our money, permanent military bases in Vietnam and also in Thailand. For what purpose? To be able to fight the 750 million Chinese? Who gave authorization to the Johnson administration to prepare for a land war with China, over 10,000 miles from Manchester, N. H. ?

The yellow and brown races in Asia will fight to keep the white man out of their homeland. The British and French found that out when colonialism came to an end after Warld War II.

We would not like it if 250,000 Chinese soldiers were in Lower California in Mexico, their artillery pointing north at San Diego and Seattle. Sen. Fulbright, Gruening, Morse, Church, Young of Ohio, Gen. Gavin and Ridgeway, are so right when, looking 25 years ahead, they classify our war of aggression in Vietnam as a tragic mistake and a diplomatic blunder. It is a senseless war.

The American people in the November elections will speak out in a clear voice against all this foolishness of Johnson's administration, as the true facts permeate through to the American people, in spite of the managed news and the kept press.

Vietnam is a sleeper issue. The people will make it the paramount issue of the campaign.

It is an immoral war. In order for Pres. Johnson to get moral support for this immoral war; he will have to dispatch to Vietnam his two daughters as nurses' aides, and his son-in-law, Pat Nugent. He can throw in Hollywood actor George Hamilton for good measure, for cannon fodder.

"Peace with Marked Moral Sense"

To the Editor:

The communists, undoubtedly, are always willing to speak of peace, as they understand it. It is a peace of an extremely particular kind and beneficial only to the Marxist-Leninist imperialism. It is a peace that only serves to allow the communists to invade and oppress nations, without anyone opposing their outrages. For this type of artificial peace the communists are willing to fight. It is peace for them, while there is war for their victims.

Due to the predominantly imperialistic and aggressive nature of communism, it is difficult for the communist to accept the conditions for a genuine peace, with deep roots in the respect for the sovereignty of the States and for the freedom of the nations. That kind of peace they do not accept, because it would imply their own destruction.

Communists can stay relatively calm not out of authentic peace feelings, but because of temporary conveniences, or because the power of their opponent forces them not to invade, not to advance against the independence and freedom of neighboring or distant countries. That is, the communists only understand, unfortunately, the language of force.

For all these reasons it is extremely difficult to believe that in the Vietnam case it may be possible to reach a relatively practical and permanent solution, to a point of equilibrium between what communist imperialism and the free world want. Of course, every necessary and prudent effort should be made in favor of peace, as long as it is a real peace, and not a situation that may surround with impunity Moscow's and Peking's international delinquency.

It is evident that the people of the free world want hostilities to end in Southeast Asia, and this is particularly desired by the noble American people whose youth joins that of other nations in the struggle to maintain the independence of the attacked South Vietnam. But they all want to arrive at something serious, sensible and beneficial to mankind. That is, they all want to find a formula of peace without force and without shadows, that would restore order and the threatened safety of South Vietnam and of other Asian countries.

There is positive interest in the free world for a peace with marked moral sense.

Sam Spark Speaks Out

Live TV from Vietnam?

Editor's note:
An article by Art Buchwald which was similar to this one appeared in Thursday morning's Globe. By virtue of the fact that I was finished with my article Wednesday night, I am absolved of any journalistic misdeeds. However, I wonder how Mr. Buchwald knew what I was going to write about.

According to last week's TV Guide, the television networks are planning to increase their coverage of the Vietnam war. (What war?) This extra casts direct from Vietnam. Such trivial dialogue as we now hear during golf matches, football games, and space shots, will probably become commonplace on the Vietnam broadcasts.

Imagine a Huntley - Brinkley program from Vietnam. It would probably go something like this:

Huntley: Good evening ladies and gentlemen. Tonight we bring you a live broadcast direct from Vietnam, from a quaint jungle - swamp outside the quaint Vietnamese village of Choochew-Choo. And now I'll switch you to our man on-the-scene, David Brinkley.

Brinkley: Thank you Chit. This morning we have equipped a typical American G.I. with an electronic device hooked up inside a gold - filling in his front tooth. As he crawls through the jungle swamp, I will ask him questions, the answers, to which will be transmitted to me through an electronic device attached to my big toenail. Then I shall relay these answers to our New York transmitter, after which you can repeat the answers to our listening audience. Ready Chit ?

Huntley: Ready, David.

Brinkley: Okay. Here goes. How do you feel, typical G. I. ?

Huntley: What did he say David?

Brinkley: Thank you Chit. He says he feels wet and hot, Chit. His wetness can probably be best explained by the fact he is up to his neck in swamp water. However the heat factor is another story. I have several hypotheses on that, the most logical is that it is 147 degrees in the swamp.

Huntley: I see, David. Ask the typical G.I. if he is in favor of the demolition of Red China by small tactical nuclear weapons. . .David. David! Are you still there ?

Brinkley: I'm here Chit. Sorry for the delay, but it appears that our regiment is being attacked by hundreds of Viet Cong.

Huntley: What makes you think they're Viet Cong, David ?

Brinkley: They're wearing black hats, Chit. Anyway, they seem to be . . .

Huntley: Excuse me, David. I hate to interrupt you at a crucial time like this, but now it's time for an informative word from our sponsor. Take it away sponsor.

Sponsor: Hello.

Huntley: Thank you sponsor, for that informative word. And now back to David on location at Choochew-choo. Take it away David.

Brinkley: Thank you Chit. I was right. It was a Viet Cong attack. During the fracas, I would estimate—oh—say about 250 of our men were killed and another hundred mortally wounded.

Huntley: That many, huh? Is the battle over yet, David ?

Brinkley: No Chit. It isn't. As a matter of fact Chit, a rather suspicious looking character with a black hat just grabbed me by the neck with his right arm, and with his free arm he is proceeding to beat me with a club. He is also kicking me in the shins, Chit.

Huntley: I'm awfully sorry David, we'd like to hear more colorful commentary, but our time has run out. Good night, David. And good luck from Taxico.

What did you do when Joe (Boxcar) Brkczpmluj was kicked off the football team just because he flunked six out of four of his majors? What did you do, Wallace Middendorp?

And when the school newspaper's editors resigned in protest because The Chancellor wouldn't allow the publication of certain salacious portions of "Night In a Girl's Dormitory" you just sat, didn't you?

You've made a mockery of your life, Wallace Middendorp! You're a vegetable.

Protest, Wallace Middendorp. Take a stand. Make a noise! Or drink Sprite, the noisy soft drink.

Handicapped Girl Recognizes UMass Campus Opportunities

As I heard her familiar cane tapping gently in my direction, I turned and met Marieanna at the bus stop as we had planned. We were headed toward Northampton for one of our occasional Thursday night shopping sprees, and stubbornly refused to acknowledge the puddles of rain splashing about our feet.

The bus ride was slow and our conversation was typical of college students, although Marieanna isn't really a typical student. At 23, she is a graduate student at the University and doing remarkably well. Marieanna has been totally blind since three. She attended an institution for the blind until five years ago when she enrolled in a small Christian college in New York. After earning her bachelor of arts in English she came to UMass for graduate study and is now beginning her master's thesis, which will be completed in the spring.

"Coming to this University is the best thing I've ever done — its' laid out well, fairly easy to get around, and gives me an opportunity to be on my own," Marieanna explained. "A handicapped person on a campus, or in any comparable situation, should become as independent as possible, once he's been oriented."

Marieanna's orientation was quite easy and enjoyable—that's how I first met her. Arriving here last summer for the first time, she was looking for someone to show her around campus and to assist her to Bartlett and back (that being the only building in which she has classes.

Anxious for the new experience, but knowing nothing about orienting a blind girl, I hesitantly offered my services and was soon afterward walking her to Bartlett. I found Marieanna a warm and responsive person with a pleasant spontaneous laugh. She socialized easily and was less retiring and insecure than one might suppose. It was soon quite evident what she expected: to be guided, not treated like a child; and looked upon as another normal person rather than something strange.

So, more as friends than as "helper and helped," we probed out way to Bartlett thrice a week and by the end of her six-week term she was quite capable of going back and forth, with only the guidance of her cane and an alert mind and ear.

When we resumed our friendship in the fall my status changed from orienter to reader. New Jersey, Marieanna's home state, sends her funds each month to provide for orienters and readers. The material which isn't available in braille, on tape, or on record, must be read to her. Of course, each of these methods consumes more time than if she could read the printed material herself, and so her time devoted to studying is considerably longer than the average student's.

After her marriage next July, Marieanna hopes to teach at a school for the blind near Washington, D. C. By teaching at a high school level, she feels there should be few disciplinary problems; and since the students will be using braille, she'll have no trouble correcting assignments. Her own handicap and her concern will enable her to understand her students' problems, and to encourage them to always strive for high goals.

KS Nips TKE to Pace Intramural Football

by TOM CONUEL, Sports Staff

A full slate of Intramural football games was played nights, but by far the most exciting contest was the KS-TKE foray won by KS, 25-20. Ed Godek completed 22 passes, two for TD's, to lead the KS offensive. Ira Garbutts completed 15 of 22 for TKE.

In fraternity action it was TEP over QTV, 19 - 6; BKP atop SAM, 31-0; AEP over ATG, 18-6; and PSD astride ASP, 13-12, on Rogers' point-after.

In the Dorm League the ever-powerful Maroons rolled to a 16-0 victory over the Grants. The Bruins stopped the Eagles, 21-12, as Ed Polchlopek connected for three TD's.

The Broncos rolled over the Buffaloes, 29-6. Tony Lauria threw five TD's as he lead the Colts to a 32-13 win over the stampeded Leopards, while the Jaguars upset the Patriots, 12-7. The Panthers were shut out, 6-0, by the Comanches and the Aces blanked the Hawks, 20-0.

In other dorm action the Phallics surprised the Birches, 18-13, the Maples walloped the Elms, 26-0; the Oaks ran roughshod over the Hicks, 27-0; and the Trojans smashed the Pines, 34-0.

The Smashers cruised to a 20-0 victory over the Seagrams and the Flaming A's crushed the Academics, 32-13.

The Hi-Lo's topped the Hoovers, 44-0; the Limes recorded a 26-7 decision over the Chestnuts; the Senators negotiated a 6-0 victory over the Monuments; and the Lemons nudged the Bulldozers, 15-6. The Apples felled the Hemlocks, 33-7, while the Redwoods took the measure of the Spartans on first downs. Both teams scored 13 points in the contest.

In the Independent League, several teams played both Tuesday and Wednesday nights. The Chem Club pounded the Salossas, 21-12, and the Smittys, 7-2. Hampshire took two, topping the Selossas, 25-10, and the Uper-Imps, 61-0. The Upper-Imps also lost to the Land Archs, 13-12, while the Lobs clubbed the Renegades, 42-0.

Elsewhere it was Courtesy over Stockbridge, 20-18; the Trojans 26, Bulls 6; Adams Family 14, Griffins 12; Froshites 32, Hangovers 6; Foundry 19, Bombers 0; and Numerals 27, Saints 0. Ken Kurker intercepted four stray Saint passes and caught two for TD's to pace the attack.

Harriers vs. BC, UConn at Storrs

Varsity and freshman cross-country teams travel to Storrs, Connecticut, today to face Boston College and UConn in a triangular meet. Last weekend the varsity finished second in a meet at Boston. Northeastern placed first, Maine third.

Leading harriers are Marc Gelinas, Paul Hoss, Charlie Long, Steve St. Claire, Greg Bowman, John Anderson and Terry Carpenter.

Orioles Drub Flustered Dodgers

by MIKE CURRAN, Sports Staff

The Baltimore Orioles behind the solid pitching of Moe Drabowski and Jim Palmer have taken the opening two games of the 1966 World Series. The action continues tomorrow afternoon at 1 p.m. when the third game gets underway at Baltimore with Claude Osteen opposing Wally Bunker.

In the first game the Robinson boys connected off Don Drysdale in the first inning to give the Birds a 3-0 lead. Each club added a run in the second to make it 4-1 going into the third. In the bottom of the frame the Dodgers loaded the bases with one out, whereupon Mr. Drabowski, a veteran fringe player, was called in.

Moe proceeded to slam the door in the Dodgers' faces, pitching six-and-two-thirds innings of one-hit ball while striking out 11. The final score, 5-2, was a major disappointment to the 55,941 present at Chavez Ravine.

Yesterday's contest started out as a pitching duel with Sandy Koufax and Jim Palmer throwing goose-eggs until the fifth inning. In the top of the fifth centerfielder Willie Davis made a strong bid for the Corvette by dropping two fly balls which led to three Oriole tallies. Young Mr. Palmer had the lead he wanted and from there on set the Dodgers down for a 6-0 shutout.

UMass-UConn Grid Affair 'Should Be Typical'--Fusia

by GLENN BRIERE Sports Staff

A usually wide-open and always spirited Yankee Conference football rivalry sees its 37th renewal tomorrow at Alumni Stadium as UMass entertains the University of Connecticut at 1:30.

Coach Vic Fusia took advantage of an unusual free Saturday last weekend to work with the various position changes he has been forced to make on account of injuries. He is the last person to pass off the young Huskies as an easy them.

"This should be a typical UMass-UConn game," said Fusia. "Connecticut is inexperienced, but with two games under their belt they should be improved. Toner is a proven football man."

Balanced Offense

He pointed out that the UConns played well in their two losses, 16-0 to Yale and 14-10 to Vermont. They use a "varied" offense, which consists of quarterback rollouts, off-tackle slants by the fullback and passes. UMass will have to stop this sort of attack in addition to breaking up a tough Huskie defense.

Redman safety Ed Cody's injury in the Dartmouth game has necessitated the shifting of Bob Ellis to the defensive backfield. Although Cody's loss is a serious one according to Fusia, Ellis is an excellent defensive back. The problem is that more inexperience has to be added to the offensive line to fill Ellis' tight end spot. Sophomore Bill Carty and junior Joe DiVincenzo have looked impressive in practice and should see action at tight end tomorrow.

Petrillo Standout Soph

One of the questionable positions for UConn this fall was quarterback, but Toner seems to have found an able signal caller came off the bench in the second half against Vermont and moved the UConns well. Paul Gruner may also see action at quarterback. The halfbacks, junior Marc Schumacher and soph Pat Ford, are both fast and powerful for their size. Bob Tice, a 205-pound transfer, rounds out the backfield at fullback.

The offensive line is led by Jim Morgan, a strong offensive blocker at tackle. The three interior linemen are small but fast and experienced. UConn has little depth at ends, but Don Fischer in sophomore Pete Petrillo, who and Norm Chartier have shown good potential.

The Huskies have enough experience on defense to make things rough for Landry and Company. On the defensive line, Toner has three linemen whom Fusia calls "outstanding." Steve Dixon, a 240-pound tackle, left guard Joe Pascale and right guard Mark Malek provides a healthy nucleus. The linebacker crop is led by co-captain John Stoddard, who calls the defensive signals.

Redman-Husky Rivalry Enters Seventh Decade

by AL PEAKES
Sports Staff

Tomorrow the UMass Redmen will attempt to extend their five-year winning streak over the UConn Huskies. This will be the 37th time these two have clashed, in a series that dates back to 1897. UMass has won 20 of the contests while the Blue-and-White have emerged victorious in 16.

Homecoming was ruined for the Huskies last year when UMass rallied from a 7-0 halftime deficet to win, 20-7. Quarterback Greg Landry clicked on eight of 12 passes and fullback Phil Vandersea, now of the Green Bay Packers, ripped off huge chunks of yardage.

Although Fusia's forces go into tomorrow's game as a solid favorite, Dame Fortune has not always looked kindly upon them.

Almost exactly 10 years ago, in the 1956 UMass Homecoming, the Huskies routed the Redmen by the rather absurd score of 71-6. During this period UConn was at the height of its Yan-Con dominance, taking the coveted Beanpot five consecutive years.

Recently, the pendulum has swung in the opposite direction. Yet in a series such as this, upsets occur quite frequently. Thus far this year Husky has scored only 10 points.

BOOTERS HOST NUTMEG SQUAD

Hungry for more Yankee Conference blood after first tasting victory a week ago against Maine, Coach Larry Briggs' soccer brigade hosts UConn tomorrow at Varsity Field. The game begins at 10:30 a.m.

The Redmen have two contests under their belts, owning a 5-0 mud-spattered win over Maine and a 3-0 loss to Amherst. UConn, under Coach John Squires, authored a 5-6-1 record a year ago, and in its only contest in 1966 was beaten by Vermont, 4-1.

The Huskies boast 11 returning lettermen, as compared to 15 on the Redmen roster. Both UMass and UConn have displayed sporatic offenses in games this season. The Redmen mounted a co-ordinated offensive against Maine and the result was a decisive win.

Morse Cites "Escalation" As Draining Manpower

by PAMELA METAXAS,
Staff Reporter

In a short prologue to his foreign policy speech last night in the Student Union ballroom, Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon made it clear that he is not happy to be in great disagreement with present U.S. policy in Vietnam. He stated he stands on aprinciple of political philosophy and he feels it is important that "we keep the trust as we see the trust." He also said that in 21 years in the Senate he has "never traded a vote." He feels an obligation to say what he believes in, in this case, against U.S. Asian policy in Vietnam.

He felt there is a stalemate abroad with the result that now there are 350,000 American troops stationed in war zones. With "manpower requirement taking on new importance," escalation is the only answer the U. S. has had so far for the Vietnam war.

Morse emphasized that Johnson's present policy is a radical change from his policy during the elections. He stated he worked for a Johnson committee when he was a Democrat. This was the time Johnson was saying an Asian war should be fought with Asian boys. The present U. S. policy shows the President has not followed this line of action with mounting escalation. "I think it's too bad Goldwater wasn't elected," he added.

As an answer to those who accuse the anti-Vietnam believers of letting down the "boys in Vietnam," Morse retorted that those in the Senate are voting funds to kill them.

He urged the audience to read the history of the United Nations Charter that has as a principal part a section on enforcing the peace. He is strongly convinced the U.S. along with other nations have an obligation to enforce the peace abroad. Present U.S. policy does not follow this obligation

But he also emphasized that "the President respects difference of opinions." He has worked closely with the President on other issues besides the Vietnam question and made it clear that "my criticisms are not personal."

The senator remarked that

New Academic Council Set for Class of '70

by PAT PETOW

An informal student committee has been established by the College of Arts and Sciences academic dean for the Class of 1970.

Gerald W. McFarland, an assistant professor of history and the new academic dean for the Class of 1970, described the plan this way:

"I am interested in fostering communication between the faculty and freshmen students. As one means of achieving this, I have established an informal 'Dean's Committee on University Affairs' to be composed of twenty freshman students."

A letter sent to Heads of Residences on September 23, little more than a week after the fall semester commenced, announced the freshman plan.

McFarland, whose office is Bartlett 383B, told the Collegian that 16 students have signed up so far.

Gathering "general freshman impressions" is one primary goal for the freshman academic council, according to the dean.

Sophs, Frosh Picnic-It

by ANDREA BALBONI
Staff Reporter

On Saturday afternoon the annual Soph-Frosh Picnic, sponsored by the Sophomore class, was held on the Student Union terrace, immediately after the UMass victory over UConn.

The Boss Tweeds started off the afternoon's entertainment and got things going for the well known group, Teddy and the Pandas. Some of the spectators began dancing, but most of the crowd stood and listened to the music or sat on the grass, talked, and ate hot dogs and soda.

Not only UMass students were there but also some UConn fans who came up for the game. They brought with them the UConn mascot, a beautiful snow-white Huskie, who got quite a bit of attention when he joined the crowd.

The weather couldn't have been more perfect for a picnic, and the afternoon offered a good opportunity for more Freshmen and Sophomores to get acquainted.

OFF - CAMPUS

RESIDENCE

Students are reminded that University regulations require that proper authorities be informed of the address of an off-campus student. Non-resident students who were unable to give their local address on registration day must report same to the Housing Office in Draper Hall immediately.

Senate Election Results Reaffirm Student Apathy

The recent senate election results are in.

But the results show more than just who has been elected.

The votes have been tabulated.

They indicate a growing apathy on campus.

Maybe the turmoil of last spring makes these elections seem like old hat, for disinterest is apparent in all the figures tallied.

These election results were not given to the Collegian by the Senate as is customary. This year the staff had to hunt down the results.

Checking over the list that follows, other examples are found of the growing lack of interest in student government.

Several dorms had no contest. There were only enough candidates to fill the given posts.

Among these dorms were: Brett, Wheeler, Baker, Lewis, Leach, Emerson, Hamlin, Chadbourne, Greenough, and Melville.

Lou Gurwitz, unopposed married students senator, won with only a few votes. He played an active and decisive role in the Free Press Committee activities last spring.

The Commuters, and Adams Upper and Grayson Dorms had good contests.

How many incumbents returned? The Senate Office had no information on these figures.

The results are as follows:

Hills South: Boyle 38, Pedor 113, WI 2. Hills North: Ross 41, Piorum 43, WI 3, Void 1. Melville: Burgoin 42. Coolidge Upper: Shafron 56, Bennet 19, WI 1. Johnson: Neiner 24, Denis 53, WI 2. Mills: Muldoon 61, Wimberly 51, Carlson 8.

Homecoming '66

Button, button who's got the button? That's the slogan for Homecoming only two weeks away. In order to gain entrance to any of the weekend activities, you must be wearing a Homecoming button.

The Float Parade will start off this gala weekend. Forming in "S" parking lot near Curry Hicks at 6:30 Friday night, the parade will be led by the University of Mass. marching band. From "S" lot, the parade will march up North Pleasant St., past the reviewing stand and then continue into the center of Amherst.

The procession will return to campus by way of Lincoln Ave., to be followed by a huge bonfire and rally behind the Student Union.

Floats will be entered from all the dormitories, and each fraternity and sorority will also sponsor one. It is also permissable to have a boys' and girls' dorm unite to produce a float. This year over $200 worth of trophies will be awarded.

So, wheres' your spirit? Work, work, work on those floats. It will be the biggest and best Homecoming UMass has ever seen.

Don't forget your button. You need one to march in the Parade.

"Jules and Jim" Film Termed 'Remarkable'

by BOB WILFONG

"Jules and Jim" is a remarkable film if for no other reason than that it is largely built around Jeanne Moreau's remarkably sensual mouth. There are other reasons, however, and director Francois Truffant has combined them with such skill that "Jules and Jim" is perhaps one of the best foreign films made in the last five years.

Because this is a quiet and rather casual film, it might easily be dismissed as pleasant and entertaining, but certainly not in the same class with "8½," "The Seventh Seal," and "Shoot the Piano Player."

True, Jules and Jim is not a particularly "difficult" or "challenging" film, and no one is going to lose much sleep trying to puzzle out the symbolism, but a film can be great without being an intellectual plaything. "Jules and Jim" is deceptively simple.

Because it is not played as an historic tragedy, one can see it as a bedroom farce. But the easy humor Truffant injects into fairly serious situations such as adultery, suicide and cremation masks a very serious purpose.

"Jules and Jim" is a variation of the triangle love story, hardly a unique theme for film or literature. It is the character of the woman, Catherine, played by Jeanne Moreau, which gives the film its mystery and uniqueness.

Catherine is one of those women to whom the usual adjectives don't apply. She flits from lover to lover, and back and forth between the two friends, Jules and Jim, and yet to call her promiscuous is to be inaccurate. She is, charming, impulsive, spoiled, cruel, inconsiderate and more, which makes her fascinating.

She is the kind of woman who forces you to take her on her own tyrannical terms. She is not subject to judgment of any sort. She is a woman set apart, hopelessly unattainable, yet infinitely desirable. "She's the kind of girl you want so much it makes you sorry, still you don't regret a single day," as the Beatles used to say.

To translate such a personality into the language of film is an extremely difficult task. The story, improperly handled, could degenerate into a farce or a sentimental piece of tedium.

Truffant handles the problem superbly. He manages to bring together all the elements of the film to make a powerful impression involving senses, emotions and mind simultaneously.

Music, documentary war shots, settings and dialogues are brought together and subtly controlled to create a mood partly nostalgic, lyrical and almost dreamlike, without being sentimental, falsely sentimental or unrealistic.

"Jules and Jim" is pure film, an experience in itself, utilizing to the fullest the possibilities of the medium. It is a film that can be appreciated on several different levels without being a "something for everyone," spectacle.

Cinema is the art medium of the twentieth century, and films like "Jules and Jim" can do much to provide a cultural atmosphere for the University.

Barbell Club Fares Well in Weight Meet

The UMass Barbell Club entered four contestants in the Olympic weightlifting contest in Lawrence on Saturday.

Junior James DeCoste entered the 165¾ class and weighed in at 160. He pressed 235, snatched 235, and clean and jerked 305 for a 7775 total which won him first place in his class and the outstanding lifter award for the morning events.

Senior Ray Rogers, lifting in the 181¾ class, pressed 282½ lbs. for a new New England record on his first attempt, finishing far ahead in his class.

Barry Laycock, a sophomore, entered the 198¾ class and pressed 260, but failed in his three snatch attempts with 250 lbs.

Jeff Lynge, another sophomore, showed excellent form in the 181¾ lb. class. He had a 215 press, a 195 snatch, and a 270 clean and jerk for a fine 680 total.

DeCoste, Rogers, and Laycock at present are the top three weightlifters in New England in their respective classes.

the President is proposing that prior to negotiation, the opposition must agree to the idea of two Vietnams. This, Morse said, would "give you a bogged-down police force in Asia." Also in the future Asians will insist on being ruled by Asians. There will be no wish for ruling by any other powers such as the U.S.

Morse felt one of the most important constituents of the running negotiations would be that non-combatant nations of the world be present since they have such a stake in the results.

He said there is too much secrecy to the American people about U.S. foreign policy especially apropos the Vietnam question. He pressed the students in the audience to remember, "In a democracy there is no substitute for full public disclosure of the public's business. You can't be subjected to a government of executive supremacy and still have your freedom."

Morse remarked after the Nov. elections the American troops in Vietnam will reach half a million. There is also a steadily rising bombing increase.

"I have never advocated a pull out," he added. He believes that we should never have gone in. The policy of "escalation" is not achieving its alleged goals, he said. As a drain on resources and manpower, he concluded by saying the Vietnam War is not indicative of the American wishes. "Foreign policy really belongs to the American people."

Foreign Service Speaker Thursday

Alfred G. Vigderman, a Foreign Service Officer of the Department of State, will be on campus Oct. 13, Thursday, to discuss the work of the U.S. Foreign Service with interested students.

Following a film, he will answer questions on careers in the Foreign Service Officer Corps, with specific reference to his own recent experience. The film is to be shown in Middlesex Room, Student Union, with showings at 10:15, 2:30, 4:30.

The next written examination for the Foreign Service will be held on Dec. 3, at sites throughout the country; applications for the examination must be filed before Oct. 22.

Northampton Needs You—Now

On Wed., Oct. 12, students from UMass will travel to Northampton State Hospital to participate in an orientation night for prospective volunteers.

People identify with their surroundings and act accordingly to the expectations of those around them. The hospital atmosphere in many respects fosters attitudes of dependency, complacency and pessimism in its occupants.

You as a volunteer can be a vital force, for in many cases you will be a patient's only contact with the "outside world".

Ward activities ranging from making popcorn to creative dancing are left up to the volunteer's own initiative. Many students join in with whatever activities are started by others. Some volunteers develop friendships with a few students and spend their time each week in personal discussions.

For students seeking a more intensive psychological relationship, a special program under professional supervision is available.

The specifics of the various volunteer programs will be explained in detail Wednesday, following which students will be given a tour of hospital facilities.

All interested students are asked to meet in S.U. at 6:30, Wed., Oct. 12. Transportation will be provided.

COMMONS WORKERS

The Food Service Department is in desperate need of more students who can work part time in the four dining commons. The beginning hourly rate is $1.25 and all interested students should contact Mr. John Seegrist, Placement Office, Machmer Hall. The particular times needed are breakfast, dinner and all weekend meals.

YI's To Meet, Discuss Tonight

Victor Aranow, the first president of Young Independents, will lead discussions at the organization's initial fall meeting Oct. 10, at 6:30 in Machmer 26. He is a graduate student at Syracuse Univ., and will speak on the prospect of rent control in the Pioneer Valley.

A committee will be formed to draw up a new constitution to make YI officially a chapter of Students for a Democratic Society.

All interested students and faculty are invited.

Pre-Law Assn. Plans Meeting

by ALLEN DAVIS

The Pre-Law Association at the UM is reorganizing itself in an effort to take a more active and beneficial role for students interested in the study of law.

In previous years, the Association has been ineffectual in helping pre-law students. However, under this year's leadership Pre-Law Association has plans for various and informative programs which will greatly benefit these students.

First, the Deans of many of the outstanding law schools will be coming to campus to explain the requirements and curricula of their particular schools of law schools in general.

Next, the Association plans to have eminent guests discuss specific areas of interest such as corporation law, international law, criminal law, and labor law.

The Pre-Law Association has formulated tentative plans to establish a National Conference of Pre-Law Associations which will hold its convention at the University of Mass. in the Spring, 1967.

The Pre-Law Association will hold an important business and organization meeting tonight Monday, Oct. 10 at 7 p.m. in the Worcester Room of the Student Union. In addition Kenneth J. Suid, the Pre-Law advisor, will conduct an informal briefing session on the Law School Aptitude Tests which will be given Saturday, Nov. 12.

Pete Ward, of the Senate Budget Committee, makes big plans for your money.

How YOUR Money Is Being Spent

by PETE WARD

Look, look. Look and see. See the man, see the money. He has lots and lots of money! (and there's more where that came from Charlie). But wait, why does the man have so much money? Is it his money? No, no. No, it is not his money. It is your money! What! Oh, oh! What is he doing with your money?

He is spending your money. Spend, spend, spend. He likes to spend your money! But wait! there's more here than meets the eye! He works for the Student Senate on the Budgets Comm. and this year he will help spend over $200,000 of your money, and thats no joke!

Are you aware that each year you pay over $20 in Student taxes? Do you know who decides how and where to spend your money? Perhaps you should.

Each year, the Student Senate allocates your tax funds to many and varied R.S.O. activities ranging from the Student Senate itself to the Sport Parachute Club. Each year the amount of available tax funds and the scope of R.S.O. groups financed increases.

In 1959, the tax fund was over $86,000 and 18 R.S.O. groups were supported. This year, over $200,000 has been alloted to 25 R.S.O. groups, in order to provide you with as wide a range of activities and services as is possible.

As the University grows, the student taxes enable these services and activities to expand to meet new needs. Yet, since 1959, there has been a raise of only one dollar in the tax.

You, as a student, should be both aware of and active in the handling of your tax funds. Right now there are vacancies on the three committees, Budget, Finance and Ways and Means, that process the distribution and regulation of your taxes. These vacancies are open to NON-SENATORS as well as Senators. Why not take a part in your student government?

All the information you need is available to you through your Student Senator, or at the Student Senate Office in the Student Union. Just leave your name and any questions you have about phases of Senate financial procedure in the Senate Office, and we will contact you.

For Student Government to be effective and responsible, the students (i.e. YOU) must be willing to keep informed and play an active role. That extends beyond the ballot box.

Campus Comment

What Election...

by JACK DEAN, Editorial Day Editor

Considering the communications media available on campus; and considering the funds available to the Student Senate; why were last Thursday's Senate elections publicized and conducted so haphazardly?

Publicity was practically non-existant. Posters were few, and paid advertisement ceased after Sept. 26.

It was not the responsibility of dorm governments, Head of Residence, or candidates to publicize the election hours. Nor was it their responsibility to conduct the balloting, though this happened in many instances.

Let's face it—the Student Senate left the campus "in the dark". But then this action, or rather the lack of it, was only typical of the apathy prevelant on campus.

Let us hope that the newly elected senators will not reflect this apathy.

War on the Commission

by MIKE HERSH, Editorial Staff

Manhattan representative Theodore R. Kupferman recently asked Congress to conduct its own investigation into the adequacy of the Warren Report on Pres. Kennedy's assassination. He called for the creation of a ten-member joint committee, five from each House, to review the Commission's findings and to investigate certain books and articles critical to the Report. (N.Y. Times, Sept. 30.)

Certainly no one can consider this a dead issue. The Report of the Warren Commission was merely "an advocate's summing up." (Trevor-Roper: Intro to Rush to Judgment by Mark Lane). In fact, the Commission, rather than find out whether or not Oswald committed any crime, seemed to start with the premise that Oswald was guilty and gathered information to prove its hypothesis. It flagrantly disregarded germane evidence from any prominent witnesses, such as Jean Hill, a Dallas school teacher, who claimed that she "frankly thought they (the shots fired at Kennedy) were coming from the knoll..." (Hearings, Volume VI, p. 223)

The knoll was facing the President to his right on Elm St. as the limousine approached the railroad overpass. It may be noted here, also, that originally many of the Dallas physicians considered Kennedy's throat wound "to be an entry wound, even though the shots were said to have ben fired from almost directly behind the President." (Hearings, Vol. XXVI, p. 811)

The most amateur detective would regard such evidence as credible. The Warren Commission didn't. The Commission knew the names of at least 266 witnesses present at the scene of the assassination. Nearly 100 of these persons believed that the shots came from the knoll, and not the Book Depository Building, where Oswald allegedly hid. (Hearings, Vol. XXII, p. 639-646)

There are indeed, many questions to be answered and grave inconsistencies to be corrected. One such question would be to trace Jack Ruby's movements and contacts before the assassination. Another is: What put the police on the trail of Oswald? It could hardly be from Howard L. Brennen's testimony. Brennan is said to have seen Oswald, through the sixth-floor window of the Dallas Book Depository, from the street. Yet, in the police lineup, he failed to identify him. In what circumstances was Tippit murdered? There are many other answers needed before this case can be considered closed in the eyes of the world.

But there is a deeper question involved. If Oswald were to be absolved from his crime, who would be culpable for such a gross error? The Warren Commission, by its original terms of reference, had no independent machinery for finding facts, but relied heavily upon the evidence obtained by the existing agencies, namely the F.B.I., the Secret Service, and the police. This would therefore, necessarily impute the very framework of American justice.

It would certainly behoove Congress to seriously consider Mr. Kupferman's suggestion, if not only for American prestige throughout the world in regard to Oswald's case specifically, but, in general, as a possible curtailment of the enormous powers wielded by such agencies as the F.B.I.

The Name Game

by JOE ROSS, Editorial Staff

The final decision has been made on the names of the highrise towers, and the names have been engraved on the sides of the buildings. It is too late to groan over the uninspired choices. We will just have to live with two towers named Adams.

It won't even do any good for us to rise to the defense of some truly great Presidents who were omitted (such as Millard Fillmore, Warren G. Harding, and William Henry Harrison).

But the failure of the University to name the three individual houses within each tower can still be corrected.

One of the stated goals of the University is that each dorm develop its own individual identity. Calling them "Upper John Adams," "Middle Coolidge," or "Lower Kennedy" does not further this goal.

If the University will not name the houses, maybe the residents will. The house governments could take the initiative and, through a vote of the residents, adopt a name.

The house names could be related to the names of their respective towers (for example "Honey Fritz House" for a dorm in Kennedy Tower. Or a house could just be named after someone that students, not trustees, would like to honor (Senator Harrington).

Even if these student-adopted names are not accepted by the University, the houses would become known by these names and a step would be taken towards better dorm spirit.

Of Towers and Tonto...

To the Editor:

Fall is in the groove, and so are the tenants of the new southwest Complex. Daily, thousands of students pass through the scenic environment of this new architectural wonder admiring the landscaping craftsmanship. Why, the other day in the rain, I heard someone say emphatically, "My God! They've thought of everything — private reservoirs!"

The astonishing fact about sowthwest is that these towers give the University that personal touch necessary to academic life in this age of mechanization —the T's 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6 resemble giant I.B.M. cards against the midnight sky. Max Shulman fans would tend to disagree, however, and insist that these mutant cinder blocks are actually counterfeits of the "Son of the Monster that devoured Cleveland."

This multi-structured complex is saturated with a truly academic atmosphere: the enlightening sounds of pile drivers at 7:00 a.m., for instance, adds to the expansion of mental acuity. Southwest is manifestly a place of free expressions especially on windows: "Up with sex, down with panties, etc." Certainly, the liberality of the administration in the government of these dorms is a source of inspiration and spirit to the freshman class: Piels, Colt 45, Schlitz....

Well, let's face it. The blaring stereo of some anonymous D.J. in tower 5 is only a manifestation of modern expression in the great southwest. So, Hi! Ho! Silver, Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharson, and away!

To the Editor:

Even though I wanted to believe the article "Does College Help?" in the Monday edition, it appears that the survey was slanted and conveyed an inaccurate picture. Unfortunately our society measures a person's "professional success" by the number of digits in his income. From what I've seen, it seems that many honor and Phi Beta Kappa graduates turn to college teaching and research which sadly enough, are not the highest paying jobs.

Though the article may have flattered our 2.0 egos which judge success by the dollar sign, don't knock those few who are interested in knowledge for its own low paying sake. Where did Dr. Ginberg stand in his class?

Help Me

Hello. My name is A. Crowd, and I have a problem. Last Sunday night I went to the Belafonte Concert; I am so big and fat and long that it took me an hour to get to the front door, and it took just about as long to get myself inside the door. My next statement is going to sound unbelievable: I was so anxious to get inside that back parts of me were pushed against front parts of me. Fortunately, I bruised myself very little. I guess I have never learned to control myself when I am excited like that. To get to the point: I am seeking help. I finally realize that I can no longer help myself, and I am looking desperately for strong leaders to order me about when I go out. Please, someone!, whenever there is a big event on campus that will obviously attract me (and I know this sounds selfish), I would like to be guided about more carefully than I was last Sunday. I mean, truly, I (or parts of me) could get hurt.

Pleadingly yours,

A. Crowd

The End?

To the Editor:

The recent assassination of Hendrik Verwoerd has again forced the nations of the west to eye Southern Africa. The new prime minister of South Africa, Balthazar Vorster, might well make Verwoerd seem moderate in retrospect. South Africa, along with Rhodesia, which has become an integral part of the apartheid policy since Britain is reluctant to break the regime of Ian Smith, combine with the Portuguese colonies of Angola and Mozambique to give Southern Africa a powerful military alliance which cannot be challenged by the remainder of the African nations.

Why is it that these white-controlled racist states have not succumbed to external pressures in view of the fact that apartheid as an idea is repudiated by almost the entire world? Why is it that all nations of the world do not institute an economic boycott of South Africa?

I. B. Jabata, president of the Unity Movement of South Africa, toured the United States last year in an attempt to raise funds for the Alexander Defense Committee, an organization founded to assist the legal defense of South African political prisoners. In an interview last November he explained the idea of total boycott.

"This sounds plausible theoretically, but when you examine the concrete facts you will find that Verwoerd (or Vorster) himself owns nothing in South Africa. What is there is the property of the British financiers, it is the property of the American financiers.

"So when you call upon the United Nations, which means in fact that you are calling upon the United States and Great Britain who control the United Nations to boycott and blockade South Africa, you are in effect asking them to boycott and blockade their own property."

Southern Rhodesia and the Portuguese territories cannot be considered as separate entities. As Jabata says: "Southern Rhodesia is both a buffer state between South Africa and the independent African states in the north, and at the same time a front line of defense for all those vested interests of American, British, West German and French finance. When you talk about Southern Rhodesia, you can't talk about it in isolation. You have to remember that it is part and parcel of a whole plan which embraces the Congo, Angola, Mozambique and South Africa."

The Portuguese territories are also decisive in maintaining South Africa's economy. If these colonies won their independence, the South African industrial system would be crippled, provided the black countries of Angola and Mozambique withheld labor presently contracted to South Africa. Jabata notes that "Portugal has an agreement, in fact it is not an agreement but a contract, for a hundred thousand black laborers to South African mines per year. Quite often this is increased to 150,000.

"Therefore, also, it becomes important for the Portuguese territories not to be free, because once they are free that labor is cut off immediately." As a point of information 60% of the labor in the mines comes from outside South Africa.

At a glance the end of apartheid does not seem near. But the access of Vorsfer presents food for interesting thought. Vorster will pursue the same policy of maintaining white supremacy at all costs. But his vicious tactics may make it increasingly difficult for those powers that attach apartheid verbally to continue to support it economically.

In event of the appearance of any instability inside South Africa—a change in the flourishing economy, for instance, or some civil disturbance—Vorster is less likely to attract confidence from foreign investors than Verwoerd. In that case the isolation of the white supremacists of Southern Africa would become a reality, and their downfall a possibility.

tempts. Landry ran 18 times for a net gain of 34 yards, and Bob Detore picked up 23 yards in 13 carries. Bill DiYeso carried only three times for the Huskies but he totalled 47 yards.

McArdle was the defensive star for the Redmen. The soph intercepted two other passes besides his touchdown grab, one of them one the game's second play from scrimage.

The attendance was 12,900. A total of 6,800 UMass student tickets were sold, which, according to Ticket Manager Wally Novak, was "more than we expected."

F. Robinson Leads Oriole Sweep

by MIKE CURRAN

The Baltimore Orioles, behind the strong pitching of lefthander Dave McNally, completed a four game sweep of Los Angeles Sunday at Baltimore.

In beating the former world champs the Birds' moundcorps gave probably the greatest exhibition of hurling ever seen in the fall classic. The Dodgers scored only two runs, both early in the first game, in the entire series while gathering 18 hits. A record-breaking streak of 33 scoreless innings was built up by the Baltimore chuckers.

The Dodgers, who entered their thirteenth World Series an 8-5 favorite, were behind from the national anthem on Wednesday.

The Dodgers' composite batting average was perhaps the worst in the modern history of the game. The usually sure-handed team was also plagued by inept fielding.

To recap the action, on Wednesday in L.A., reliever Moe Drabowsky pitched super ball for a 5-2 victory after Frank Robinson's two-run homer ignited the Baltimore batters.

Thursday, Jim Palmer, who hasn't even been Bar Mitzvahed yet, blanked the Dodgers 6-0, with most of the visitors' runs scoring on Dodger miscues.

On Saturday in Batlimore a fifth inning homer by outfielder Paul Blair provided the lone tally as Wally Bunker outdueled Claude Osteen.

Yesterday, a blast by Frank Robinson, MVP of the series, gave Dave McNally a 1-0 victory over the luckless Dodgers.

P.S., Metawampee dropped a bundle on the series.

INTRAMURAL ROUND-UP

Oaks Keep Rolling

by TOM CONUEL

The Gorman Oaks are proving that defense pays off. The Oaks swept to their fourth straight victory as they stunned the Elms 31-0 and in the process they racked up their fourth consecutive shutout. The Oaks have yet to be scored upon this year.

In other dorm action the high-charged Hi-Lo's offense swept over the Trojans 26-19 with Joe Pedro firing four TD passes, while the Chestnuts blanked the Bulldozers 31-0. The Smashers crushed the Academics 39-7 as Al Craig threw for five TD's and ran for another. Bob Hansen was Craig's favorite target with eight receptions for the night.

Steve Brown sparked the Fleming A's to a 40-19 victory over the Spartans with his six TD passes, while the Hemlocks downed the Seagrams 25-6. The Redwoods felled the Apples 43-20. Vyce threw for five TD's to lead the Redwood offense, while Lucas starred on defense with two pass interceptions.

Elsewhere it was the Lemons over the Monuments 20-6, the Pines topping the Hicks 12-7, the Senators nudging the Terrors 13-9, and the Maples tying 13 apiece with the victory going to the Hoovers in first downs.

In the independent league Courtesy led the Buffaloes by a slim 7-6 margin at the half, but the Buffaloes were stopped in the second half and Courtesy emerged with a 19-6 victory. The Trojans led Stockbridge 21-0 at halftime but then had to hang on for a 34-26 victory as Stockbridge roared back in the second half. The Bulls stampeded the Renegades 46-6, the Lucky 13's cruised to a 20-6 victory over Land Arch, the Lobs surprised Westview 13-7, and the Fisheries conquered the Smitty's 12-9.

At all intramural football games there will always be a trainer somewhere on the field in case of injury.

The Intramural Cross Country Race will start Wednesday, October 12 at 11 A.M. Last year's individual champion G. Johnson will be competing as well as the Gorman Maples team which was last year's team champion.

UMass Defense Lifts Sagging Offense

by DAVE JARNES
Sports Editor

Once again the UMass offensive sputtered, but once again the defense was able to bail the team out of trouble. Because the UMass running backs are not breakaway threats, a strong passing game is necessary in order to get any semblance of an offensive. Against UConn the Redmen receivers were unable to get open and the line didn't give Greg Landry much protection when he tried to pass. Many of these problems lie in the injuries to Santucci, Toner, Cody, and Gogick which forced Coach Fusia to shuffle his lineup and thin out a squad which was already lacking in depth.

Greg Landry, the key man in the offensive unit, was the first to bemoan the ineffectiveness of his team. "That's three games now that the defensive team has kept us in there. We should have been able to beat them by four touchdowns, but we didn't. We've just got to get going or we'll be struggling all season to eke out games like this."

With about eleven minutes left in the game the Redmen had the ball on the Huskies 44 with fourth down and a foot to go for a first down. Fusia elected to punt and a wrath of boo's descended from the stands. However, Vic defended his strategy in the following manner: "Let 'em boo. Hell, we can't even make two first downs in a row, so why should we take a chance when there is still plenty of time left and we have an opportunity to put UConn in a hole by punting. If we were behind at the time we might have gone for it. But whenever you punt you have the percentages with you, and football is always a game of field position."

Fusia was also quick to praise the defeated UConn team. Certainly the Huskies played well enough to win. Statistically they pushed UMass all over the field, but a couple of bad breaks (the intercepted touchdown pass and the field goal attempt that hit the crossbar) cost them the game. "Jack Toner has really done a wonderful job with that team. They were really up for the game. I was surprised at the balance they showed us. Petrillo and Tice are fine ballplayers."

Fusia went on to praise Dave Giarla and Mike McArdle for their defensive efforts and pointed out the long pass from Landry to Ellis and the goal line stand as the key plays of the game.

It's not often that a defensive man gets more attention than an offensive man, but Mike McArdle was clearly the best player on the field Saturday. He intercepted three passes, including 52 yard scoring jaunt, and proved himself to be a deadly tackler. Although he is only a sophomore, the good-looking Millbury native is developing into one of the best defensive backs UMass has ever had.

After the game Mike was more eager to talk about "the great team effort" on the goal line stand than about his own individual heroics. But McCardle did know that UConn was going to try a sideline pass. "My responsibility is to cover the deep man. I knew that he (Petrillo) would throw to the left sideline because he is left-handed. So I just stepped in front of the receiver and it was clear sailing from there."

Not to be left out in the praise department is Bob Ellis. Bob played his usual steady game as a defensive back, but he also doubled on offense, playing halfback. A player who goes both ways in today's game of specialists is considered something of a superman. Bobby Ellis would seem to fit into this category quite nicely.

of downs. UMass was unable to move the ball and was forced to punt. On the attempted punt Rogers was tackled by Plebe guard Joe Newman, who broke through the UMass line and downed Rogers at the 19. John Norris tallied from five yards and Army took a 13-0 lead.

But UMass didn't give up. They came right back and sustained a 66 yard drive that was capped by a eleven yard Adams to Nagle pass for the score. Adams pitched to Rogers for the two point conversion. Army managed to hold on to the ball for the last minute and a half, thus preserving the victory.

Coach Crowe stated after the game that, I am very satisfied with the performance of the boys in their opener. My main concern is with the lack of cohesiveness in the line. Time and experience are the big factors in improvement here. The boys just had not had enough time."

Desperate Redmen Nip Connecticut, 12-6

by TOM FITZGERALD, JR., Sports Staff

The UMass Redmen had rabbit's feet dangling from their hips and four-leaf clovers clutched in their hands as they charged onto the Alumni Stadium turf Saturday. So they won.

The UConn Huskies, who had looked less than spectacular in losses to Yale and Vermont, also charged onto the turf with the fervor of Yahoo subscribers and the guts of burglars. But they had no rabbit's feet and no four-leaf clovers. So they lost.

The score was 12-6, but the real lucky number for the home forces was 52. After the Huskies had taken a 6-0 lead in the second period on a pair of intercontinental field goals by lead-footed junior Roy Lawrence, UConn quarterback Pete Petrillo flung a sideline pass. Redman cornerback Mike McArdle took it in stride and galloped up the sideline on a 52-yard trip to the happy huntin' grounds with 1:20 left in the half. Bruce Cochrane's conversion attempt was off to the left.

Fell Right Way

With seconds to go before the break, Lawrence put his toe to the ball a third time, this one from that magic number 52 yards out. The fans heading for the concession stands stopped to watch as the ball bounced high off the center of the crossbar. It fell the right way for UMass, and the score was still 6-6 as coaches Vic Fusia and John Toner conducted their halftime orations.

The tie stood until late in the fourth quarter. The Redmen took possession on their own 32 yard-line after a UConn punt. The visitors had thrown up a tough defense all afternoon and put plenty of pressure on UMass signal-caller Greg Landry as he rolled out with 3:22 left.

Landry, however, spotted Bob Ellis up field, 10 yards ahead of UConn linebacker John Stoddard. The pass was slightly short, enabling Stoddard to make the tackle. But the play carried to the UConn 16, a gain of, that's right, 52 yards.

Five plays later, on a second-down-and-goal situation at seven-yard line, Landry swept right end for six points and the game.

One More Chance

The Huskies did have one more chance to bark, as Petrillo guided his men to the UMass 25 in the waning moments. UConn then brought in Paul Gruner, a real chucker, who chucked his first and only pitch into the waiting arms of safety Dave Giarla.

Statistics

UMass		UConn

Meanwhile, the clock ran out.

Petrillo, a sophomore lefty, opened up the Husky attack just as soon as he got his hands on the ball. The strategy finally paid off with Lawrence's first field goal, a 28-yarder, midway through the second quarter.

The Huskies came right back after forcing UMass to punt, and once again Lawrence split the goal posts, this time from 39 yards out.

Traded Breaks

Earlier in the quarter, the two teams traded good breaks. Ron Grinage intercepted a Landry pass at midfield and returned it to the UMass 12, where Landry made the tackle to save a touchdown. On the next play, however, Jim DeWitt fumbled into the endzone and UMass' Doug Faucette recovered for a touchback.

With the score still tied halfway through the third period, the UConn attack was rolling. But when the Huskies had the ball first-down-and-goal-to-go at the two, the UMass defense executed a superb goal-line stand. Petrillo tried keepers twice, unsuccessfully, and handed to Joe Borysscewski, who got to the one foot line. Petrillo then called his own signal again but was collared immediately after the snap.

UMass' offense, like the Marching Band's halftime selections, had an oldtime flavor. On a fourth-down-and-one-foot play with 11 minutes remaining and the 6-6 score still showing, the Redmen elected to punt. Nick Warnock's punting, it turned out, was their only method of penetrating UConn territory. Ten minutes later, Landry scored the touchdown.

Martin, Smith Lead Booters To 2-1 Victory Over Huskies

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

A dedicated and hard fighting Redmen soccer team outplayed UConn in a crucial third quarter Saturday at Varsity Field to cop the match, 2-1, and gain a measure of revenge for last year's 5-1 loss to the same club.

Marty Smith, UM inside right, was given a direct kick opportunity at the 11 minute mark of the third period. He negotiated a tremendous on-line boot from the sidelines and UC goalie, Mike Dill, had no chance on the shot. It sailed high to his right, neatly catching the upper corner of the net.

All would have been for naught, however, had not Redmen goalie Larry Martin, an all Yankee Conference choice last season, risen masterfully to two occasions.

He initially thwarted a Husky power drive with a tremendous mid-air chest block. The net-minder was horizontal as he made the stop, could not control the rebound, and was forced again to come up with the ball on a second shot. This time he scooped up the ball and sent the menacing sphere downfield with a hard toss. Coach Larry Briggs termed the series of saves "definitely the turning point of the game."

Both attacks sputtered in the early moments of the fourth canto and it remained for UC outside left Sal Lonero to knot the Redmen twine with the first UC mark at the 16-minute mark. The speedy Lonero took a well executed goal-mouth pass and toed the ball cross-goal to Martin's left.

With the audience and players just settling down again, Redmen wing Gerry Cellilli, stopped on five previous goal attempts in the contest, converted an in-close pass to a tally at 18:10. His boot bounced off a UC defender and came to rest in the nets behind the somewhat frustrated Dill.

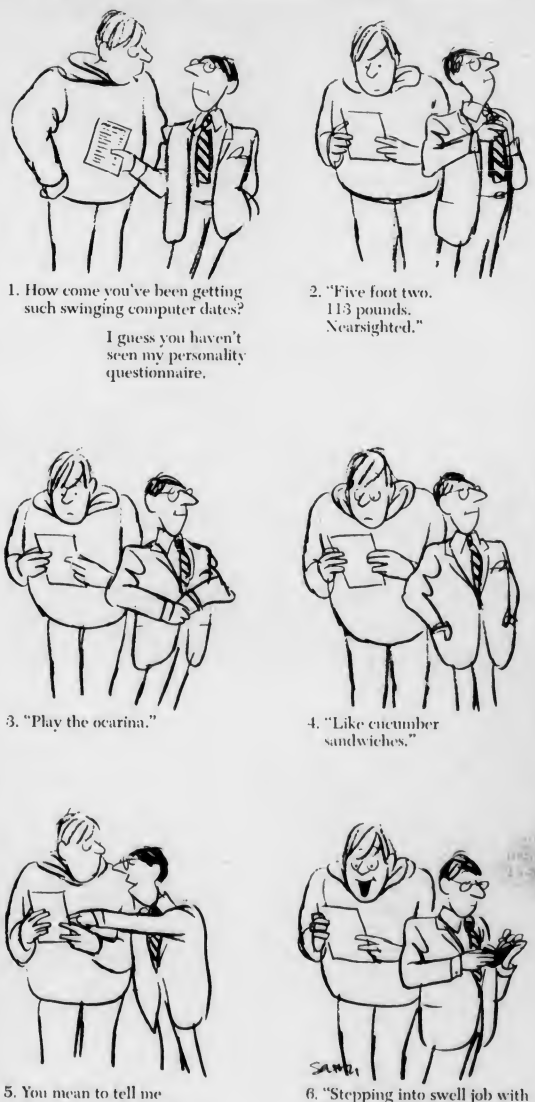
Briggs offered special praise for senior center half Aba Ayanaba. The shy six-footer, an agriculture major, "always gives everything he has and played simply tremendously," the beaming coach said.

"It was a very satisfying win," Briggs said. "The game was played at midfield and it was at midfield that we beat them."

Frosh Edged by Army

by AL PEAKES, Sports Staff

WEST POINT, N.Y. — After giving a valiant effort, Burley Crowe's Little Redmen fell just short Friday afternoon, losing a heartbreaker to the Army Plebes 13-8. This was the first time that UMass had experienced any type of contact at all, while Army had already played two games previously.



The first half was primarily a defensive duel. UMass kept the Plebes' backs to the wall with headsup pass coverage and booming punts by Steve Rogers, one of which went 75 yards.

The second half brought about the only scoring of the game. After Rogers had punted into the wind to the UMass 44 yard line, Army quarterback Gary Passe flipped to halfback Lynn Moore for the TD. UMass then sustained a drive to the Cadet four yard line by virtue of the passing of quarterback Tim Adams to ends Nagle and Rogers. At this point the Plebe defense dug in and held. A UMass field goal attempt was wide and Army took over. The Redmen defense was fired up and the Mules had to relinquish possession after only two series

LIBRARIAN FILES PETITION

Tippo and Clay to Appear in Court

by FRED PILON, South College Reporter

Hugh Montgomery, University Librarian, has filed a petition against Provost Tippo and David Clay in Northampton Superior Court asking for a declaratory judgment on recent administration action.

The petition, according to Attorney Raymond Cross, counsel for Montgomery, alleges that Montgomery was appointed to the Administrative staff of the University in 1952. It continues that in 1956 Montgomery was granted tenure and also appointed University Librarian. It states that on Sept. 21, Provost Tippo orally informed Montgomery that he was to be replaced.

The petition also states that on Sept. 23, Prof. David Clay was appointed Director of University Libraries and that while the appointment might be in accord with Chapter 75, section 15, (referred to as the Freedom Bill), it is perhaps contrary to Chapter 30, section 9a of the General Laws (referred to as the Veteran's Statute).

The petition, said Cross, asks the Superior Court to determine "whether the actions of Provost Tippo are subject to the Veteran's Statute or the Freedom Bill."

The Freedom Bill,, said Cross, authorizes the changing of duties by the Board of Trustees as they see fit. However, the Veteran's Statute entitles Montgomery to the privileges given to Civil Service employees, even though he is not a Civil Service employee. The privileges, which Cross maintains that have not been afforded to Montgomery, are the right to have written notice of any proposed change in his duties and the right to a hearing.

The petition, filed against both Provost Tippo and Clay, questions whether Tippo has violated the Veteran's Statute.

Cross stated that it was an "indirect taking-away of his (Montgomery's) duties." Cross claimed that the written notice delivered to Montgomery and the Library staff stated that "in the future the staff will report to Clay."

Montgomery stated Thursday, "I have been relieved of my duties but not my title." He continued, "I have one point of law and they have another."

The shriek of sirens and the scream of "fire" pierced the air of Southwest Complex three times this week as Fire Prevention Week was all but ignored at UMass.

"We've had no malicious false alarms," John Doherty, Chief of the Amherst Fire Department told the Collegian after a Tuesday and Wednesday alarm at George Washington Tower and a second Wednesday scare at John F. Kennedy Tower. All three were what can be termed as "legitimate" alarms.

"No matter what kind of enterprise you're running, there will come some errors," said Donald Tepper, asistant dean of men in charge of Southwest Residential College, concerning the "emergencies."

Tuesday's at Washington was an undisputed error. A University maintenance man was checking the alarm system and accidentally set things in motion.

Wednesday's first alarm, at Washington, was strictly a case of "fooling in the corridor" as Tepper puts it. A pair of lacrosse players on the twentieth floor jarred the alarm and although the glass didn't break, the alarm was set off.

The third alarm in the two-day period came Wednesday night at J.F.K. and proved, if nothing else, that the fire alarm system and the fire procedure is adequate.

The entire situation was somewhat confusing, but everything functioned well. Head of Residence for Kennedy Lower, Paul Fischer, detected an odor of smoke from an electric room on the sixth floor of J.F.K. and reported it to the maintenance department.

From maintenance he was directed to call the police who then imediately informed Chief Doehrty and the Amherst Department. Two engines arrived within minutes and three minutes later a ladder truck manned with off-duty regulars and volunteers.

As the situation turned out, there was no fire. A tissue caught fire and was put out in a sink adjacent to the electric room.

"We haven't had any bad experiences here. Students have been responsible," Chief Doherty said.

MASS. DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES TO APPEAR HERE TOMORROW

ENDICOTT PEABODY

EDWARD McCORMACK

The entire Democratic slate of candidates for Massachusetts statewide offices in the coming election will appear at the Student Union tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. UMass will be their last stop on a tour of the western part of Massachusetts.

The candidates on the tour will be: Endicott Peabody (Senator), Edward McCormack (Governor), Joseph McGuire (Lt. Governor), Francis Bellotti (Attorney General), Kevin White (Secrtary of State), Robert Crane (Treasurer), and Thaddeus Buzcko.

The group will arrive at the UMass campus at 1:00 p.m. and make a non-political appearance at the Agricultural Fair. They will then move to the Governor's Lounge at 1:30 p.m. for coffee and a reception. Short speeches by each of the candidates wil be held at 2:00 p.m., rounding out their tour.

The appearance, sponsored by the 110 UMass Young Democrats. It expresses the aim of the club. "We wish to promote political activities and issues on campus, committees are set up within the club for each of the candidates,"stated President Nick Ackerman. "After the election, committees wil be set up on human rights, civic action, and international affairs."

Vance Packard to Discuss "Changing Morality"

Internationally-known author and social critic Vance Packard will speak at the University of Massachusetts on Monday, Oct. 17, at 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Packard, who contributed best-sellers "The Hidden Persuaders," "The Status Seekers" and "The Waste Makers" to millions of American bookshelves, will speak on "Changing Morality in a Growing Population" in a talk sponsored by the University's Distinguished Visitors Program. His lecture is open to the public without charge.

Vance Packard's name became a household word with "Persuaders" in 1957, a book that quickly climbed to the number one spot on the nation's lists of best sellers. He is internationally recognized for his precise, carefully researched investigations into the trends in modern society—trends, he feels, that endanger individual liberty. His books have been called "some of the most important social documents of our time."

BLOWOUT!

All old and new staffers are invited to supper at the expense of the Collegian this Sunday at 5:30 p.m. in the Worcester room, SU. Free sandwiches and drink will be provided.

New Senate Policy To Heed Student Opinion

by KATHY WENZEL

The Senate "should capitalize on student opinion," President John Greenquist announced in his brief policy statement which began the first official Senate meeting of the 1966-67 academic year.

The main body of legislation considered, and the committee proposals, dealt with the trend toward more student participation in the making of the decisions directly affecting them.

President Greenquist in his opening address cited the need for rallying students behind legislation which the student Senate passes in order to confront the Administration with a united appeal.

Brought up in the Academic Affairs Committee reports was the issue of a proposed Academic Hearing Committee that included students, whose function would be to review department curriculums.

The Services Committee report announced that the forthcoming student suggestion boxes are to be placed in each dining commons and the Student Union. Also reported was a complaint that students are not allowed to see their academic files because of "confidential" information contained therein, which was referred to the Student Affairs Committee for study.

The major legislation enacted

"I Need a Job!"

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE OFFERS AID

by SALLY DOLGIN
Feature Staff

I need a job! This urgent request of some 1400 undergraduates has kept the University of Massachusetts part-time employment office busy since the beginning of the semester.

"More and more students, says Mr. Siegrist, of the part-time employment office, desire some form of part-time work ranging from paid office duty to "tree-climbing."

Among the positions offered on campus are the following:

—administrative assistant —athletic and recreational assistant
—audio visual operator
—buildings and grounds worker
—clerical worker
—dining hall assistant —faculty assistant
—laboratory assistant —library assistant —art sculptor
—research assistant
—residence halls office worker
—statistical worker
—stockroom assistant
—student union employee.

Those positions claiming the largest number of students include the dining commons, the library, and the major depart-

HOMECOMING '67 to Host Doug Clark; The Blues Project

Doug Clark and The Hot Nuts

Blues Project

The biggest and best welcome back to campus yet! That's what this year's Homecoming has in store for the alumni.

Friday night will host the traditional rally and parade.

Among the entertainment offered will be the controversial and talented Doug Clark and the Hot Nuts. A popular college group the "Nuts" have brought to their audiences wit and humor unabashed by sophistication and unrestrained by set patterns or scores.

Doug Clark, the leader and originator of the musical group, has combined musical talent, creativity and "a hell of a sense of humor" to bring to his public good rock and roll and unequaled wit. The Homecoming committee is sure that students and alumni alike will all enjoy hearing the Hot Nuts at UMass.

New York Times music crtic, Robert Shelton called The BLUES PROJECT "the most incandescent group in folk-rock today." Add a bit of rock-and-roll, a touch of rhythm-and-blues, some soul, a dash of jazz and you've got only a portion of the wide spectrum on The BLUES PROJECT palette. The style is all their own, but they never run out of variations!

UMASS--OXFORD

"A Fertile Land"

The department of English is "lopping-off some of their courses and transplanting them in the fertile lands of Oxford," according to Ernest Hofer, director of the Oxford Summer Seminar.

The department is accepting applications from undergraduates and graduates for the 1967 Seminar. An undergraduate candidate must have at least a B-average for five English courses. Required courses such as English 111 and 125 satisfy the requirement. Graduates must have an average grade of B in their program.

The 1967 Seminar will be held from July 4 to August 15, at Saint Hilda's College in England. The cost per student—$750 for Massachusetts residents and $780 for non-residents—covers transportation, tuition (six semester hours), room, board, planned tours and the guest lecture series.

Candidates may obtain application forms from the English department offices in Bartlitt Hall. Each application requires the signature of an English teacher, either from the UMass faculty or from the institution the student is attending.

Deadline for application is Nov. 15. The selection committee will announce its decision by Dec. 1. If a greater number of qualified candidates is presented to the committee than it can accept, the selections will be made in order of application presentation.

The Summer Seminar survey courses are taught by the dons of Oxford, who ordinarily teach under the tutorial system. According to Director Hofer, "The best young minds of Oxford are available." The dons, he continued, are clamoring to teach Umass students—they are very informal and they like to be friends.

Undergraduate courses being offered are: Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton and Modern Novel. Graduate courses are: Chaucer, Spenser, Age of Pope, and Dickens. A course on Modern British and American Drama will be given to both graduates and undergraduates.

All told, 100 students, mainly from UMass, will be able to combine vacation and studies with travel abroad.

SCHOLARSHIP

A $200 scholarship is being offered by the Hai Guin Club of Boston to an Armenian-American student who was born in the United States. He must reside in Massachusetts and attend college in Massachusetts.

This award, which is based on scholastic ability and financial need, will be granted to a freshman toward his second semester fees. Application deadline is Jan. 3. For further information and applications, write to: Mrs. Andrew Hagopian, 23 Fiske Road, Wellesley Hill.

Voting Results

Cathy Wojtkun and Diane Dube were the winners in yesterday's primary for the post of senior justice on Women's Judiciary. Diane Wright and Susan Haigh came in third and fourth, respectively.

The tallies were:

Wojtkun	628
Dube	260
Wright	206
Haigh	142

Wojtkun and Dube will face each other in the election to be on Tuesday, October 18. There is only one vacant post on Women's Judiciary.

Although the primary had been scheduled for Tuesday, it was postponed to yesterday because no one had seen to it that ballots were printed.

COMMONS WORKERS

The Food Service Department is in desperate need of more students who can work part time in the four dining commons. The beginning hourly rate is $1.25 and all interested students should contact Mr. John Seegrist, Placement Office, Machmer Hall. The particular times needed are breakfast, dinner and all weekend meals.

Captain Lamoureux Honored

Captain Donald P. Lamoureux, recently assigned to the Air Force ROTC Staff at the University of Massachusetts, was presented the United States Air Force Commendation Medal by Lt. Colonel Roy D. Simmons, Jr., the Professor of Air Science. Captain Lamoureux distinguished himself by meritorious service while assigned as Deputy Commander for Security and Law Enforcement at Anderson Air Force Base, Guam.

Captain Lamoureux is a native of Worcester, Massachusetts, and a 1959 graduate of Saint Michael's College, Vermont. He received his commission through the Air Force ROTC Program at St. Michael's. Captain Lamoureux, his wife and four children presently reside on Applewood Lane in South Amherst.

Bowling, Anyone?

Candlepin leagues for interdorm and IFC are now being formed with all matches to be held in the Student Union Games Area. Teams wishing to enter either league should have their captains sign up in the game area. Deadline for entering either league is Nov. 12.

Entries are now being taken for the freshmen candlepin bowling tournament. Trophies will be awarded for first and second place. Entries are limited, so it is recommended to sign up early this week in the Student Union Games Area.

University Chorale Plan Three Concerts

The University Chorale has added three concert appearances including exchange with the University of New Hampshire.

It has not been determined which group will travel although the Student Senate has appropriated necessary funds for the project. UNH choral groups have a good reputation, and UMass would like to match or better them, said Dr. Richard du Bois, Chorale director.

The other two concerts will be performances in this area during the Christmas season. The Chorale will sing in Shelburne Falls Dec. 5, and in Greenfield Dec. 15.

Both concerts precede the annual Winter Concert Dec. 18 at 4 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The Chorale and Chorus will sing Haydn's Te Deum.

NEW SENATE POLICY . . .

at last night's meeting was acceptance of the University Reform Committee's constitution.

The acceptance was strongly debated because it requires a waiver of R.S.O. policy concerning voting at meetings. R.S.O. policy says that only regular (undergraduate) members of an organization may vote, but the constitution as passed allows all members, including faculty and graduate students, to vote. The constitution also included a clause which will allow any member to hold office rather than just students, as stated in R.S.O. policy.

PEANUTS and 'Broken Egg'

Robert Short with Charlie Brown and Snoopy.

This Friday night, Robert Short, author of the No. 1 best-selling paperback book, The Gospel According To Peanuts, will be the main feature at the Broken Egg. Mr. Short's book, published by the John Knox Press early in 1965, and the No. 1 best seller of all non-fiction titles in 1965 (Book Buyer's Guide, Jan. 1966). This unique paperback continues to break records in its sales, and was immediately translated into several foreign languages.

Mr. Short has written many other articles relating Theology and the Arts, the field in which he is currently working toward his Ph.D. at The University of Chicago. These have appeared in publications here and abroad, including the Sunday Chicago Tribune, Motive, Crossroads, Arena, Together, Americas, The Episcopalian, and the Midwest Magazine of the Chicago Sun-Times.

Experiences in such a variety of media brought Mr. Short to an increasing awareness of the possibilities of the arts as a means of communicating religious truths, and when he became responsible for a morning devotional TV series, he began using Peanuts cartoons as a type of modern-day parable. Later, because of many requests, these brief segments were expanded into a full-length program and presented in person for church, club, and student groups.

Exchange Coed Runs X-Country; "Good Practice for UM Classes"

by JOANNE ISAACSON

There's a cross-country runner on campus who can't join the University of Massachusetts track team.

Anne Marie Urizar, a coed from the University of New Mexico couldn't join the UNM team eother. All men. So the petite, dark-haired exchange student joined the Albuquerque Track Team, which is city-sponsored and has both men and women members.

Miss Urizar, whose sister is a freshman at UNM, began racing in high school. Her specialty is the 1½-mile race... good preparation, she says, for the long walks to classes at UMass. "The University of New Mexico has just as large a student population," she explained, "but the campus is more compact." UNM is located in Albuquerque, one of the largest cities in the state.

While here, the 19-year old art major sprints to 25 hours of classes each week — three art courses and one each English and psychology — which she "just loves" and to the Newman Club, where she sings in the choir and is co-chairman of the Publicity Committee. "I just walked into the Newman and asked if I could help work on posters," she says, smiling, "and they jumped on me..."

Between races, she is often found strumming her baritone ukelele, or sewing (she makes most of her own clothes) in Johnson House, her UM home.

Anne Marie, whose home is Los Almos, N. M., a town set high in the mountains about 90 miles from Albuquerque, came to UMass to "see back East". She explains that she hasn't travelled much and is "dying to see New York City and go skiing perhaps in New Hampshire. New Mexico has lots of ski areas; we ski as much as you do."

Los Almos, she reports, gets about three feet of snow a year, and the temperature often drops to 14 below zero.

Cold weather may not bother this southwestern junior but cloudy days do. "The first thing I bought up here was a raincoat," she says, explaining that New Mexico showers are brief and the sun shines when it's not raining. "Up here," she sighs, "you just never know."

The only other thing that took "getting used to" according to Anne Marie, was the unsmiling faces she meets on her dashes across campus. "The kids aren't unfriendly," she emphasizes, "it's just that I'm used to nodding to anyone I meet on campus, even strangers.

"Up here," says the future art teacher, "you don't smile unless you know the person, but I'm getting to know lots of kids."

Racing off to class, the vivacious gazelle adds quickly: "Why, I'd just love to stay another semester."

Jobs...

ments. Salaries range from $1.25 an hour for unskilled assistants to $2.50 an hour for technical workers.

Last year many students campaigned for higher wages, better working conditions in some instances and other minor complaints. A student committee was set up to handle grievances and report them to the employment office.

From July 1, 1965 to April 30, 1966, 2,705 students participated in part-time work ranging from only a few hours to ten months. The total amount earned was 517,202.30. The junior class claimed the most employees, followed by the sophomores, seniors, and freshmen respectively.

To aid needy students, a work study program was set up under the Higher Education Act of 1965. This project, to which the government contributes 90 per cent and the school 10 per cent, places students in jobs both on and off campus. This is the first year the program has been put into full, working affect.

How are students reacting to their various jobs around the campus?

—"I'm so excited! I graduated from paper-work to typing today. Next week I may even be able to answer the telephone."

—"Everything was going great until yesterday. My alarm clock didn't go off so I missed the 7:00 breakfast duty.

—"I'm doing research for my department advisor. To think that some day, when his book becomes famous, my name may be inscribed at the beginning of the book: 'and special credit goes to..."

—"I never thought I'd meet so many kids just by shouting 'hamburger' into a mike."

How does one go about obtaining part-time employment?

• First of all, the student must report to the employment office (In special instances, he can obtain a job directly through a department.)

• There he will fill out a part-time work application and when assigned or cleared, be given a statement regarding income tax and a Commonwealth oath card.

Having become acquainted with this job employment procedure, no ambitious UMass student can complain,

Oh, why don't you work
Like other men do?
How the hell can I work
When there's no work to do?

Moliere

Same as Ever

In the Tretau de Paris' 1966 production of LES FEMMES SAVANTES Moliere will not be betrayed for an instant. This text is the very same he wrote 300 years ago . . . not a comma has been changed.

LES FEMMES SAVANTES is a portrait for a family whose "bliss" is troubled by a domestic quarrel opposing two different camps. On the one hand the arty, intellectual pedants; on the other the "a-woman's-place-is-at-the-sink", group. The three "blue stocking" women even consider firing their servant-girl, Martine, under the pretext that she "brings offense," as they put it, to French grammar rules!

The fact that this classic puts its finger on the contemporary problem of woman's place in society remidns us that Moliere's purpose here is not only to "faire rire". His satire, placed in a modern setting can also be thought-provoking.

The Treteau de Paris has just completed its Canadian tour where it received "rave reviews". The October 20 production of LES FEMMES SAVANTES in Amherst promises to please both the Moliere purists and those who seek revision of tradition— don't miss it! Tickets are still available at the Student Union Ticket Office.

More Open and Less

By JOE ROSS, Editorial Staff

Wednesday's meeting of the new Student Senate was an improvement over last year. It was at least possible for a Senator to speak without having to compete with numerous side-conversations.

But the manners of some of the old Senators who were re-elected left something to be desired. The worst abuse, as always, was the use of points of information for debate purposes, to interupt a Senator who had the floor. The proper use of a point of information is to ask a legitimate question.

As the meeting wore on, the new Senators were growing visibly restless and disgusted with the manuverings of some of the old-timers.

New Senators have an overwhelming majority in this year's Senate. They can set the tone of meetings for this year.

Let's hope that the new Senate has more open minds and less open mouths.

Conference Opinion

By SCOTTIE INGLIS, Editorial Staff

Distinct organizational difficulties within the SWAP Committee were revealed by the manner in which elections for SWAP dormitory representatives were conducted.

Because of insufficient notification, the dormitories were forced to elect their representatives in a haphazard fashion. In order to attract candidates, the conference was publicized as an all-expense paid weekend at The Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge. Incidentally, the total cost of the weekend, 32 dollars per person, was financed from dorm funds.

In another weakness, the SWAP Committee failed to publish the agenda. As a result, the people elected by dormitory residents had little notion of topics slated for discussion. An additional consequence was that the residents themselves could not inform their representatives of their feelings, opinions or suggestion.

The dormitory representative had no choice other than to operate as an individual. This person was prepared only to express personal views and not the views of the sponsoring group.

As a result, the representation casts a shadow over the validity of SWAP decisions.

Had the agenda of the SWAP Conference been made available to the campus at any early date, the total effectiveness of the conference would have been heightened. Coupled with the early notification of the dorms, such a procedure would have precipitated a group of SWAP representatives capable of communicating the prevalent dorm opinions.

The weaknesses evident in the SWAP Conference may be partially attributed to the short time that elapsed between the opening of the semester and the SWAP Conference. If the 1967-1968 SWAP Conference could be held later in the semester there would be adequate time for the publishing of an agenda and better communication. Perhaps if the Conference could be held in May, the organization and resultant action would achieve a greater level of effectiveness.

That Inalienable Privilege

To the Editor:

May I express my gratitude, through our campus paper, for the refreshing periodical "The Intercollegian" which comes to our dorm?

May I quote from one article: "Students and Academic Freedom" page 13, annual Freshman issue '66: Models of Relationship "Members of the academic community sometimes forget the fact that a college or university is 'not a democracy'."

Legally, a university is a corporation, with authority and responsibility for administration invested in the board of trustees by state constitution or charter. The board is granted much, but not absolute freedom to govern the institution in the ways it judges to be consistant with its educational mission. Academic freedom them, is not an inalienable "Right" of students, rather it is a privilege granted or withheld by the institution."

Also an informative article: "Sex and the Campus" addresses men and women.

Knock on the Window Sill

To the Editor:

While listening to my car radio this summer I heard on a news broadcast that students at the University of Massachusetts with the exception of Freshmen women, would not have a curfew this fall. To me this seemed like a perfectly good idea. It would give the individual more freedom and responsibility to govern his college life and also prepare the student for the responsibilities he will face as an adult.

However, after I arrived on campus I found out that one did not have any curfew, one just had to break down the doors to get into one's dorm after 2 a.m. The reason I had to break in was because after a half hour of waiting in the cold for the night watchman I became deseperate. Now I ask you, is this self-curfew?

I realize that the doors of the dorms must be locked late at night to prevent vandalism and theft. However, this is not a valid excuse to free the administration of their promise for individual curfew. It is not excusable to say that security is now training men to fill the jobs necessitated by the no-curfew system. The administration was responsible for the hiring and training of men to be ready for opening day. The blame lies within the administration for the existing confusion. They should act immediately to erase it.

As for the dorms, they do not have the right nor the responsibility to regulate curfew. House committees by making rules that affect individuals who did not vote for a curfew are stepping into a matter in which they have no jurisdiction. It appalls me to think that Knowlton House would elect a Standards Committee to try girls who come in after the doors are locked. Ironically, the house is infringing on the girl's right to set her own curfew which the administration supposedly has given every student. Therefore may I ask that the dorms leave this problem alone. The responsibility is not theirs but it is the administration's.

As President Lederle said in his convocational speech, there must be a full harmonious effort by the students, faculty, and administration for improvement if the process of education is to continue. Therefore it is necessary that the administration live up to its promise and put the no-curfew system into operation immediately. Then and only then can the student accept the responsibility to maturely act and function as a member of the University community.

Backseat Blues

To the Editor:

The practice of issuing preferred seats at football games to upperclassmen is completely unfair. All students pay equal fees for these tickets — they all deserve to get the tickets on a first come first served basis.

An Irate Freshman

Pigskin Pill

How much a life? Every medical doctor during his lifetime is capable of saving a life. Also, the amount of lives saved is proportional to the amount of life-savers available. Our Commonwealth decided that the world needed more doctors. A very good decision. The more politically alert legislatures realized that the medical school could become a political football. And it has.

Not many footballs kill. But this one has and is. By being more interested in their political survival than that of the members of society, the legislators have prevented 150 doctors from existing. Today the medical school is already two years behind its originaly scheduled opening date.

It is to be the University of Massachusetts Medical School. That means it is our medical school. Let us save it from being a football and make it a reality.

How Touching

To the Editor:

Who's trying to impress whom? I am completely distempered with anger at the show put on Sunday night by Sen. Morse during his lecture at the Student Union. Everything he said was aimed to build up his image as the great emancipator of American politics. In my opinion Sen. Morse is just another comedian in the comedy of politics.

All night long we listened to the honorable senator from Oregon brag how, out of his 21 years in Congress, he has never been known to compromise his opinions. How touching! After all, it's not his fault that his opinions rarely seem to concur with those of his fellow law-makers. How sick!

Believe me, when I say, that nobody more than I, would like to see politicians stand up for something they feel strongly about. Maybe that's one of our Democracy's pit-falls? The public is too eager to castigate its politicians for taking an unpopular stand. Even so, when a man consistently disagrees on every major issue, just for the sake of disagreeing, then I believe he is making a mockery of our political system.

Senator Morse said he was quite displeased at President Johnson's stand on Vietnam. (This is only to be expected because Senator Morse seems quite displeased at almost everything.) He said the President has changed his policy radically since election. This was the time President Johnson was saying that an Asian war should be fought by Asian boys.

I don't see how Sen. Morse can say that the President has changed his mind. I am sure that he still believes an Asian War should be fought by Asians, but Vietnam is no longer an Asian war. When there is any threat of the spread of Communism to the free world then it can no longer remain a localized issue. It becomes the responsibility of all free people.

Balance the Ticket

To the Editor:

In my three years at the University, the Distinguished Visitors Program has done an excellent job of bringing to the campus noted figures in many fields, and for this the persons in charge of the program deserve credit.

In the area of political figures and political commentators, however, a far from adequate job has been done in presenting responsible spokesmen from both sides of the political spectrum. In its selection of political speakers, the program has reflected a predominantly liberal bias.

The names of William Shirer, Drew Pearson, Ted Kennedy, Norman Thomas, and Wayne Morse come to mind; they are all notable representatives of a left-of-center position. On the other hand, the only conservative I have heard so far has been Robert Welch, who can hardly be termed a responsible and intelligent representative of legitimate conservative thought. Indeed it may be argued that his presence did more to discredit than to defend intelligent conservatism.

It is time that the D.V.P. bring to the campus one of the many articulate spokesmen for responsible contemporary conservative thought — someone like Bill Buckley, Russell Kirk, David Lawrence, Ralph de Toledano, or one of the many conservatives serving in Congress.

We have a right to expect, in a University, above all places, a fair and justly balanced presentation of the continuing liberal-conservative debate. We demand a "balanced ticket."

Letters Must Be Signed

Of Segregation And Our Mugging

To the Editor:

When I arrived here in September, I got the impression that Stockbridge was being absorbed into regular University life (beanies, etc.). Is this true?

In various ways it is evident that the integration is not as complete as would be supposed. The most glaring manifestation of this segregation of classes is the recently released Mugbooks. Stockbridge students don't get one. Why aren't we given the opportunity to be in it or at least to receive one?

On the introductory fly leaf it states that the University students don't like being referred to as numbers. We don't like being numbers either!

This Man Deserves Respect

To the Editor:

The personal appearance and habits of others are not often criticized today. In fact, on a campus with such a multifarious congregation as there is at the University, one would expect very little censuring. The students demand reform and other liberalities based upon their maturity to accept such privileges. However, there is obviously a lack of maturity displayed in publicly teasing, harassing, and name-calling a senior citizen of Amherst.

Certainly if his critics knew the reason for his appearance they would be chagrinned. They would also be impressed, to say the least, if they knew the reasons for some of his activities. With few exceptions they would feel humble if they entered into conversation with him. His critics might even feel uncultured if they had the opportunity to make his acquaintance.

Many students do respect, recognize, and praise our distinguished senior citizen, and with the proper knowledge even his critics would do likewise.

Fire Prevention Check-up

A Fire Prevention Week checkup of the backstage lighting control board at Bowker Auditorium is made by members of the University of Massachusetts Volunteer Frie Department. Left to right; John A. Proudman of Canton, UMass chief; John K. Edelof Southfield, UMass deputy chief; and Edmund Goetzl, UMass fire and safety officer. The 16-member UMass volunteer department, all students, serves as a prevention and protection force on the UMass campus. Members are stationed in Bowker and at other campus points during public gatherings.

Emergence of Jewish Writers Discussed by Dr. Gerard

by MELINDA KRIENSKY

"American Jews will survive if their writers are allowed to hold a mirror up to them and criticize—but they must look into that same glass if they are to help us find ourselves", said Dr. Bert Gerard. This was the essence of his lecture, entitled "Belief in Judaism and Jewish Writers," in which he discussed the emergence of the modern Jewish writer and his relation to Judaism.

Dr. Gerald spoke as a guest lecturer for Hillel in the Middlesex room of the Student Union on Tuesday evening, Oct. 11.

"If all the Jewish sects united, maybe you could get classes to start on some other day beside the first day of Rosh Hashanah. Though an inadvertent mistake, it was an insult to those of our faith," Dr. Gerard said.

Interspersed throughout his speech were comments concerning the Jew's securing his identity. "In a sick country, every step to health is an insult to those who live on its sickness." he quoted from Bernard Malamud's new novel The Fixer. This was not an indictment but rather a warning that there must never again occur such a holocaust as was witnessed in the Germany of the 40's.

The bulk of his lecture was devoted to modern Jewish literature. Dr. Gerard dismissed many popular Jewish novelists as worthless. He remarked that Jerome Weiderman's I Can Get It for You Wholesale has no pertinence for Jews because Mr. Weiderman is "bereft of a rooted philosophy in Judaism."

Dr. Gerard also disliked J.D. Salinger. "I am still waiting for him to make some moral pronuncement about the Jews' obligation to society." Salinger, in writing about the middle class Glass family, disregards the sloth and poverty of the famed Lower East Side. While Leon Uris was denounced as a Hollywood royalty monger, Herman Wouk was exalted as a propounder of the faith. In Marjorie Morningstar, he poses the problem for an American Jewish writer: "Without faith or national attatchment, why bother to stay Jewish?"

Jewish writers and their audiences have finally come of age. Each must recognize his age. Each must recognize his obligation. The audience must allow its writers intellectual licence, but the writers must offer their readers a believability in Judaism.

University Relations

Selling UMass to the Public

Several centuries ago the Americans purchased the area now known as Long Island for an amount somewhere in the vicinity of twenty-five dollars.

Today this same amount would just about pay for an advertisement in the Collegian: "For sale, one state university. Good buy, only one hundred and three years old and still growing. If interested please contact Mr. John Burke, University Relations, South College."

A little far-fetched, perhaps, but this indicates the complex job in projecting an accurate image of the University. There is, in fact, a very complex unit on this campus devoted entirely to projecting the image of the University, its students, faculty and administration. Included under the University Relations Department are several subordinate units which include news, television, photography, publications and radio. It is the job of members of these units to produce an accurate picture of the University.

From his office in South College, he is trying to acquaint himself with duties and a staff he undertook just two weeks ago. A glance around his office gives the impression of the unsettled young executive. The desktop is none of the family pictures that make an office a little more personal.

But the unsettled atmosphere is present only in the office and not the man. John Burke knows where the University is moving and he also knows his part in this movement.

The main job of University Relations is to present an accurate picture of the University. Burke explained that this is a picture which is constantly changing and the headaches are many. His department must be constantly aware of all matters concerning University policy and public opinion to this. The fact that it is a state university makes it important that all opinions—from legislators to taxpayers—are based on facts. That's Burke's job.

Burke said a constant concern for details is the most significant part of his job. His department is not a headline-seeker that many may believe it is for it is to details that guests and visitors look when making a judgment of the University, he said. It may be who sits next to whom at a formal dinner or even what they are fed, he explained.

When it comes to "selling" students, it is usually the academics that are presented first. Two of the greatest Relations stories involve Roberta Bernstein, a recent UMass graduate, and the undefeated General Electric College Bowl Team of four years ago. Roberta Bernstein completed her four years at the University with a cumulative average of 4.0, a feat which attracted national attention in magazines. When TV viewers watched UMass go undefeated it all but eliminated the "Mass Aggie" image.

Problems concerning University reforms, rarely involve his department, particularly elimination of curfews for coeds. Burke says such liberalization goes practically unnoticed, for it is a part of a changing society and it just took longer to hit this campus. Any dissension by outside parties could be looked at as a smear on all UMass coeds, creating a very touchy subject left alone by most, he believed.

For the most part, Burke feels students are too concerned with trivia and do not use the potential that is open to them. They persecute an administration thatt backs them to the fullest, and joke about the "Phantom", while ignoring the strides made by President Lederle. John W. Lederle is not a headline-seeker, for this is not a tactic to be used now, he continued. Bold headlines were once an asset, but now the University is moving forward and Dr. Lederle is one of the motivational elements in this movement Burke said.

The candid Burke, 24, defines the word "thrust", which is constantly heard across campus, as a tired, worn-out word. He explains: the University is expanding at a rate which should reach completion in 10 years; thrust is over-used to the extent that it indicates something new; however, the road is set, and as it nears completion the returns will diminish. In his words, the progress "is not so much of a thrust as a necessity."

Senior Class to Sponsor Male Reaction to Fashion

The Senior Class in conjunction with Beau-Duane Fashion Enterprises is presenting Fashion Caravan, the Columbia, Princeton, Harvard, Yale male reaction to feminine fashion on Wednesday, Oct. 19.

The show offers a new approach to fashion promotion; the commentary, solely male, is extemporaneous and the background accompaniment is to be provided by an Amherst College rock and roll group. Models will include both UMass students and professional New York models.

The male commentators will review the whole spectrum of feminine collegiate wear. Fashion Caravan includes six segments: :a typical college weekend wardrobe, datewear, formal wear, ski and apres-ski wear, active sportswear, and a miscelaneous grouping including wedding dresses, rainwear, and a few items of haute couture. A total of 75 fashions will be shown.

Contributing manufacturers include: Eastman Kodak, J. P. Stevens, Simplicity Patterns, Garland Corp., Russ Togs, Sportempos, Lady Manhattan, White Stag, College Town, A & R, Juniorite, Ataller, Evan-Picone, Pride's Crossing, Whistle-Stop, Irvington Place, Bill Blass for Maurice Rentner, Ltd., Aventura, American Bazaar, and Slendiferous.

Beau-Duane Fashion Enterprises is in the process of presenting the Fashion Caravan to 26 New England and Northeastern women's and co-ed schools.

"Captive for Nineteen Years"

EQUIPMENT IS HIS BUSINESS

by GEORGE ZEBROWSKI

Tom Bishko has been behind the bars for ninteen years now.

Females have never been allowed even to look at him from the other side of the "cage", let alone go inside to visit him. Those men who have seen him will tell you Tom is a short middle-aged man, with dark-framed glasses and short graying hair.

It can hardly be said that he stands out among his fellow "men behind the bars", with his gray shirt and pants, the institution's name on them. He looks like just another man in the "cage", handing out athletic equipment to the UMass varsity athletes in the Boyden Gym.

Tom, a life resident of Hadley, started work as an athletic equipment handler here in 1947, when UMass was mainly an agricultural college. In those days Tom was confined to the Curry Hicks Building, where he handled both varsity sports and regular physical education classes.

"In those days," he recalls, "we had only three phys. ed. classes a day. Now we need a separate group of men to handle the phys. ed. classes alone."

Times have changed for Tom and for UMass. He is now married and has two children. The UMass family has grown to nearly 13,000.

Tom says that one of the most important changes to come in his field was the hiring of Warren McGuirk as director of athletics.

"He rebuilt the athletic department 100 per cent," Bishko emphasized. "He bought the best equipment money could buy and played a big part in the adding of athletic facilities."

Nowadays Tom can be found in any one of three buildings—in Curry Hicks during basketball season, in the Alumni Stadium locker room during football season, or in his Boyden Gym home base.

If a team is going on an away trip early in the moring, Tom must be there to be sure everything is ready for their departure. When a team comes back late, on the qther hand, he is there to take in the uniforms for cleaning. Because of this, Tom says, time is the most important aspect of his job.

"Sometimes coaches will give you hell when you're not ready in time, but we give them hell other times," Tom chuckled.

Bishko and his staff are being kept busy this fall. More than 300 men were outfitted in different sports. He estimated the University owns more than $30,000 in equipment and uniforms for varsity athletes alone. One reason for having so much, Tom stressed, is the importance of fitting the athletes to their correct size to help reduce the chance of injury. He gave an example of the wide range of sizes available by bringing out a pair of size six shoes and then a pair of size fourteen shoes.

He claims that without his staff—John Kliska, John Goodall and Charlie Safton—his job would be impossible.

The part of the job he likes most Tom confided, "Always meeting new friends." He says he's glad to see the old grads during Homecoming and Commencement Week, although he admits he can't always remember their names.

One thing for sure, though, all the varsity athletes of the school remember one of the men "behind the cage", Tom Bishko.

MONTGOMERY...

"Hugh Montgomery, former librarian dismissed last month, claims that Tippo violated state law in discharging him. He also claims that Tippo created a new post for David Clay—the Acting Director of University Libraries. He claims that Tippo informed him orally on Sept. 21 that "I had to step down.' He said he received written notice two days later."

A high University administrative member stated late Thursday evening that "The University has decided to create a position of Director of Libraries as part of the reorganization of the library system looking toward a 28 story library. The University will conduct a national search to fill this newly created post."

David Clay, Professor of Philosophy, refused to comment on the situation. He said, "I think it better that an announcement come from the Provost's Office."

Clay was the chairman of a Faculty Senate committee that studied the Library system last year. Montgomery stated, "I do not know anything about it."

NOTICE

As previously announced in earlier issues of the Collegian, a "W" is placed on a student's record for courses dropped between September 27th and October 18th, except for first semester freshmen and first semester transfer students who are extended the "W" privilege until November 4th.

After the 18th, any course dropped must receive a "WP" or a "WF". Refer to page 47 of the 1966-1967 undergraduate catalog for details.

News

The Paper's Heart

by GORDON DAVIDSON, News Editor

The news staff of the Collegian not only has the largest staff of any of the departments, but it also has one of the most difficult jobs to perform.

News not only covers stories of campus-wide interest such as curfews, the budget and censorship, but it must also take charge of all publicity for official announcements and notices for clubs and organizations.

It is the job of this staff to tell the campus the who, what, when, where and how of what is going on, not only on the campus, but anywhere that events are taking place which effect the University community.

After the news is gathered from all parts of the campus and the state, the news department has the task of deciding which is of great enough interest to the campus community to appear in the Collegian.

The staff is broken down from news editor to day editors who make up pages, to reporters who cover beats and do assignments.

The Man at the Top

by TOM DONOVAN, Editor-in-Chief

What exactly is the editor-in-chief of a newspaper like the Collegian? What does he have to do for the paper? and why?

The "Why?" of the job is the easiest to answer. A college newspaper editor tackles his job because he likes it. Because he has a certain amount of printer's ink in his veins; because he wants the experience.

What does the editor-in-chief of a newspaper have to do with his job? According to Charles Lanahan, publisher of the award-winning Hamden Chronicle (Conn.),

"You learn to write, edit, sell space, deal with gap-toothed newsboys, talk to the governor, make speeches, buy newsprint, write headlines, read a balance sheet, conduct a meeting, hire people, fire people, keep inventories, argue with your accountant, appear on television, sell printing, meet payrols, make bank loans, pay same, say yes and no 100 times a day."

I could add that a college editor has to know about public issues occurring in the college community, has to answer to the powers that be for the performance of the paper.

THE PHOTO STAFF ENLARGES

by ERIC WISH
Photo Editor

In several weeks a new method of operation of the COLLEGIAN Photography Staff will be initiated. The staff will be enlarged from four to approximately twenty-one photographers including four darkroom technicians. Credit must be given to the Student Senate who had the foresight and courage to pass the current photo budget and thus enable us to create a capable, efficient photo system.

Cameras and accessories will be loaned out to students for the school year, provided they each produce a designated minimum amount of work. It is apparent from the zealous responses of many students that this system of "partial ownership" of equipment is successfully providing incentive for students to join the staff and hopefully will motivate people to continue working.

Each department will have a number of photographers assigned to him. These photographers will accept assignments primarily but not exclusively from their own department head. Students seeking photo coverage of various events must, under the new system, inform the head of that department in which the photo subject belongs. He will then assign one of his photographers to the job.

In order to handle the enlarged work output, the COLLEGIAN darkroom is being remodeled and completely automated. Four competent darkroom technicians will process the bulk of the work.

Although much of the ordered equipment has already been assigned, the COLLEGIAN is still very interested in meeting all students who wish to learn about photography. Drop by the office any publishing night or leave your name with the secretary.

All in all, the student body can look forward to some interesting developments from the new photography staff.

Managing Editor

The Job of Co-ordination

by JIM FOUDY

As with most positions on the staff, the term managing editor defines the job.

The task of the managing editor is to co-ordinate the functions of the various departments; new, sports editorial and feature, into the production of what finally appears as the Collegian.

The job of co-ordination is directed specifically at the news, editorial and feature staffs in an attempt to secure in-depth coverage of the campus and provide corresponding editorial opinion.

Therefore, a necessary requirement for the position is prior experience with the news-gathering and analyzing processes of the paper as well as an awareness of the issues and problems on campus.

However, before news can be gathered or editorials written a competent staff of writers, copy editors, make up editors must be secured. The managing editor is therefore a personnel manager in regards to training and maintaining a working staff.

Finally, based on the theory that the Collegian is an educational experience for future journalists, the managing editor becomes a Monday morning quarterback in that he evaluates the paper with the staff in an attempt to correct errors and improve future production.

A Love of Sports

Sports Editor

Do crisp blocks give you gooseplmples?

Do you swoon over Arnold Palmer?

Do slap-shots make you wince?

Do booming punts give you the chills?

Do soaring tee-shots make your eyes glow with ectasy?

Do you stare in open-mouthed awe as Wilt sinks a foul shot?

Do you delight in elegant handstands, line-drive jump-shots, wind-blown wedge-shots, revealing photo-shots?

The Collegian Sports Staffer answers "yes" to all of the above.

The Sports Staffer groans with despair as the pole-vaulter nicks the bar on the way down. He sincerely believes that a Frank Robinson swing or a Sandy Koufax fling is as beautiful and artful as a Barbara Streisand sing.

The Sports Staffer can appreciate a skillful pick or screen as well as a bone-jarring check. He is of the special breed of folk who sits through lengthy double-headers into the wee small hours of the morning.

He loves to analyze, to second-guess, to predict, to extol, to criticize, to philosophize. And he has a ball doing it.

Collegian Presents

Au Présent

by PHIL GOEPP, Feature Editor

The Collegian is about to publish a magazine supplement. It's name Au Présent, roughly translated as "What's happening." The magazine is designed to keep the campus informed on the way of life of its own generation; from coast to coast and here at UMass.

The magazine, which will appear on aSturday for the next four weeks, will probe subjects of interest to the "under-30's" of today—such subjects as drugs, music, arts, sex, fashion and sports. The first issue, for instance, is devoted to the subject of drugs, and it explores the area thoroughly. There will also be columns on records, books and sports (look for the controversial review of the Yankee Conference).

If you want a close look at your own generation, pick up a copy of Au Present tomorrow, either at your dorm or at the Union lobby counter.

Collegiate Journalist

The Student Press Reviewed

by LOIS COHEN, Feature Editor

Student publications are becoming big business in America. Over two thousand colleges and universities across the country publish either a newspaper, yearbook, magazine, or all three.

Both student journalists and the general public need a source of information and explanation to bring co-ordination to, and speed progress of, these publications.

The Collegiate Journalist fulfills just that function.

Organized in 1963 by the National College Honorary Journalistic Fraternity, Alpha Phi Gamma, its first issue was an eight-page newsletter entitled "Black and White." Dr. Politella, of the UMass Department of Journalistic Studies was asked by APG to edit the first issue and has continued to be the publications editor.

"The first issue was inadequate," said Politella, describing the development of the magazine. "It did not meet the demands of a national audience, so we enlarged it to sixteen pages, published three instead of two issues per year, and changed the name to The Collegiate Journalist."

When the cost of the magazine became too large for APG funds alone to handle, Dr. Politella solicited national advertisers, which now support fifty percent of the publication.

The aim of the magazine is primarily to educate readers on the student press in America. It is unique among publications of this kind in that it presents its material in a light, lively way. The entire last issue, which appeared this month, was devoted to humor magazines.

Also included in the magazine are what Dr. Politella labels the "How To" articles, which give examples of publications that have been successful as a result of their planning and presentation.

The Collegiate Journalist is now printed at the rate of 1,200 copies per issue and is distributed to over 800 college campuses.

The magazine enjoys the respect and appreciation of its readers and serves as an important record and report on the world of student publications.

Publishing Night

"A Swarm of Activity"

by JOAN LEZAR
Feature Staff

Every Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday night the Collegian office swarms with activity as student editors and staff members assemble the final copy of the paper to be sent to the printer's early next morning. What was chaotic is actually a mechanistic organization run by a friendly group of students more than willing to sit down and discuss the operation of the paper or teach a new staffer the ropes.

The formation and direction of such a complex organization is no simple task. The Collegian is the result of patient, hard work by its staff members.

On "make-up night" when the paper is assembled to be taken to the printer, there is much activity in the Collegian office. At least four people are working on typewriters to prepare articles on 18-inch copy paper.

Photographers are busy in the dark room preparing finished pictures. Staff reporters cluster around the news editor's desk asking questions and giving him articles for the paper. Headline editors read through articles, trying to create the most interesting headlines that will fit into available space on each page. And the day editors, the backbone of the Collegian, scan the news, photos and editorials and make the decisions for the next day's paper. This is the essence of the paper—interested people giving a few hours of their precious time every week to the hard work of putting out a newspaper.

A blackboard at one end of the office is decorated with sprawls of yellow chalk, messages for editors and reporters; there are notes taped to the sides of the board with chalk-drawn arrows pointing to them. Beside a few posted signs are photos, mostly office jokes.

Since all staff members are students, each can give only a limited amount of time to th Collegian. Putting out a good newspaper demands more time than most students can affo to spend on extra-curricular tivity. Therefore, the Colleg is composed of many studer , but even more are needed.

The Collegian always w comes students serious ab working on the paper. No p experience is necessary but willingness to learn the princi ples of good journalism and an interest in serving the campus community is required.

In return for the work, students receive the educational experience of newspaper work and have a good time doing it.

APG

A Journalism Fraternity

by JOYCE HARVEY
News Day Editor

One of the newest organizations on the UMass campus this fall is Alpha Phi Gamma. Newest of the national chapters of the honorary journalism fraternity, the UMass APG has 16 members, 12 of whom are charter members.

To promote journalism and to recognize leaders in the journalistic-communicational field are the purposes of APG. When recommendations for membership were sought last spring, the campus mass media (Collegian, Index, Critique, Spectrum, Yahoo, Caesura, WMUA, and the Engineering Journal) sent in the names of qualified personnel.

The basis for membership in APG is special service on a publication or other mass media organization. To join, a prospective member must have served at least one semester as an editor, station manager, or business manager and meet the scholastic average.

While APG may be new at the University, it has a well-planned list of activities already planned for the fall semester. In process now is a "cub" program to recruit new workers for the various campus publications. In this program interested students will be introduced to the procedures and organization of each media.

Biggest project for this semester will be the Journalism Day on Nov. 11. High school and colleges throughout the state have been invited to attend and partake in workshops led by prominant professional journalists.

GEORGEANNE ALEXANDER, CHICAGO

"This is the smoothest I can get my naturally curly hair. Gorgeous, isn't it?"

(This is how Georgeanne Alexander looked before using CURL FREE. And these are her words.) "Girls with straight hair tell me I'm lucky to have natural curl. They just don't know! I leave the house with smooth hair...and get back home looking like curlylocks. In the winter it snows and—instant ringlets. And summer humidity makes my hair frizz up and go wild.

"I saw an ad for CURL FREE in a magazine. It said, 'I was a curly-headed baby, but baby look at me now!' The results looked marvelous. I would like to try it."

GEORGEANNE ALEXANDER, CHICAGO

"Look what Curl Free did! So sleek—I can't believe it's me!"

"Oh...it's beautiful! I've always wanted straight hair. Now I've got it. And I did it myself with CURL FREE. Gee, I'm just like the ad: 'I was a curly-headed baby, but baby look at me now!'"—GEORGEANNE ALEXANDER.

Comb those natural curls right out of your hair with cool, creamy CURL FREE. Even if your hair is so tight and curly it puts up a real fight—it will surrender to CURL FREE. Just keep on using it and you'll see.

Holy Cross Sponsors Fellowship Walk

UMass students are invited to joint a group of 30 Holy Cross students leading a two - day walk, beginning Saturday morning, Oct. 15, from Princeton, Mass. to the Cathedral of the Pines in Rindge, N. H.

The purpose of the walk is to organize an intercollegiate "experience in fellowship" for students in the New England area.

Edward R. Dufresne, the originator of the plan, said that the theme of the walk will be a "deep human concern for the other."

"The purpose of the experience is not in its destination—its real purpose will be found along the way," he added.

The committee has extended an invitation to many schools, including UMass, Clark, Assumption, B.U., Amherst, Smith, and Mt. Holyoke.

"We are making every effort to attract students who are entirely different from us (the Cross students) in background and personal philosophy," Dufresne said.

The route of the walk will include climbing Mt. Wachusett on Saturday afternoon, stopping for a candlelight ceremony and lodging for the night on a beautiful lake.

Dufresne expects a group of approximately 200 students to make the walk.

Those who are interested contact: Diane Marshall, 414 Crabtree, 545-2303.

James Boyle of Springfield, while Diane Dube of Fall River, former honorary colonel, looks on. Miss Holm is the daughte rof Mr. and Mrs. Conrad J. Holm of 20 Osceola Ave., Worcester.

New Scuba Divers Welcomed

For novices who pass a quaifying test, the club offers instructions in both skin and SCUBA diving. The course, taught by experienced divers in the club, is the only one available on campus. For certified divers, a program of fresh and salt water dives is planned.

Club business meetings are held alternate Wednesday evenings at 7:30 in Room 14 of Curry Hicks. Pool meetings are every Wednesday.

Membership is open until Oct. 31. Instructions will begin during the first week in November. Members are also entitled to pool privileges, rental of equipment and use of the club's compressor.

ALPHA ZETA PLANS AGRICULTURAL FAIR

The University of Massachusetts College of Agriculture's annual Science in Agriculture Fair will be held Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 15 and 16, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on the lawn behind the Student Union.

Sponsored by Alpha Zeta, the College of Agriculture's honorary fraternity, the fair will feature exhibits representing several major agricultural professions taught at the four-year University level and the two-year Stockbridge School at UMass.

Research projects being carried out by graduate students in several areas will also be on display. In past years, agricultural innovations that were later widly adopted in the field were previewed at the UMass fair.

The annual event is cosponsored by STOSO, the Stockbridge School service organization. Its purpose is to promote a better understanding of the career opportunities in agriculture.

Although agriculture offers 550 specialized career fields, the nine tents at the fair will represent only major areas such as animal science, plant and soil science, food science and technology, forestry, landscape architecture, entomology, plant pathology, turf management, arboriculture and landscape operations. Featured exhibits will cover genetics, nutrition, bacteriology, biochemistry, natural resource management and the ecology of plants.

What is Alpha Zeta?

Alpha Zeta is a combination of Honor Society, Service Fraternity, Social Fraternity, and Professional Society making anHonrary Agricultural Fraternity with emphasis placed on the word "Fraternity."

The UMass chapter of Alpha Zeta is 50th out of 54 chapters across the nation. The brothers of Alpha Zeta are a select group of male students from the College of Agriculture.

In order to be considered for initiation into Alpha Zeta a male student must have compieted at least three years of his four year college course, and he must have maintained a grade average that places him in the upper two fifths of his respective class.

Alpha Zeta was established in 1898 on the Ohio State University campus to serve the whole cause of higher agricultural education and, in every way possible, all the people engaged in the profession of agriculture. Since the Fraternity was established it has been a tremendous factor for promoting a deeper appreciation of the problems of agriculture.

Today agricuiture is more important than ever before. The need for agricultural leadership is obvious if we are to maintain our present standard of living and position of world leadership. Alpha Zeta is striving to meet this need.

U. T. looks for perfect cast

"Sorry, Laurence..."

by JACQUELINE FINLAY

A sophomore could beat out Laurence Olivier for the lead in the University Theater's fall production of "Liliom". Turning down an actor like Laurence Olivier wouldn't faze director Harry Mahnken in the slightest because he is after more than a good actor for the play.

"Practically everyone on this campus who tries out is good. The thing that matters," he feels, "is whether or not they are good together. If you have two people on the stage who do an excellent job together in a scene, you switch one of them and try that same scene again. If it doesn't come off as well, you know that you have something. Experiment some more—try them with other people in another scene, then together; if they still prove to be good together and not as good apart, cast them. That's the way a play is built," explains Mahnken.

As a director, Mahnken's job is sometimes complicated because there are often too many good combinations of people, each group of which would make a successful play.

He builds on this philosophy: the director sees the plot and the characters in a certain light, and it is from this light that he seeks to cast the play. "When I was casting 'View from a Bridge', I found I could have had about three different casts from the very good actors who tried out, and each would have given the play a different point of view," he said. "It was up to me to choose the one I thought best. Had I done it another way, the audience might never have known the difference."

Mahnken also feels very strongly about the small parts of a play, for they are often what make or break a scene "and with only eight or nine scenes in a play, you can't afford to have even one ruined by somebody doing a sloppy job of crossing the stage." To avoid this pitfall, Mahnken has cast graduate students for small parts.

Does Mahnken's conscience bother him when he disappoints a student with a bit part? "A real actor understands. If I can't use him, but ask him to please come back the next time," said Mahnken, "I mean it. There isn't an actor anywhere who's right for every part, and a good actor knows this. If they think I'm a liar when I tell them to come back, tough!"

D. V. P. Brings Unique Speakers to Campus

by RITA GOTOWALA

Operating on a slice of the students' activities fee, the Distinguished Visitors Program is perhaps one of the most successful campus educational programs.

Students, faculty and campus administrators work together to bring some of the nation's most controversial and important figures to Amherst. Today the committee awaits replies from such distinguished persons as Dean Rusk, Gov George Wallace, Mayor Sam Yorty and Barry Goldwater.

The DVP receives $3 from each student and puts $1.50 towards the Distinguished Visitors Massachusetts Assembly Loan which is administered by the Placement Office. The DVP committee hopes that by 1980 there will be enough money in this fund to pay for the program without having to deduct any money from the activities fee.

The program's strength rests with the cooperation of the students, he explained. The University has not yet established the same reputation as such colleges as Smith and Mount Holyoke, nor does it have the backing of such powerful alumni, he added.

Ideas for guest programs are introduced at committee meetings. The committee representative of almost all factions of the campus population. Serving the DVP are three members from each class, student representatives from the campus at large, a member of the Board of Trustees, a representative from Placement and Financial Aid, Dr. Mark Noffsinger, coordinator of student activities, and three appointed faculty members representing the humanities, social sciences and natural sciences.

The business of making telephone calls and sending out letters is begun as soon as the committee decides on a possible program. As early as June the members are trying to get programs set up for the fall.

If a certain speaker cannot foresee a trip to the University in the near future, the DVP Committee keeps trying. For example, Arnold Toynbee, famed historian, regretted that his schedule did not allow him to speak here this year. However, Richie remarked, "The History Department will be glad to know that we're still trying to get him for next year."

With the money available the committee provides for transportation, a place to stay and meals for their guests. Norman Thomas, who spoke at the University Sept. 29, invited several guests to dinner. The DVP was obliged to pick up the tab.

The DVP Committee has also planned some free concerts in conjunction with other campus groups.

For Winter Carni '67, the DVP and the Class of '68 have pooled their resources in order to bring Marianne Williams and a jazz program to the University Feb. 21. On April 9 the Class of '69 and the DVP will host "The Decline and Fall of the Entire World as Seen Through the Eyes of Cole Porter Revisited," featuring a road company from New York.

The DVP's calendar is constantly being revised. There are always spaces to accomodate last minute acceptances. However, this list of definite programs has been prepared:

DVP's Upcoming Schedule
Oct. 17, Vance Packard, author;
Nov. 11, Kingsley Davis, sociologist;
Feb. 12, Erskine Caldwell, novelist;
April 23-24-25, Scottish poets.

No specific dates have yet been set for Carl Oglesby, Henry Kissinger and Juan Bosch but each will be at the University this year.

Management Education

The University of Massachusetts has begun a federally-financed study that may lead to establishment here of a New England center for education in distribution, marketing and management.

Dean Albert W. Purvis and Dr. William C. Wolf, Jr., of the UMass School of Education are in charge of the project, which has been awarded an initial 29,293 grant from the U.S. Office of Education.

The UMass project will set up a pilot program for distributive education that will establish a basis for undergraduate and graduate programs in distributive teacher education for the six New England states. Students who complete these programs will be qualified to assume positions as teachers and coordinators of distributive education, and as middle management members of varied retailing, commercial, and business enterprises.

Man Over Machine

by N. C. SCANLAN

When Cinema was young, it suffered from growing pains. One of these youngsters, born in 19-26, was presented Tuesday night in the Film Study Series. His name was Metropolis and he had a spectacular body but a very melodramatic mind.

His father Fritz Lang had shaped the boy's body with the architectural photography of Karl Freund, an abundance of domineering machines and a cast equalled only by Paradise Lost.

Freder (Alfred Abel) plays hero who is unable to cope with the comforts of the upper city that dad built. He is more concerned with romantic causes: saving maidens and fighting for brotherhood and children.

Since mechanics and esthetics do not mix, Freder is little concerned with social reform per se. He only has eyes for one of the Marids. (Oh, yes. There are two of them.) Number one Maria (Brigitte Helm) is a socio-religious fanatic who upon getting a big silent - screen smooch from hero replies, "until tomorrow in the cathedral".

The other Maria (the same) is a product of scientific progress. Rotwang, the evil inventer, calls her a robot and only when the workers burn her at the stake is her lead heart revealed.

All Lang's fine points are made without his actors. Sadly enough, they lack any believable depth and come out no better than machine. Lang achieves a vivid arguement for social reform in his "day shift" opening and in the continual merging of worker with machine.

For graphic skill and photographic genius, Metropolis remains an integral part in the development of film. Lang is forgiven for the melodrama, he has compensated with his visual art of epic proportions.

Five Days Skiers Plan In Vermont

by BOB GODWIN

The University of Massachusetts Ski Club will organize a week-long ski trip to the Stowe-Sugarbush area in Vermont during intersession.

Last year the trip was a complete success with perfect snow for the entire week. Twenty-six women students and twenty-two men spent the week at the Four Seasons Lodge, chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Degan, the lodge owners. Just fifteen minutes from the slopes of Sugarbush Ski Area, the lodge is 25 minutes from Stowe, and five minutes from Mad River Glen and Glen Ellen.

For $57.50 the students enjoyed five complete days of skiing with instruction, a warm lodge and meals (all you can eat). A small extra charge of approximately $4.00 was made for transportation to Vermont and back and to the slopes daily.

During the off-season all Vermont ski areas offer special rates of $30 for a two-hour lesson every day and use of all the slopes and lifts for a week. This gave UMass skiiers, who ranged from first-timers to near expert, a chance to ski from 9-5 every day without waiting in line for the use of the tows and gondola.

A survey taken after the trip revealed that 50% of the 1966 group wish to return to the Sugarbush area, and the others want to try Stowe. This year, the Ski Club will try to organize two complete trips, one to each of these areas, simultaniously.

A preliminary meeting is scheduled Monday in the S.U. Council Chambers. The total for food, lodging, tows, lessons and transportation, in spite of a rise in cost, still seems to total less than $65, the club said. All students, faculty, graduate students and friends may attend.

Joe O to Return, MAYBE

Radio's only night-time television show returns to WMUA later this fall—assuming its host gets the talent he needs.

The Joe O Show needs writers, singers, comedians and a big band for the taping Nov. 6, according to its MC, Joe Oleksiewicz, a junior speech major from Montague, he originated the show last December. That solo appearance featured performers, lively patter from Joe and his guests and audience participation.

He hopes to make this year's hour-long show basically the same as last year's "but with some improvements."

Oleksiewicz said, "WMUA is not putting out what they could be putting out because not enough people care."

If he can get enough response to his first show, he would like to try for "a series of monthly or three-weekly special."

He emphasized that the show is "open for anyone who wants to do something," even those willing simply to voice opinions in front of a live audience and expect to be heckled.

"This is a good place for a performer or group to get some exposure," he believes.

Oleksiewicz said anyone interested in the show can contact him in Baker House or at WMUA. He said he will not have formal auditions but would like to sit in on rehearsals of performers.

The show will be taped in the Student Union on Sunday, Nov. 6, and will be broadcast one evening later in the week.

Quipped Joe O.: "I'm also looking for an audience."

On the Beach . . . Writing

by ART McVARISH

Picture a classroom situation where you and a small group of fellow students are casually sprawled over a hot, sandy beach soaking up the sun.

You're within drooling range of droves of young maidens parading about in eye-catching swimming gear.

It's really warm. Your teacher suggests, "Let's call 'time' and take a break." So you all grab your boards and paddle out to try the "heavies" to see if surfing is as easy as the Beach Boys say.

Sounds unreal? Well, it's not. Merely a glamorized description of "operating conditions" of the '66 summer semester's Workshop in Technical Writing. Under direction of John Mitchell of the English faculty, the workshop was run from July 24 to Aug 13 on an estate on the south shore of Nantucket donated to the University.

A private beach served—weather permitting—as a "classroom." And an enrollment fee of merely 150 covered room, board, books and tuition in an arrangement which nicely doubled as a rich learning experience and a vacation.

Of the 14 who attended, two were UM undergraduates and the others, professional writers.

The course content dealt with many of the aspects of technical writing and provided an opportunity for a glimpse at numerous careers available within the field.

Technical writing, Mitchell explained, deals primarily with converting the esoteric jargon of the professional (doctor, engineer, scientist) into understandable layman's terms.

Mitchell believes the field has tremendous potential for anyone interested in a writing career.

The advantage of the workshop was that it not only made possible a great measure of student-instructor rapport but also provided an excellent basis for student inter-action on their writing. The generally casual atmosphere under which the course was organized was by far the greatest asset because, said Mitchell, the students apeared to assimilate more and offer greater class participation. The students themselves were enthusiastic about the course's result —an over-all improvement in their writing.

In general the entire experiment was termed a big success, primarily because "the style of the course was not cramped by formality," Mitchell said.

Georgetown U. Turns WET

Of interest on the UMass campus, and throughout the nation, is this latest development on the National Drinking Scene.

A rule prohibiting drinking in dormitories has been unexpectedly reversed by Georgetown University.

Officials said the new policy, which allows all men to keep both beer and hard liquor in their rooms, was designed to help students develop personal responsibility.

Acording to Rev. Anthony J. Zeits, director of student personnel, authorities who have studied the campus drinking issue have concluded that "the formation of young men is facilitated when they are given the freedom to choose whethere to use or not to use alcoholic beverages."

Georgetown officials also said the move was made to end the pretense of enforcing an unenforceable rule—a primary consideration, according to several students.

Studies of other colleges which allow liquor on campus have shown that "most students do not over-indulge when allowed to have alcoholic beverages in their dormitories," Rev Zeits emphasized.

The step taken by Georgetown is a surprising one, acording to Gerry McCulough, news editor of the student paper.

McCullough said the drinking decision was handled quietly. The student council discussed the issue with administration officials last year. The council knew nothing of the proceedings until the matter was settled, McCullough said.

No one circulated petitions or flyers in support of campus drinking.

For the past four years, McCullough added, student leaders have been trying to liberalize Georgetown's policies. Dormitory curfew regulations have also been relaxed this semester, he said.

With the lifting of the ban on campus drinking, Georgetown, a medium-sized Roman Catholic institution, has become the second college in Washington to allow the privilege. The other is George Washington University.

McCullough noted, "business is really booming at the corner liquor store." (CPS)

Baby Booters Belt Ball, But Bow, 1-0

by JOE DUFFY
Sports Staff

A talented UMass soccer team was defeated 1-0 by a determined Amherst club Saturday at Hitchcock Field.

The Little Redmen controlled the ball for most of the encounter and outshot their opponents, 26-18.

Amherst goalie Jack Wilson was injured during the first minute of play when he collided with a teammate as he attempted a save. Bob Denytr proved to be a fine replacement, however, as he continually made outstanding saves, thwarting the UMass attack.

At the eleven minute mark of the second period, Amherst forward Ron Jacobson beat goalie Tom Malone with a hard boot to the goalie's left.

Frosh coach Pete Broaca commented on the outstanding play of halfbacks John Mercury, Paul Bregoli and Mike Phippard. He particularly praised the efforts of goalie Malone.

"He played an outstanding game for us but, simply, the fact was that we were unable to score. We had our scoring opportunities but were unable to take advantage of them."

Sideline Slants—Though Broaca's charges played a good game the Little Redmen preserved a tradition long honored by UMass freshman soccer teams. No first year UMass contingent has ever upset an Amherst squad . . . The loss evens the UMass record at 1-1 . . . The Little Redmen pounded out an 8-0 win over Stockbridge in an earlier contest . . . The Frosh booters next host Connecticut today at 3 on Varsity Field in their only home encounter of the season.

Local Redman Makes Good: Milt Morin Starts in N.F.L.

An exciting new element has been injected into the Cleveland Browns' pass offense this year in the person of UMass' Milt Morin. And already fans and opponents alike are sitting up and taking notice.

The husky, towering rookie looks more like a lineman than a receiver. He stands 6-4, has to watch his diet to keep the scales from passing 240 and runs over defensive backs as though they were toy soldiers.

Forgotten Position

Tight end had become pretty much of a forgotten part of Cleveland's passing game. Only 13 completions were made there all last season. Morin is rapidly changing that and the result is a more rounded attack.

The native of Leominster, who will observe his 24th birthday tomorrow, already has hauled in 17 passes for 248 yds. and one touchdown. And in the process, Morin is accomplishing something head coach Blanton Collier says is vital for all pass catchers.

"Every receiver must earn the right to be thrown to," says Collier. "Without earning that right by catching the ball under almost any circumstances, neither the quarterback nor the team will have confidence in calling for passes to him."

70-Yards Against Atlanta

Morin's progress with the Browns this year was set back because of his work with the College All-Stars. His first chance to really show his talent came in the third pre-season game at Atlanta when he took a short toss over the middle, spun off two tacklers and rumbled into the end zone 70 yards away.

That was only a sample, though, and in a game that didn't count. The real test still was ahead when the regular season began.

There was a touchy moment in the opener at Washington when Morin dropped a pass down the middle at a critical point deep in Redskin territory. Dick Schafrath, offensive tackle and co-captain, was seen talking with the young end on the sidelines a moment later.

"I just told him not to get down on himself," said Schafrath. "We all make mistakes, but we can't let it worry us. We just try to do our best on the next play. Milt wants to learn. He's going to be a good one."

Several Fine Grabs

Morin said, "A couple of words from the captain at that point meant more to me than anything that could have been said later." He proved it with several fine grabs in the second half as Cleveland rallied to win.

Collier commented, "That was Morin's first season game and through most of the first half he didn't know if he was still at Massachusetts or in Kalamazoo. He did some fine things as the game wore on and he has the potential to be a mighty good end."

MILT MORIN of the Cleveland Browns
"He's going to be a good one..."

Morin has shown rapid development in succeeding games. He had his most productive day against St. Louis while the Cards' strong safety was helping to double team against the deep pass threat. And he scored his first touchdown a week later at New York on a 20-yd. pass play in which he beat the safety on the outside.

"I don't feel I know as much about the offense this year as I should," said Morin. "I'm not at the point where I can really make the most of the opportunities I have on every play.

"I'll Do Better"

"Somewhere along the line I usually make a mistake. If I knew more, there would be less chance of making those mistakes. I still have to concentrate on the detail of my job. When that becomes automatic I'll do better."

Credit for being the first to put Morin's name in the Brown's hopper of future candidates goes to defensive line coach Nick Skorich. He was assigned by personnel director Paul Bixler to scout the New England area several years ago and came back with word that Morin was a promising end at UMass.

Skorich still liked what he saw the following year and later came glowing reports from every other team in the Browns' scouting alliance.

"When the draft came around last November we had Morin listed as the best tight end prospect in the country," said Bixler. Collier picked Morin in the first round.

Presenting The Drinking Song for Sprite:
"ROAR, SOFT-DRINK, ROAR!"
(To the tune of "Barbara Fritchie")

Traditionally, a lusty, rousing fight song is de rigeur for every worthy cause and institution. But we wrote a song for Sprite anyway. We'd like you to sing it while drinking Sprite, though this may cause some choking and coughing. So what? It's all in good, clean fun. And speaking of good, clean things, what about the taste of Sprite? It's good. It's clean. However, good clean things may not exactly be your idea of jollies. In that case, remember that Sprite is also very refreshing. "Tart and tingling," in fact. And very collegiate. And maybe we'd better quit while we're ahead. So here it is. The Drinking Song For Sprite. And if you can get a group together to sing it--we'd be very surprised.

Roar, soft drink, roar!
You're the loudest soft drink
we ever sawr!
So tart and tingling, they couldn't keep you quiet:
The perfect drink, guy,
To sit and think by,
Or to bring instant refreshment
To any campus riot! Oooooooh--
Roar, soft drink, roar!
Flip your cap, hiss and bubble,
Fizz and gush!
Oh we can't think
Of any drink
That we would rather sit with!
Or (if we feel like loitering)
to hang out in the strit with!
Or sleep through English lit' with!
Roar! Soft drink! Roar!
Yeahhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh, SPRITE!

Sprite

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

Craig Paces Smashers; A's Remain Undefeated

by ROGER KIPP
Sports Staff

Dorms produced the big story in intramural football Tuesday night. There were no games Wednesday because of the holiday.

In the Tower League, the Smashers won the showdown of the unbeatens, downing the Redwoods, 25,20. The Redwoods had taken a 13-0 lead on a long run by Alec Vyce and an interception by Dennis Marchant, but Al Craig brought the Smashers back, throwing for three TD's and running for one.

The Flaming A's, also undefeated in four games, won handily over Seagrams, 41-0. QB Steve Brown threw for five TD's, bringing his season total to 21, tops in the league.

Bob Eccher's four TD tosses led the Academics to a 27-0 slaughter of the Hemlocks, and rounding the action the Spartans won a high-scoring encounter, 42-32, over the Apples, with Ernie DiNisco throwing for five touchdowns.

Trojans Over Elms

Turning to the West League, Vic Papadinas and Jeff Sanborn led the Trojans (3-1) over the Elms (0-4), 41-0, with Papadinas hitting on 16 of 24 attempts, including nine in a row in one stretch, and Sanborn scoring 17 points to increase his league high total to 65.

Elsewhere, the Oaks, scored on for the first time this season, squeezed by the Hoovers, 12-8, to remain in first place, tied with the Hi-Los who crushed the Pines, 33-6. Joe Pedro did it again for the Hi-Los, completing 20 of 37 for five TD's, raising his total to 20 TD passes for the year. Finally, Jeff Eaton threw a scoring pass in each half as the Maples topped the Hicks, 13-6.

The top three finishers in Wednesday's intramural cross country meet are from left Harold Cohen of Sigma Alpha Mu, second place; Gerald Johnston of the Kennedy Leopards, first place; and Eric Potter of the Kennedy Cougars, third place.

Going to the South League, the Monuments upset the Limes, 18-7, getting all their points in the second half, the Lemons remained unbeaten, shrugging off the Senators, 20-7, and with Dave Torrey hitting end Dick Payne with a pair of scoring tosses, the Chestnuts whitewashed the Terriers, 19-0.

Trojans Upset Taxi

Independent action saw the Trojans pull a big upset, knocking off previously undefeated Courtesy Taxi, 18-13. Courtesy, last year's campus champs, could not stop John Canty, who ran for all his teams touchdowns. This game created a three-way tie in the International league between Courtesy, the Trojans, and Westview, who mastered the Renegades, 26-14. The trio is 3-1.

In other independent action, Stockbridge won their first over the Lobs, 15-6, and in the American Division, the Imps, striking twice in the first half, held on to down Smitty's, 12-7. Hampshire (4-0), behind Kinsella's three TD passes, bested Land Arch, 19-7.

The Chem Club won their third, downing the Fisheries, 14-6, while Hack Thomas and Andy Michaud led the Bulls past the Buffaloes, 28-13.

BASKETBALL TRYOUTS

Coach Jack Leaman announced yesterday that first varsity basketball practice will be held Monday at 4:30 in Curry Hicks Cage. At 6:30 tryouts wil be held for the Frosh hoop team. Everyone must supply his own equipment at the practice.

Sophomore quarterback Tom Fay has completed 31 passes for 525 yards and three TD's. His backup, Larry Caswell, also has over 100 yards in the air. Fay's favorite target is junior split end Frank Geiselman, who leads the conference in receptions and scoring. He has caught 18 passes for an average gain of 20.7 yards and four touchdowns. He is a threat on sideline, hook and deep patterns.

The tight end is Bob Hueston, who caught six passes last week against Vermont. In the backfield, the most dangerous man is John Thompson, who is described as a breakaway threat as a runner and deep receiver. Brent Kaufman, the sophomore fullback, has good speed and runs hard. Another speedy soph, Floyd Hightower, provides an excellent reserve.

As far as his general plans go, Fusia will continue to play "position" football instead of "possession" ball. Defending the tactics which drew the boos of the armchair quarterbacks in last week's crowd, he said that due to the many injuries UMass "must play percentage football from here on in."

fine saves before he was replaced by Carl Gustafson with eight minutes gone in the quarter.

After cutting his goaltending teeth on several fine saves, Gustafson was victimized at 14.10. On a corner kick to Gustafson's left, Trinity inside Roger Richard lofted the ball toward the goal mouth as teammate Mike Center moved in. Center headed the ball toward the goal and booted it past the Redmen tender.

Gustafson had no sooner caught his breath than a penalty in front of the U-Mass goal had set up a direct kick. On the penalty shot, Bantam center half Al Greisinger toed the ball high into the nets to the right of Gustafson for the third Trinity score.

In the third session a flurry of shots failed to give UMass a score as Cellilli, Gary Gibbons, Phil Bozenhard and Dick Rosoff tried their hands. Gustafson distinguished himself on a fine save late in the quarter and center half Aba Ayanaba, who, according to Coach Larry Briggs, is "always there, always a fine effort," put on a great defensive show as he blocked consecutive shots at an otherwise open net.

The fourth period proceeded like the third with both clubs taking a passle of shots but with neither scoring. Gibbons, Bozenhard, Cellilli and Rosoff again had opportunities but were unable to take the advantage.

Gustafson garnered five saves before he permitted the fourth Trinity tally at 19:30. Again the score came as a result of a penalty and the ensuing direct kick. Right half Ed Hutton, Bantam captain, knotted the twin with a bullet to the upper left corner of the net. Gustafson was forced to come up with three additional shots before time ran out.

'M' Club Honors Grid Standouts

The UMass Varsity "M" Club, composed of alumni and friends of Redmen athletics, is again honoring the outstanding offensive and defensive performers in each varsity football game.

Certificates are presented to the selections from each game, which are chosen by the varsity coaching staff. At the end of the season trophies will be awarded to the two top individuals, based on the weekly selections.

Cited this fall have been the following: Maine game—Dick Benoit (offense), Rod Brooks (defense); Dartmouth game — Bruce Gombar (offense), Dick Qualey (defense); Connecticut game—Greg Landry offense), Mike (McArdle defense).

The Lady Said 'O's in Four',

Would you believe Metawampe's crystal ball was cloudy? It was, in fact, so cloudy that it remained for a member of the feature staff to pick the correct outcome of the recently completed World Series.

Worse yet, the feature staff member who fearless proclaimed "Orioles in four," amid the laughter of the collective Collegian sports staffers, was its female editor, Lois Cohen.

That's right! Miss Cohen went firmly against Metawampe's prediction of a five-game win for the Dodgers and flaunted the conservative prognostications of the majority of Mike Gould's keypluckers (10 of 17 said Dodgers).

But alas, the poor performance of the staff in its series predictions followed precident set in the spring when seven members of the staff offered pennant choices. Only two were correct.

Again, the disheartened sports staff salutes Lois Cohen, a true diamond among stones.

Percentage-Minded Redmen Eye Rhody Aerials

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

Rhode Island will fill the air with footballs tomorrow at Kingston, as the Redmen go after their third win against the dangerous Rams.

"They throw the ball all over the lot," says UMass Coach Vic Fusia, "whether winning or losing." He noted that URI can be expected to throw around 40 passes in a game.

Jack Zilly's Rams also have a good ground attack, with a speedy backfield. It is a sophomore-studded team, but with last year's outstanding freshman squad, these sophs could be an asset.

Hardly a week goes by when Vic Fusia does not add a new member to his enormous injury list. "I've stopped counting them," said Vic. The latest victims are senior fullback Dick Benoit and junior halfback Billy Compton. Benoit suffered a slight concussion in the UConn game, and since he he has had other concussions in the past, he has been advised to call it quits. Sophomore Bruce Cochrane will take his place.

Rhode Island has dropped two of its three games, losing to Brown 40-27 and Yankee Conference contender Vermont 21-7. The lone win was a 17-6 score over New Hampshire, but it is the type of team that can play the role of a spoiler.
Rhody plays a pro-type offense, with a flanker and a split end.

Trinity Dumps Booters, 4-0

WHAT'S NEXT? — Redman goalie Carl Gustafson has already made save, but still appears to be in line of fire.

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

Trinity's undefeated soccer team parlayed fine execution of direct and corner kicks and a measure of luck into a 4-0 win over a seemingly disjointed UMass squad Wednesday before a Columbus Day audience of 150 at wind-swept Varsity Field.

Redmen Fired Up

At the opening face-off the spirited Redmen took charge of the game, shelling the Trinity net with eight shots in the first quarter. Redmen inside Gerry Cellilli swamped Bantam netminder Bob Loeh with a succession of three shots in the opening minutes, but each time was thwarted.

It remained for Trinity wing Sam Elkin to draw first blood at 12:00 of the canto. His shot, the Bantams' first of the game, dribbled past the outstretched arms of goalie Larry Martin. Trinity's only other shot on goal in the first quarter was a hard shot by Spiros Polemis which Martin tapped over the goal out of danger.

The shoe was on the other foot in the second period, however, as Trinity dominated the first 10 minutes of action, peppering the UMass goal with seven shots and nearly scoring on a grand mixup near the corner of the Redmen goal.

The ball was kicked several times directly onto the crease of the goal and Redmen fullback Frank Howard finally booted the beleagered ball out of range.

Martin Makes Fine Saves

Eearly in the second period UMass' Marty Pikul led a charge down the left sideline but his left-footed shot squirted to the left of paydirt. Larry Martin came up with several

Frosh Gridders Nip BU, 12-6, on Adams' Passing

by AL PEAKS, Sports Staff

A pin-point aerial attack and three key interceptions gave the UMass freshmen gridders a thrilling come-from-behind triumph over Boston University Wednesday before approximately 500 onlookers at Alumni Stadium.

The victory evened the Little Redmen slate at 1-1.

In the opening moments it looked as though UMass would be run off the field. With the aid of penalties BU drove quickly down the field and the thrust was climaxed when halfback Bob Calascibetta took a pitch-out from signal-caller Bruce Villaneau and scampered 24 yards around left end for the touchdown.

The two point conversion attempt failed.

Later in the first quarter the Little Redmen were victimized when two-way starter Steve Rogers suffered a broken leg. According to team officials, the talented Rogers will be lost for the season.

BU dominated the remainder of the first half with the Redmen defense getting its trial by fire. The Terriers' hard driving backs, Calascibetta, Fred Barry and Malcolm Melldosian, tested the mettle of the front line with a continued ball-control ground attack.

After intermission it was soon obvious that it was a changed UMass offense which came onto the field. Tom Adams opened up

Mass. Democrats' Big Four

500 SPECTATORS HEAR TOP DEMOCRATS BLAST GOP

by RICHARD KLINE
Day Editor

The four top Democratic candidates in Massachusetts gave the GOP a tongue - lashing in the S. U. Ballroom Saturday while 500 spectators looked on.

The four ("Chub" Peabody, Edward McCormack, Joseph McGuire, and Frank Bellotti) gave short but highly explosive speeches blasting their GOP opponents and expressing a need for a Democratic sweep in the coming election.

First to the podium was Peabody, whose style and looks emitted a strong "young man from Boston", JFK image as he praised each member of the slate individually.

He concluded by summarizing his major accomplishments which were setting up UMass - Boston and spending much of his time as governor on federal legislation.

After being introduced by UM Young Democrats Pres. Nick Akerman, as the next member ex-officio of the UM Board of Trustees (a post held by the governor), Ed McCormack wasted no time in cutting into Republican Gov. John Volpe. ..

Referring to the UM med school McCormack stated: "The question here isn't the selection of architects, it's more of education."

McCormack then went into particulars on education in the state. "In amount of money put into education, we rank fifteenth," he stated. "Of all our community colleges, only one is accredited. All the rest are in the poverty rank. We put $550 per student into education and it should be $900. This (UM) is perhaps the only state sponsored secondary school not in the poverty class."

"I feel that Massachusetts is not doing enough for education. We're spending $400,000 on scholarships and Mississippi is spending $500,000." McCormack advocated a G.I. Bill of Rights type of bill for college students today.

Later in the afternoon, McCormack answered questions concerning the University. Referring to Yahoo, he said that he wants to create a division on civil rights and civil liberties to deal with any issues in the state under these two headings. "I'm a strong advocate of freedom of speech, but, you need a balance of freedom and responsibility."

He feels that there should be a vehicle for student self expression, but students should realize what is right and what is wrong.

Vandalism Rampant: Southwest Elevators Jammed, Doors Jimmied

by PAMELA METAXAS
Staff Reporter

Vandalism in the Southwest towers recently has threatened much of the valuable property in the million-dollar dorms, according to a tower head-of-residence.

Emily Rugg, head-of-residence at lower John Quincy Adams, has noted many problems with the elevators.

"The elevators here after opening day have presented quite a problem in as much as students deem it necessary to click alarms, press stop buttons which sounds off alarms, remove the elevator grille and try to open up elevator doors," she added.

Mrs. Rugg emphasized that alarms sound off "at a minimum of 5-6 times a day and sometimes in the evening."

When the students play with the elevator panel, the sensitive elevator controls do not know whether to go up or down, and the elevators become lodged between floors with passengers in them

Mrs. Rugg must call the complex area director, Mr. Storms, who comes over with the assistant resident director. "If he decides nothing can be done, the elevator is shut off until Westinghouse comes over," she said.

She went on to say that young men also come to the office duty desk and disconnect the mouthpiece in the ground floor phone. This makes communication to the room phones impossible.

These students also have made it a habit to play with the lobby intercom. "Without scheduled office-duty students, the intercom becomes a toy for the students to call all floors and misuse it on the girls' corridors." She believes this situation will soon be rectified since the dorm now has scheduled office duty people who are on work study.

The back and front doors of the tower have also been jimmied recently so a girl can get out after closing, she noted. "They have removed part of the plate so that the crash bar would not lock the door," she said. Several times already this semester the doors have been found open in the morning.

Another example of destruction has been the removal of lounge and office door signs in the three main lounge areas. Mrs. Rugg emphasized these signs had been screwed on to the wall and were probably removed in the early morning hours.

She found it impossible to imagine the motives of college men who find such amusement in jamming elevators, intercoms and complicated electrical systems. But she remarked that now that scheduling has been set up and there is a security officer in John Adams for latecomers after 3, "we are looking forward to a sane-running tower."

Thomas Proposes:

"New Role for Exec Council"

By JACK DEAN

"Development of a new role for the Executive Council" was the theme of Pres. Wayne Thomas' keynote address at last Thursday's organizational meeting of the 55-member Sophomore Executive Council.

In an effort to promote class spirit and participation, this year's Council will not function as a separate entity in the manner of its predecessors, but will be an executive body in the truest sense of the word.

"Council members will be appointed as chairmen of the various committees," stated Thomas. "Then membership on these committees will be opened to all interested sophomores." Through this plan all sophomores will be given the opportunity to work for their class.

Thomas also stressed the role council members should play as "sounding boards" of class opinion. "Members should make more of an effort to listen to the ideas of their classmates," he stated. This is in addition to their job of keeping the class informed of the topics discussed at Council meetings.

After this address plans were discussed for the Class of '69 Concert to be held March 18.

Fantasy-Like Story . . .

LILIOM Opens U. T. Productions

Next Wednesday evening, Oct. 19 at 8:15 p.m., the University of Massachusetts Theatre will open its fifth winter season of outstanding films and plays in Bowker Auditorium with four productions of Liliom. Liliom, the Hungarian play that served as the dramatic basis of Carousel, is the fantasy-like story of the ill-starred love of a tough young "barker and bouncer" for a servant girl.

The scene of the action of this imaginative piece of theatre ranges from areas in and around a cheap little amusement park to a police court in the beyond. To effect this rapid change in locale the designer, Keith Michael, has had to construct two essentially different types of scenery.

The first is that of the two dimensional "drop" variety which has the scene painted on a flat surface and is placed on the stage by lowering or "dropping" from above. The second type is the more conventional three dimensional "set."

The next offering will be A Thurber Carnival on Dec. 10th. This hilarious collection of stories will be presented in the theatrical form known as "reader's theatre." This type of production saw it debut with the University Theatre last year and met with great success.

March and April will see, respectively, the naturalistic masterpiece "Of Mice and Men" by John Steinbeck and a wicked renaissance comedy by Machiavelli entitled Mandragola. Mangragola should provide theatre goers with another view of the Italian statesman who is best known for his pragmatic primer on statecraft, The Prince.

Alvin C. Oickle of the University of Massachusetts will be featured on a panel at the 12th annual National Council of College Publications Advisers convention scheduled for Oct. 20-22 at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel in Trenton, N. J.

Oickle will be joining a panel discussion of the topic "Publications Advising is a Profession." Other members of the group include chairman J. W. Click of Ohio Univ. and panelists Mel Mencher of the Columbia Grad School of Journalism and Reid Montgomery of the University of South Carolina.

The annual NCCPA meeting is held jointly with the Associated Collegiate Press, a national organization of collegiate publications editors and staff writers.

Highlighting the session will be the appearance of Roy H. Copperud, author and special columnist for Editor and Publisher Magazine.

Grad Schools Schedule Visits To UMass

The following grad schools are scheduled to visit the University of Massachusetts' campus during the months of October and November. For more information consult the Office of Placement & Financial Aid Services where brochures are available for the schools scheduled to recruit.

Oct. 18—New York University School of Law; Oct. 24 — Northeastern University; Oct. 26 — Washington University School of Law; Oct. 27—Wesleyan University.

Nov. 2 — Emory University and University of Vermont; Nov. 5—University of Rochester School of Business; Nov. 16 — Stamford University School of Business; Nov. 17—Boston University School of Law; Nov. 17—Syracuse University.

DEMOCRATS . . .

On the placement of the UM med school in Worcester, McCormack found the choice acceptable but was somewhat unhappy over the selection of architects. He feels that the architects are highly competent, but that a contractor shouldn't participate in the selection of architects. "It gives the appearance of, if not an actual conflict of interests."

The UM budget, he feels, was unduly cut. The budget was restored in part only because Pres. Lederle protested vigorously, McCormack explained.

"But it has hampered the growth of the University."

"The major difference between the governor and myself," McCormack said, "is in the field of education." On the control of the University, he felt that the Legislature has stepped into an executive vacuum.

He pointed out that it is the governor's job to control UM and that the legislature was stepping into areas not in their jurisdiction, which is one of their major problems.

"I don't want an athletic factory," he said on the question of scholastic exemptions for athletes. "But, we must show some consideration to boys missing study time."

NOTICE

As previously announced in earlier issues of the Collegian, a "W" is placed on a student's record for courses dropped between September 27th and October 18th, except for first semester freshmen and first semester transfer students who are extended the "W" privilege until November 4th.

After the 18th, any course dropped must receive a "WP" or a "WF". Refer to page 47 of the 1966-1967 undergraduate catalog for details.

PROFESSOR TO DISCUSS YIDDISH WRITER, SINGER

DR. H. LELAND VARLEY

He has stated that "demons symbolize the world or me," and yet one critic calls him a "modernist." He has recreated the 17th and 18th century world of Eastern European Jewry, and yet another reviewer comments that he is "not an antique, but the most modern of men writing of the here and now." Who is this mixture of mysticism and rationalism, of history and modernity?

Tuesday, Oct. 18, at 7 p.m. in the SU, Dr. H Leland Varley will speak about this author — Isaac B. Singer — "the only living Yiddish writer whose translated work has caught the imagination of the American literary public."

Born in Poland in 1904, Singer emigrated to the U. S. in 1935 and only began to receive critical recognition for his writings when they were printed in the avant-garde publications of the Noonday Press. and Evergreen Press.

Saul Bellow's interest in Singer and his translations of several of the Yiddisn writer's short stories have helped Singer gain a wider reading public.

For his works, which include Satan in Goray, The Slave, and Short Friday, Singer has won the Louis Lamed Prize and a grant from the American Academy and National Institute of Arts and Letters.

All those who are interested in the American literary scene and the emerging importance of the Jewish writer within it should not miss Dr. Varley's lecture.

HILL HATCH

Well, it finally happened. There's actually a place to grab a snack, some good conversation, and a non-academic atmosphere on the hill.

Greenough "Snack-Bar" is open Monday through Friday, 4 to 10:30 p.m.

Most easily accessible from the west entrance of Greenough Dormitory (opposite Baker Dorm), the newly-decorated snack-bar is endowed with log tables and witty signs, compliments of the management.

These facilities have been designed for you, the student. DROP IN!

He Leads Two Lives

The Legendary Spirit of the Redmen

by MARILYN SANDSTROM

Every Saturday afternoon, Bruce Elmer (Webster, '68) changes his personality and appearance.

He dons a multi-colored face disguise and an unusual sort of costume and rushes out of hiding onto a great, open field, where he spends hours performing his odd duty in a courageous effort to protect UMass interests.

A campus version of Batman?

No, this is Metawampe—legendary spirit of the Redmen. To Bruce Elmer, Metawampe is another life.

From Sunday through Friday, he is an ordinary student, majoring in English, going to class and studying regularly. He hopes to teach at the college level.

But, come Saturday, Bruce vanishes and in his place stands an Indian warrior.

Each year, a male student is chosen to play the role of Metawampe. Elmer was selected after he tried out for cheerleading, not knowing that he had been sized up as this year's representative of the legendary hero.

After a few weeks as Metawampe, Bruce Elmer has discovered a new life. "Being Metawampe has helped me to meet new people," he commented.

Metawampe functions at football games, rallies and cheering practice. He enlivens game crowds and helps hold interest by dancing around the sidelines. At Friday night rallies, student fighting spirit reaches its climax as the great, painted warrior runs through the crowds with a flaming torch and ignites the bonfire.

But, of course, this job is not all fun and games for Elmer. His first major problem was learning how to apply his make-up properly. "I was in such a hurry," he recalled, "that two or three kids had to help."

But now, given his own bag of cosmetics, Elmer has learned how to paint his face with shades of red and yellow grease paint and rouge all in a matter of fifteen minutes.

The masked Metawampe has learned to contend with those who snicker and razz him because of his role. "Well," Bruce said, "that doesn't really bother me. It has to be expected." Now his only problem is physiological. Since cheering practice occasionally overlaps into meal-time, Metawampe sometimes misses dinner.

An Explanation Of Voting By Absentee Ballot

Students, Faculty, and Staff who are registered voters and wish to vote in the State elections on Nov. 8 should apply at once to the city or town clerk where they are registered for an absentee ballot.

This absentee ballot application has to be processed and approved by the Board of Registrars before a ballot can be sent. It is important that instructions which are sent with the absentee ballot itself be read carefully, since the envelope in which the ballot is returned has to be notarized and the ballot must not be marked before it is shown to the notary.

A ballot, once received, can be marked (subject to the preceding precaution) and sent back immediately—it should not be kept until the day of the election, since it must be received by the time the polls close on Nov. 8.

Educational Summer in Bologna, With Classes and Tours

By JEAN FULTON

"One weekend we spent at the Feast of the Redeemer in Venice, the next in Rome with a visit to the Vatican."

Some lucky student's vacation reminiscences? Actually, it's a report of summer school!

Sandwich four days of classes between Fridays, add five such weeks and that's the Bologna program, given last summer at the John Hopkins Center of the University of Bologna, Italy.

Directed by Prof. Howard Quint, head of the University of Massachusetts history department, the program offered 65 students an exposure to the academic and cultural advantages of broaden their generally restricted acquaintance with other peoples.

"Academically, the program was a success," Prof. Paul Norton told the Collegian. "But its whole worth cannot be measured by an examination." Prof. Norton, head of the UMass art department, conducted a course in Renaissance art.

Also offered were an Italian political science course taught by a Mount Holyoke College professor, Italian history taught by UM Prof. Vincent Ilardi and a romantic poets course given by an expert from the New York City Public Library.

Each student chose two courses from the four offered. Classes were Monday through Thursday for six weeks. The art course was the most significant in the students' general opinion, probably because it was most directly related to their being in Italy.

Each week trips were taken to important Italian cities, and for each Professor Norton provided a list of the "things to see." "Then," he says, "they were on their own, and conscientious about seeing most of the artwork mentioned." Much of these trips were included on the art final exam, thus a fundamental part of the course.

But, it was not 'all work and no play' by any means. The trips contained more than mosaics and statues; for example, the beach at Ravenna and the 'Piper Club', a rock-and-roll club with three bands, in Rome. That the students were free to explore on their own removed much of the stigmatism of a "guided tour", and put gondolas within the reach of all who were interested.

The whole group stayed a week after final exams, and perhaps half the students stayed in Europe for three or four more weeks, visiting places of specific interest to the individual.

This summer, the Bologna Summer School is to be under the direction of Professor William Havard, the Head of the Government Department. With some plans still in the formulating stages, it has been suggested that this year's curriculum include a music course. And while knowledge of Italian is not a prerequisite, it is hoped that many students will study Italian here before they leave.

Do you need six credits in order to graduate? Or, will you graduate in June, and are unwilling to face the harsh reality of a job right away? Locking for an interesting and profitable way to spend July and August? Did you ever think of "summer school," Italian style?

IMPORTANT

1. Graduating seniors: If you will not be here in February to have senior photographs taken, leave your name and address with the secretary in the Collegian office by October 21.

2. The index needs candid group pictures of members of the class of '67. Please leave them at the ndex office in envelope with your name and address.

UMass Graduate With Peace Corps in Africa

A 1966 UMass graduate, and former student senate treasurer, James Allen of Worcester, has been named a Peace Corps Volunteer after completing 13 weeks of training at Syracuse University in New York.

Jim is one of 14 Volunteers trained this summer in New York to begin work with the Aanzania Village Settlement program. The group, scheduled to leave for their assignments October 11, will help newly settled villagers to develop their new farm lands and village structure. The Volunteers will be working in 25 newly settled areas each consisting of 250 families.

During their training at Syracuse University, the new Volunteers studied Swahili, Tanzania history and culture, U.S. History and world affairs. Technical studies included principles of community development, public adsion and construction techniques.

With this group's arrival 385 Volunteers will be at work in Tanzania Peace Corps projects which include primary, secondary and vocational education programs.

JIM ALLEN

UMass Professor To Appear At National Convention

Dr. Dario Politella of UMass has a featured role at the 12th anual National Council of College Publications Advisors convention scheduled for Oct. 20-22 at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel in Trenton, N.J.

Dr. Politella will be chairman for one of the featured panel discussions at the convention, "Publications Board—Friend or Foe."

Other college publications advisers serving with Dr. Politella include: Roy Whittaker, Temple University; Ira L. Baker, High Point College, N.C.; Brooks W. Hamilton, University of Maine, and Gene H. Sloane, Middle Tennessee State University.

The annual NCCPA meeting is held jointly with the Associated Colegiate Press, a national oragnization of collegiate publications editors and staff members.

Highlighting the session will be the appearance of Roy H. Copperud, author and special columnist for "Editor and Publisher." Representing the University of Southern California, Copperud will discuss "The Technique of Unlearning."

Also featured will be Patrick W. Kennedy, assistant to the director of the Newspaper Fund.

A special feature of the convention will be the presentation of the Distinguished Service Award to that individual or individuals who have distinguished themselves by special contributions to collegiate journalism.

ON FACULTY

by DON ALIFERIS

College boards go up. Students change. Minds are more active. Eyes are brighter, more ready, even eager. Sometimes there is a glimmer of intellectual commitment or at least a gleam of ideals.

In the class there could be more questions—as the eyes would demand. But the cracker is a dud; the lecture fizzles. To question would be nowhere. Turned off.

Is the faculty improving? Or is it reloaded and enlarged with think-nothings, say-nothings? Slightly breathing podiums scared of questions, petrified of argument? Verbosity, echoed by uncreative minds, embellished with boredom and scapegoat wit, reeking in insignificance?

Flies are attracted by honey; men, by decent money. $10,000 a year minimum to pierce the stigma of state schools. Money is like water for electric power. Money — to attract mentalities strengthened through involvement not "threatened" by it.

The present rewards would hardly motivate a rat through a maze: minimum salaries should be raised. In time, maybe the non-intellectual atmosphere will change or at least the "image"—more seductive.

Minds marinated in mediocrity frustrate, waste—accent the exceptions—turn away the eyes. Is the faculty improving?

Emergency First?

by ELLIE SKINNER, Editorial Staff

Recently it became painfully apparent to the residents of Tower One that the University's policy of Monday morning plays for Saturday afternoon games has extended to the Southwest Towers. A short circuit, caused by a flood in the basement, recently halted the four elevators and bathed the tower in temporary blackness. The emergency lights operated for only fifteen minutes, due to the generator tanks running out of fuel. The tanks had been supplied with only enough Diesel fuel for testing purposes, and the scheduled checking of these tanks had not yet begun.

The University Housing Office has since assured that, in an emergency, fuel could have been rushed to Tower One, thus restoring the emergency lights. It was also stated that there is no danger of a blackout reoccurring, as a weekly check is now made of the tanks in all five towers. Let us hope this is true.

Yet let's assume that Tower One's situation had been more serious. The darkened, windowless stairwells were impassable—what if they had been filled with smoke? What if last spring's mass power failure had repeated itself, leaving Southwest Tower residents to grope blindly to the twenty-second story? Surely someone could have been badly injured in the interim before the fuel arrived.

Must it take an emergency to prompt action that concerns the safety of University residents? . . .

"Peace Offensive"

by MIKE HERSH, Editorial Staff

The Chinese Communist press agency Hhinhua on Oct. 11 claimed that Defense Secretary McNamara was visiting South Vietnam to "work out plans to expand the aggressive war." (N.Y. Times, Oct. 11) How can China doubt our noble gestures for peace?

The following headlines appeared in the N.Y. Times on Sept. 23: "U S. OFFERS TO STOP RAIDS IN NORTH IF HANOI PLEDGES IT ALSO WILL DE-ESCALATE" and on the same front page "30% Increase in Warplanes Is Ordered by McNamara."

On Aug. 3, Edwin Dale, Jr., in the N.Y. Times reported that the "estimate of defense spending now being used in the top economic quarters of the government is that outlays will continue to rise until mid-1967 by about $2 billion every three months." The Sept. 24 issue of Business Week disclosed that "total dollar outlays (for defense) have practically no chance of leveling off before fiscal 1969 at the earliest." An understatement would be to say that this shows the extent of long-range planning to escalate the Vietnamese war.

Yet, simultaneously, Arthur Goldberg was sent to the United Nations "with a dressed-up version of some tired old peace propaganda formulations" (National Guardian, Oct. 8). And the president of the Philippines came to the U.S. to tell the American people what Pres. Johnson is doing for democracy in Southeast Asia, and a trip to Manila was planned to reiterate our intentions for peace.

Such hypocrisy fools no one. According to the N.Y. Times, Sept. 25, "East European, Asian, and African diplomats know that whatever happens in the elections, Mr. Johnson will still be in charge, and they do not expect any basic change in policy." In fact, many of them believe that the election will be followed by further expansion of the war effort. The enemy, of course, trusts U.S. proposals least of all.

The present "peace offensive" like the previous ones is an obvious political tactic to confuse the public. It offers neither a program nor hope of ending the present conflict.

Re: Mrs. Detour

To the Editor:

Yes, Mrs. de Tour, you are right. The Board of Trustees is responsible for the administration of the University. And in that capacity they have seen fit to allow mature and intelligent students go govern their own lives. Within the University set-up, this is a privilege and not a right.

You suggest that we read Sex and the Campus.

The students of our University have been given the privilege of deciding each for himself and herself when to leave and when to return. The students, the administration felt, were mature enough to determine for themselves the decisions that every mature adult must make. This includes decisions on matters of sex. The women of Knowlton House, Mrs. de Tour, are mature enough to make these decisions each for herself.

The national survival—indeed the survival of the human race—may well depend on the capacity of our present generation of young Americans to make intelligent decisions. To do this they must learn how to make decisions. And they can only learn through experience, and through trial and error.

The autonomy extended to each dorm to manage its own affairs does not give it the right to override the University policy of individually self-imposed curfews.

Marshall Nadan
433 James House

It's a Dorm Problem

To the editor:

In answer to Charles R. Hagins' letter:

Unfortunately, Mr. Hagins' information about Knowlton House's Standards Committee is incorrect. The committee's purpose is not to try cases of upperclass women coming in after the doors are locked. It has been set up, temporarily, to establish standards for the dorm—just as its name implies—and to try cases of rule infractions. As we all know, rules governing curfews for upperclass women have become self-imposed. But—and here's the problem—the administration has made it difficult to incorporate this system because of the security problem.

Now we come to the impasse—there are no curfews as such for upperclass women, but there are no security people to let in girls staying out after doors are locked. The classic case has become this: a few girls, unable to cope with their new found 'freedom and responsibility' have been arriving at the front door, or thereabouts, at 3 a.m. for example, and have been disturbing residents of the entire front half of the dorm as they try to awaken someone in order to be let in. Assuming they are successful, who knows if the door gets locked. Not a very good security system, is it?

Granted Mr. Hagins, it is the administration's problem to settle this. But—it becomes a dorm problem when residents are inconvenienced, security is endangered and a disturbance is caused. Therefore, any case which might arise out of such a situation would be a case of violating rules for group living, not staying out past a curfew which is non-existent anyway. Clear, Mr. Hagins?

Marilyn Rozner
Chairman, Knowlton House
Standards Committee

Passing the Buck

To the Editor:

The editorial the other day, a brilliant example of passing the buck, prompts this letter.

Mr. Dean, why the Senate elections were not adequately publicized is truly a question to ask of the Collegian as well as of the lame-duck Senate.

Why didn't the Collegian offer a candidates' forum? Why didn't the Collegian publicize the names of announced candidates in the different constituencies (for the commuters at least)—names that were available as soon as the individuals took out their nomination papers. Then, if only one person had been seeking office, others in the dorm or area would know before a surprise, post-nomination-papers-closing blitz of a campaign.

Why didn't the Collegian distribute and report on a League-of-Women-Voters-like questionnaire?

Why didn't the Collegian announce when its advertisements closed and their costs?

Why didn't the Collegian analyze the results: set them off with attractive makeup and include the total number eligible for voting beside the number voting?

(Incidentally, there was great interest in the Crabtree Senate election. Nearly 80% of the votes cast were write-ins and nearly 80% of the dorm voted as the Page One article neglected to observe.)

Well, Mr. Dean, you did raise some questions!

I suggest one answer: Collegian staff, Senators, voters and non-voters, we're all students as well. Our failings, Mr. Dean, have always received criticism in the form of generalization.

Pat Petow,
Senator from Crabtree

Thorough Analysis

INDEX Receives "A" Rating

The Massachusetts Index staff is proud to announce that after undergoing a thorough analysis, last year's Index has received an "A" rating from the National School Yearbook Association (NSYA).

The Association, located at Memphis, Tennessee, annually invites college yearbooks to compete for awards ranging from the highest honors to "Good." Continuing in its long-standing tradition of excellence, the 1966 Index has received praises by NSYA of being well-planned, having excellent presentation and coverage, and being generally a work of "high artistic and technical quality."

Along with the congratulations which give the yearbook staff a pat on the back come criticisms which often prove more significant as a basis for correction. This "learning from mistakes" has resulted in making the Index better than ever each consecutive year.

Two aspects most criticized by the Association are lack of an index and absence of an apparent theme. In response, Editor-in-Chief Alexander Dean says, "We are toying with the idea of having an extended six-page index listing everyone pictured in the book. As far as the theme goes, it will be implied through the subtle use of photography and dividers."

So You Didn't Like The Elections?...

"have a chair Photo by Wish

by PETE WARD, Public Relation Committee

So you didn't like the elections, Charlie.

You and a lot of others. Not enough competition, not enough publicity, and so on.

So who do you blame? Well, you could stick it on the Senate itself for not playing it up enough. Or how about an angry letter to the Collegian because they didn't cover the Elections enough.

Better still, you can scream about APATHY on campus and blame it on the students. (This is definitely the IN thing to do) Then, when your through yelling, you can forget it right? WRONG! In fact, why not skip the yelling and try to improve the situation.

The major problem related to this years elections concerns one person and the Election Committee. Because there was only one person on the election committee.. That one person was chairman Larry Marcus, and he had his hands full trying to act like a full committee. If it hadn't been for some volunteers, the ballots might still not be counted.

The fact is that almost every Senate Committee has a similar problem. Oh, sure, we can appoint senators to these committees until they don't have time for anything else. But we also want people like you, Charlie . . . Non-Senators who have ideas, and the concern to want to improve their Student Government. In other words, we need help a lot more than we need angry letters.

Take another example, The Activities Committee under chairman Dick Homan. This year this Committee has to help formulate constitutional policy for all R.S.O. groups and about 30 new dormitories. Right now there are two people (including Dick) on the Committee.

So you see, you CAN do something besides spoute off.

Each of the nine standing Senate Committees has positions open to NON-SENATORS as well as senators. You can get details about these committees from the Senate Office or from the Senate Page in the Collegian or Wednesday. If you like, just leave a note with your senator or in the Office, and we will call you.

Oh yes, about the picture above this article. Count the chairs and you will find there are nine, one for each committee.

If you've got a gripe about Student Government, don't send us a nasty letter, come down and . . . have a chair!

FOOTBALL . . .

However, a roughing the passer penalty gave the Redmen another chance, on which they failed to capitalize. Rhody took over for one last fling on their own 39.

Showing considerable poise, Fay moved the Rams upfield. When he was shaken up on a play, Caswell took over with time running short. A completion plus a personal foul moved URI to the UMass 23. Three spine-tingling plays later it was fourth and nine, and Caswell's desperation pass was incomplete. But to the dismay of the Redmen fans in the crowd of 5100, a personal foul was called moving the ball to the UMass 11.

URI coach Jack Zilly then sent Fay in for what was to be the coup de grace. The sophomore, who has talent but needs experience, passed up the middle where Ernie Smith was awaiting it near the goalline.

ONCE MORE UNTO THE BREACH

Way back in 1953 I started writing this column about campus life. Today, a full 13 years later, I am still writing this column, for my interest in undergraduates is as keen and lively as ever. This is called "arrested development."

But where else can a writer find a subject as fascinating as the American campus? Where else are minds so nettled, bodies so roiled, psyches so unglued?

Right now, for example, though the new school year has just begun, you've already encountered the following disasters:

1. You hate your teachers.
2. You hate your courses.
3. You hate your room-mates.
4. You have no time to study.
5. You have no place to study.

Friends, let us, without despair, examine your problems one by one.

1. You hate your teachers. For shame, friends! Try looking at things their way. Take your English teacher, for instance. Here's a man who is one of the world's authorities on Robert Browning, yet he wears $30 tweeds and a pre-war necktie while his brother Sam, a high school dropout, earns 70 thou a year in aluminum siding. Is it so hard to understand why he writes "F" on top of your themes and "Eeeyich!" in the margin? Instead of hating him, should you not admire his dedication to scholarship, his disdain for the blandishments of commerce? Of course you should. You may flunk, but Pippa passes.

2. You hate your courses. You say, for example, that you don't see the use of studying Macbeth when you are majoring in veterinary medicine. You're wrong, friends. Believe me, some day when you are running a busy kennel, you'll be mighty glad you learned "Out, damned Spot!"

3. You hate your room-mates. This is, unquestionably, a big problem—in fact, the second biggest problem on American campuses. (The first biggest, of course, is on which side of your mortar board do you dangle the tassel at Commencement?) But there is an answer to the room-mate problem: keep changing room-mates. The optimum interval, I have found, is every four hours.

4. You have no time to study. Friends, I'm glad to report there is a simple way to find extra time in your busy schedule. All you have to do is buy some Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades. Then you won't be wasting precious hours hacking away with inferior blades, mangling your face again and again in a tedious, feckless effort to winnow your whiskers. Personna shaves you quickly and slickly, easily and breezily, hacklessly, scrapelessly, tuglessly, nicklessly, scratchlessly, matchlessly. Furthermore, Personna Blades last and last. Moreover, they are available both in double-edge and Injector style. And, as if this weren't enough, Personna is now offering you a chance to grab a fistful of $100 bills. The Personna Super Stainless Steel Sweepstakes is off and running! You can win $10,000 and even more. Get over to your Personna dealer for details and an entry blank. Don't just stand there!

5. You have no place to study. This is a thorny one, I'll admit, what with the library so jammed and the dorms so noisy. But with a little ingenuity, you can still find a quiet, deserted spot—like the ticket office of the lacrosse team. Or a testimonial dinner for the dean. Or the nearest recruiting station.

You see, friends? When you've got a problem, don't lie down and quit. Attack! Remember: America did not become the world's greatest producer of milk solids and sorghum by running away from a fight!

INTRAMURAL ROUND-UP

Oaks, Hi-Lo's, Hardnoses Keep Rolling Along

by TOM CONUEL
Sports Staff

The powerful Hi-Los remained unbeaten by demolishing the Maples 35-0. Al Holcomb paced the Hi-Los' attack, throwing for five TD's. In the same Dormitory West League The Oaks also remained unbeaten as they squeaked by the Trojans 19-13, with Mike Martin catching three TD passes.

Elsewhere in Dorm action the Elms blanked the Hicks 31-0, while the Pines nudged the Hoovers 20-19. Lee Sarkinen's point after touchdown was the margin of victory for the Pines. The Chestnuts had no trouble with the Senators as they whipped them 19-6, and the Bulldozers buried the Monuments 27-6 with Kline throwing for four TD's and Ellard catching three of them.

Ernest Dineseo threw six TD passes in leading the Spartans to a 38-0 victory over the Hemlocks, while the Limes topped the Teerrors 20-18. The Apples took the measure of the Seagrams 18-12 behind the fine pass catching of Richard Hamlin, and the Redwoods felled the Academics 19-0.

Turning to the Independent League in what was a battle of the unbeatens, Hampshire nosed out the Lucky 13's 19-13. Courtesy stampeded the Renegades 58-0, while Land Arch nudged the Chem Club 12-6. Haskins fired five TD's in leading the Upper Imps over the Fisheries 30-0. In the most unusual game of the night Westview and the Bulls played to a scoreless tie with the victory awarded to Westview on first downs.

Intramural bowling rosters are due in the intramural office, room 216 Boyden, by October 24. Team and individual trophies will be awarded plus points toward President and Olympic Cups.

Sophs Spark Harriers

by TERRY CARPENTER
Sports Staff

Placing six runners in the top ten, the cross country team edgede past Connecticut and bombed Boston College last week, but lost a tri-meet to Providence and Central Connecticut on Saturday.

The score of the UConn-B.C. meet was 30-37-71. Sophomores Paul Hoss and Charley Long led the Redmen with third and fourth places. Improving junior Dick Stevens finished sixth, and soph Marc Gelinas had an off day but still managed to grab eighth. Co-captain Steve St. Clair copped ninth, Greg Bowman finished tenth and Terry Carpenter was thirteenth.

Billy Norris of B.C., who ran with some world-renowned track stars in Europe this summer, broke the course record in edging UConn's Young by five seconds.

The harriers spotted Providence four finishers before their first man, and they failed to contain Central Connecticut's front runners in a tri-meet at Providence on Saturday. The Friars showed why they are tops in New England as they placed 1-2-3-6-8 for a score of 21.

Paul Hoss was the first UMass runner, finishing seventh. But there were two Central runners in front of him, and two more crossed the line before Charley Long, the next UMass finisher. The Redmen then placed Steve St. Clair, Marc Gelinas, Terry Carpenter and Greg Bowman before the next Central runner, but it was too late. The Blue Devils beat them, 49-65.

UMass was hurt by the absence of Dick Stevens who injured his leg, and John Andersen, who ran despite a nagging cold. The next meet for UMass is Tuesday at Kingston, against Rhode Island.

Defensive Heroics Win Over Rhody, 14-9

Robinson, Smith, Keblin Interceptions Stave Off Aerial-Minded Rams

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Less than 30 seconds were showing on the clock as the pass headed for the end zone. It never reached its target, but instead flew into the arms of UMass linebacker Ernie Smith to preserve a 14-9 Redmen victory here Saturday.

The pass was thrown by Rhode Island quarterback Tom Fay from the 11-yard line, and if completed would have given the Rams an upset win. But Smith ran it out to the 47 to end the wild affair which gave the crippled Redmen their third win of the season, all in Yankee Conference competition.

Rhody, as expected, went to the air a great deal under the direction of Fay, a talented sophomore. Combined with this was a good running attack, particularly the draw play to the fullback, Brent Kaufman. The Rams were also aided by several costly penalties to the Redmen.

Fay's passes to split end Frank Geiselman and Kaufman's rushing gave URI a golden opportunity on the UMass 8 in the second quarter. But sophomore Randy Robinson made the first of his three interceptions on the five-yard line. Unable to move the ball, the Redmen punted on third down, and Nick Warnock's kick was short, giving the Rams the ball on the Redmen 20.

Fay moved them down to the four, but the UMass defense held and Rhody had to settle for a 20-yard field goal by soccer-style kicker Steve Collis.

A Greg Landry pass was intercepted by Dave O'Donnell on the UMass 27, whereupon Robinson immediately got it back by picking off a low throw by Fay. UMass then began to show some semblance of an offense, but the drive died at midfield and the half ended in Rhody's favor, 3-0.

In the third quarter, the long dormant Massachusetts offense came to life after Kaufman fumbled on the Rhode Island 47. Landry rolled around right end for 18 yards, and the ground attack moved the Redmen down to Rhody's two. Bob Detore then dove into the end zone for the touchdown. Bruce Cochrane's kick made it 7-3 with UMass in the lead at 7:12 of the third quarter.

Don Durkin (40) scores what was to be the winning touchdown at URI.

Once again Rhode Island moved well via the pass, only to be throttled by an interception by Mike Keblin on the UMass 16. Landry then put together the best sustained drive that the Redmen have shown this year. On a third-and-nine situation, Nick Warnock caught a pass to put UMass on the URI 49. Again on a third down play, Landry fired to Warnock who was wide open on the 32.

As in the last two cases, the UMass ground attack failed and another third down came up. Landry rifled a pass to Warnock who caught it between two defenders on the Rhody 16. With fourth down and three to go, Fusia scorned a field goal try, and Don Durkin carried it in from nine yards out with 11:18 left in the game. The conversion gave the Redmen a more comfortable 14-3 lead.

With a team like Rhode Island that throws from anywhere on the field, no lead is safe, and the Rams proceeded to prove it. Fullback Ron Madison moved all the way up to the UMass 46, followed by a reception by the fine end Geiselman.

Once again URI drove inside the UMass ten, and once again they found the going too rough. The defense held, and the Redmen took over. A run by Landry which would have given UMass a first down was nullified by a penalty, and Warnock was forced to punt out of his own end zone.

A big rush partially blocked the kick, giving Rhode Island the ball on the Redmen three. With 5:13 to go Kaufman went up the middle for the touchdown, and the score was 14-9. URI elected to go for two points, but Robinson again intercepted to foil the attempt.

On third and 18 from his own 25, Landry threw the bomb to Warnock who had his defender beaten, but it was a bit underthrown, Terry Hoag intercepting it and scooting to the UMass 36.

Redmen Grid Script-Writer Has Flare for Dramatics

by MIKE GOULD, Sports Editor

The game was seemingly in the bag. UMass' rock-ribbed defensive unit had just finished another can 'n' mouse game with the URI offensive, holding at their 10 yard line to preserve a 14-3 lead. The clock showed but six minutes to play in the game. Even hypertense manager Charlie Bradshaw was breathing easy.

The Redmen, however, refuse to go through a Saturday afternoon without a bit of last minute drama.

In the opener against Maine, Bruce Cochrane's last minute field goal spelled victory. With the clock expiring last week against fired-up UConn, a Landry to Ellis desperation heave set the stage for a dramatic last-minute win. Even in their lone losing effort, the Redmen thrilled their fans with a spirited late-game effort.

The Rhode Island script equalled all preceding games for late-game thrills.

Blocked Punt Nearly Disastrous

With 5:30 showing on the clock, Nick Warnock stepped into his own end zone to punt. URI made an all-out effort to block the kick and succeeded. The Rams took over on the UM three and scored on a third down trap play at 5:13. The two-point conversion try was spoiled by ever-present defensive star Randy Robinson, but respiration became a trifle more difficult for manager Bradshaw as the score stood at 14-9.

The Redmen got a big break on the ensuing series as a roughing the passer call, the only Ram violation of the contest, nullified a spectacular interception and gave the Redmen priceless possession. Warnock's ensuing punt put the Rams back on their 40 with two minutes remaining.

Drama Builds

So the Rams had a last ditch shot at the big upset. Sixty yards in two minutes was certainly not an insurmountable barrier to talented passer Tom Fay and his sure handed receivers.

Bruno Debiak momentarily dissipated the tension in the air as he blindsided Fay at 1:15 for a big loss, but two personal fouls against the Redmen got everyone's heart pounding again as the Rams reached the UM 10 with 30 long seconds left.

The UMass defense had been making the big play all day. Rugged Robinson had intercepted a pair of errant Fay passes deep in Redmen land and Mike Keblin had saved the day with a key grab at the UM 15.

With the Redmen just 10 yards from defeat, it was Ernie Smith's turn to shine. Linebacker Smitty got in the way of a Fay toss near the goal line and the Rams could only talk about the big one that got away.

Benchmen Excel

With continuous injuries befalling the team, Coach Fusia had had to go deep into his bench to find replacements. Vic found some gems at URI.

Paul Mlinar was unable to see action Saturday at his defensive end spot. Rhody saw too much of his replacement, N. Y. native Randy Robinson.

Kent Stevens showed very well of himself, recovering the fumble that set up UM's first touchdawn and making more than a few bone-jarring tackles.

Mike Keblin and Ed Sherman were more than adequate stand-ins for injured Bob Ellis and Doug Faucette.

Redmen fans were anxiously waiting for Eddie Toner to join immovable Dick Qualey at defensive tackle. This fearsome pair formed an awesome combination in the Redmen defensive line last season. Toner's ailment finally healed for Saturday's game, but Qualey suffered an arm injury on the first play of the contest. Toner's performance was encouraging to UM fans. Ed played in spots, both an offense and defense.

Stoical coach Fusia was very pleased with the victory, however slim the margin. When asked why his club can't win a game easily, Vic retorted, "How can we win big with all these injuries? We're playing with a football and a role of adhesive tape."

The successful Redmen coach was pleased by the second half performance of his offense. The 84 yard march for the second UM touchdown was their first long scoring drive of the season. The Landry to Warnock combination hit on three clutch third down passes during the march, one an extraordinary grab by the soph split end.

URI end Frank Geiselman showed why he is the top pass receiver in the Yankee Conference. Until he was injured late in the game, Geiselmen gave the fans an exhibition of pass-catching artistry.

Next week — Homecoming vs. BU, if Fusia can field 11 players.

Need for "Self-Mastery"

PACKARD CRITICIZES AMERICA'S CREDIT-HAPPY SOCIETY

by PAMELA METAXAS, Staff Reporter

"We are living in a hedonistic and narcissic society where pleasure is being sold as the principal good through mass advertising."

This was the theme of Vance Packard, speaking in the SU Ballroom Monday night. He stated that the concept of "living for the moment" that has resulted from the technology explosion in America.

He said that this explosion has created "waves that have an impact on our whole system," and has "been influential in promoting population growth."

There has also been an increased mobility of people through giant organizations in our society. He cited a statistic that the average American family of today lives under 14 roofs.

"We are seeing an enormous commercialization of our way of life," he remarked "that is affecting the values of young people who are the targets of the campaigns." He added that we are six percent of the world population (Americans) and are the targets of 60 percent of the world's advertising messages. The average American family is exposed to 600 TV commercials every week.

This mass advertising is built on several principles he added such as a "pitch for newness," "buying on impulse," and "big-line spending" during holidays. We are also living in a mood where we are absorbed with ourselves (narcissism) according to Packard. To verify this he noted women are spending $3 billion in the beauty parlor yearly while men are spending $400 billion for cosmetics.

He also remembered a slogan he had seen on a Chicago billboard, "Now you can borrow enough to get completely out of debt."

Packard emphasized that teenagers and their tastes are having a great impact on all this advertising. "We are seeing . . . a great fascination with the so-called youth market, he said. They are the ones that are forming patterns that the most of us quickly take up. The advertisers know this and capitalize on it."

He pointed out that all this is having a deep impact on our human values and spirit.

- Our "values are being undermined" by the irrationality in this advertising.
- We "are seeing a decline in the dignity of work." We are supposed to get satisfaction out of life in the role of consumer not as producer.
- There is also a "downgrading of values of job skills."
- This is "effecting our standards." We have thrown aside many older sex norms.
- There has been a "decline of personal resources and personal reliance."

"Our challenge is now to adjust to abundance and to leisure, since we are dealing with a problem involving the human spirit."

He believes that we should "develop personal standards on good and evil."

There is a need for "self-mastery" of our emotions, appetites, consciousness and destinies that "will permit us to be hard-nosed individuals," Packard concluded.

University Theatre Presents LILIOM

LILIOM, the University Theater's first 1966 season production, will open tonight at Bowker Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

The Hungarian play that served as the dramatic basis of Carousel, LILIOM is directed by Henry Mahnken. Starring in the title role is Peter Stelzer who has appeared in several outstanding roles in past theater productions.

The scene of the action of this imaginative piece of theater ranges from areas in and around a carnival to a police court. The theme is the story of the ill-starred love of a tough bouncer for a servant girl.

For Homecoming weekend enjoyment LILIOM will be presented for the next three nights. Tickets are on sale at the SU lobby.

Brooke to Appear At Homecoming Game

EDWARD W. BROOKE

Attorney General Edward W. Brooke, Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, will arrive at the Student Union at noon this Saturday. Following his motorcade to the University, an informal reception will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The Attorney General's Homecoming visit will be his second stop at UMass in recent months. At the invitation of the Class of '69, Mr. Brooke delivered a major policy address to an overflow Ballroom crowd in late spring.

On this trip the top G.O.P. standard-bearer has a dual interest: his office of Attorney General of the Commonweal*h has given him an active interest in the fortunes of the University of Massachusetts.

His position as a member of the Board of Trustees of Boston University thus results in a "bipartisan" interest in the outcome of Saturdays' football game. To avoid any "conflict of interest" charges, Brooke has arranged to sit on alternate sides of the stadium in the first and second halves.

Attorney General Brooke has been invited in his official capacities by UMass and B.U. As candidate for the Senate he has been invited by Collegians for Brooke, a 75-member R.S.O. group of UMass students working to further his candidacy.

Energy Unbounded

AA Expansion to Benefit Campus

by JIM THOMPSON
Staff Reporter

Who says UMies are apathetic? Not the group gathered around the bulletin board in the basement corridor of the SBA. They're out to prove the word is energetic, not apathetic!

A Recognized Student Organization for over a decade, the Accounting Association is planning to make a spot in the campus limelight this year by throwing open its major events to the entire student body. Before, the association was limited in its membership, but this year's open-minded members want everyone to come share the fun and the knowledge the club has to offer.

With over fifty dues-paying members, the club is launching the year's activities with a Student-Faculty Coffee Hour next Wednesday evening. Anyone can come and it's free. The conversation will be wide open. The association is sponsoring the coffee hour so that students in and outside of the SBA can have a chance to meet the men with an eye for figures.

Along with the Coffee Hours, the Accounting Association has an advisor to the Federal Reserve Board scheduled for November 8th. Lawrence H. Martin, distinguished president of the National Shawmut Bank of Boston, will speak on current economic topics as well as current finance. After his speech, Mr. Martin, also Vice-President of the American Bankers' Association, will be available for informal discussion. Besides all his other credits, Mr. Martin is a trustee for Northeastern University and is vitally concerned with modern education.

Also scheduled for this semester are talks with Bob Gailey, of the Placement office, career films and coffee hours with financial, economic and accounting personalities.

How did all this come about? Over fifty energetic students with good ideas. Who says U-Mies are apathetic?

The Southwest Complex

Dorm Government on the Move

by BEVERLY GIARD
Staff Reporter

Student residential units, acting under new rules, are moving rapidly to establish governments incorporating new judicial, cultural and regulatory functions.

Donald Teppler, assistant dean of men, said the Southwest Complex student governments are advancing toward completion. The Student Life Committee recommended last spring organization of residence hall judicial bodies be the prerogative of each residence unit. Close to 100 percent of all men's dormitories have set up provisional governments and charter committees and a few even have established permanent governments, Teppler reported.

The problem of the older houses with established governments is more a question of modifying the existing constitutions rather than setting new rules. The past powers of the dormitories were of a more social and cultural nature while the new functions will be judicial and regulatory.

A more abrupt change is taking place within the women's residential areas. The counselors who in the past formulated and enforced the rules will serve only as advisors to the student bodies and committees within the dorm. Miss Sergeant, assistant dean of women recommends that the counselors serve as catalysts and advisers to provide perspective and ideas for the program.

Although the Women's Affairs Committee offered advice as to standards, and the Senate Constitutional Committee prepared an outline to be available to those who wished to have a framework to go by, the drafting of a constitution and establishment of a government was left entirely in the student's hands.

Teppler believes the students have a duty as well as a right to take action in their own affairs. Administrators are not concerned with the problem of whether the students should have power in judicial action, he said. The question is rather which group of students should rule in specific instances. The Student Life Committee met Oct. 11 to decide on the jurisdiction and legal processes of the various judicial bodies. Until the SLC issues a definite statement the various judiciary bodies are in a "state of limbo," Teppler said.

Each residence hall judicial body must comply with the following Student Government Association constitutional provisions:

"A. Judiciary bodies. . .may issue and enforce summonses for any case. When used in disciplinary cases, such summonses must include:

1. The rule or regulation allegedly violated.
2. The specifics of the alleged violation of #1.
3. The time and place of the alleged violation.
4. The person(s) reporting the alleged violation.

"B. In all disciplinary cases, undertaken by judiciary bodies . . .all evidence submitted and all testimony received must be made openly and in public, if the defendant wishes. A statement to this effect must be made at the beginning of the judiciary proceedings to the defendant. All defendants under the judiciary proceedings must be informed of this right before the proceeding in writing."

According to deans Teppler and Sergeant, in about two weeks permanent judiciary bodies should be in order and within a month some sort of area judiciary should be composed to handle cases of misconduct which involve incidents other than those within house jurisdiction.

The role of the established Men's Judiciary must be considered, also, Teppler added, indicating the Women's Judiciary's role also will be assessed.

Meantime some dorms are taking time for the students to get acquainted and discuss issues, while others, such as Brooks and Van Meter North, have already ratified their charters and have decided on procedures. Brooks' decision was to base its judiciary on a system much like the U.S. jury system, choosing new members of the jury for each session.

Another innovation is seen in Emerson's decision to have faculty fellows as advisers to standing committees.

In an even more fresh approach, plans are being made to launch a cultural enrichment program established for and by the students in each house. Funds for the cultural perspective program will be obtained from vending machine income. This phase of the program will be discussed at an interdormitory meeting Tuesday.

The deadline for establishing student governments within the residential areas has been set for Nov. 1, and most dormitories have taken steps towards reaching this goal.

"Man of Words" Added To UMass English Department

by NOEL GORMAN

The English Department's Dr. Barney Emmart, when he is not teaching, is in room 389, Bartlett Hall, in a cubicle measuring less than eight feet square. One wall is taken up with a picture window view of the Connecticut Valley, the others are barren. Dr. Emmart, who received his doctorate at the University of London, is just getting settled.

Dr. Emmart this summer arrived from Dublin, Ireland, where he was employed by the Radio, Telefis Eireann, which is Ireland's radio and television facilities. He worked as an adviser for a science program. His mannerisms make it apparent he has been away from the U.S. for a long time.

He is a man about 40, who is concerned with the cultivation of a workable and efficient student-teacher relationship. His classes are very informal and he is quite desirous of having as much of his class time resolve into discussion of pertinent topics as possible.

Intense and restless, Dr. Emmart is constantly searching for questions and answers in his specialty, linguistic analysis.

Dr. Emmart teaches a language and communication course. He believes this course contains such a vast quantity of information that he should teach it over a full year instead of a semester. A single semester could be geared to journalism students but a full year may be needed for students who desire a course in linguistics. Dr. Emmart explained. He finds that the journalism student is helped by a different perspective, essentially a basic look at the communications works.

Dr. Emmart's father is the editor of the Baltimore Sun. Talking about how much journalism can be taught, he referred to something his father once said: "Give me a man who can write and I can teach him anything." He explained that any intelligent man can learn the workings and tricks of a newspaper in a matter of months, but he must be a good writer to make the grade as a journalist.

Amid the chaos of papers and books in Room 389 there dwells a progressive young intellect, a slender, high strung man who deals in the vagueness of theory and in examining plain talk, which is not so plain when he finishes dissecting it.

TONIGHT

The Senior Class in conjunction with Beau-Duane Fashion Enterprises is presenting Fashion Caravan, the Columbia, Princeton, Harvard, Yale reaction to feminine fashion, tonight at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom.

A reception will follow in the Colonial Lounge. Fashion Caravan is open to the public without charge.

The show offers a new approach to fashion promotion; the commentary will be supplied by John Mullin, Senior Class Pres., and Bill Sydnor, of Princeton. The background music will be provided by an Amherst rock and roll band.

Campus models have been selected: Leslie Sanderson, Judy Urban, Noreen Bresnahan, Peg Olson, Donna Newman, Linda Worsman, Sandra Dakers, Barb Sanford, Linda Mcintyre, Kathy Koumjian, Reeva Goodman, Elaine Murphy and Margo Christensen.

Saturday Concert Tops

Hope no one is going to miss the great concert scheduled for Saturday night of Homecoming Weekend!

At the unusual hour of 11 p.m., the Cage will suddenly be transformed for Dionne Warwick, the Shirrelles, and Jackie Vernon.

Imagine, a nightclub at U-Mass! Dionne Warwick will be singing down a carpeted runway that will extend into the audience. A gold backdrop curtain and special effect lighting will help to create the aura of a night on the town.

Perhaps you aren't convinced that the talent we are presenting is among the best. Here goes...

Top billing for the event is DIONNE WARWICK, a singer unknown to the public a little over two years ago. Then came her recording of "DON'T MAKE ME OVER" on the Scepter label, and now Dionne Warwick is internationally recognized as a unique and gifted artist.

In 1963, Dionne received fantastic critical acclaim at Olympia Theater in Paris. We are part of the American audience which screamed for "YOU'LL NEVER GET TO HEAVEN" and "ANYONE WHO HAD A HEART." Her "WALK ON BY" became a top five record here in the United States and a top ten in Great Britain with hits by the Beatles, the Searchers, etc. In August 1964, Dionne made a trip which included a return to the Parisien Olympia Theater, as co-star of the show, and also a guest star appearance on the world famous Sunday at the Palladium television show in London. Last April, she concluded a two week engagement at the posh Savoy Hotel in London and created such a sensation that she will be returning there on a regular basis.

Saturday night can't help but be sensational! The Shirrelles (WILL YOU STILL LOVE ME TOMORROW), Jackie Vernon — and Dionne Warwick. A great combination for a fantastic concert at 11 p.m. Saturday. Be there!

Yelling Works Best

Theater Director Describes His Style

by CAROL SCHULTZ

Sometimes it is necessary to threaten, coax, cajole people in order to get them to do things correctly.

During his four years at the University Harry Mahnken director of Liliom, has found that yelling a lot during rehearsals works best for him when he is directing.

He describes his style in one word, "Noisey."

'I have a reputation for rasping at people," he says. "There is a great deal of pressure and informality in the theater. Actors who work with me get so they shout back after a while."

Mahnken seems to have an endless supply of energy as he roams up and down the aisles of Bowker Auditorium during rehearsals. He shouts orders to the actors, managers, and designers as he moves.

"Take that scene over again ... Where are you going? Get on the stage quicker ... Tell the person making that noise backstage to be quiet or get out." He says with one breath as he draws an imaginary eclipse in the air with his left hand.

Mahnken sees the directors as the designer of the whole production. He feels it is his job to pull the actors and the script together. He does not consider himself a teacher of actors when he directs.

"I am not interested in creating a lot of immitators of me on the stage," he says.

Hired by the speech department mainly because he was a professional director, Mahnken has directed approximately three plays a year at UMass.

Included in his Theatre Guild productions are Born Yesterday, A View from the Bridge, Irma La Douce, Julius Caesar, All the King's Men, Ghosts, and Murder in the Cathedral. Liliom will be added this week.

About a week before each production, he gives the cast a final intimation of what he expects from them opening night. He includes a colorful warning not to mix alcohol and adrenlin during the performance.

"If anyone shows up drunk," he says, "I'll personally close the show and tell the audience who is responsible.

So far, his casts have taken this threat seriously.

Mahnken's worries as a director are not over opening night, however. During the four performances of Liliom this week, for example, he plans to smoke a great deal, watch each show, observe audience response, and make notes for changes in succeeding performances.

He may not be noticed by the audience opening night, but his function in the presentation of the play is more important than anyone appearing on the stage.

Volpe Hits Back At Ed Charges

Gov. Volpe, campaigning in Hampshire County last week, rebutted charges by his Democratic opponent, Edward J. McCormack, that his administration has not aided higher education in the state.

"The $10.5 million construction program I approved for the University of Massachusetts in Amherst muffles my opponent's claim that we have done nothing for education," Volpe said.

"We also approved the sum of $230,000 for the purchase of books for the proposed (UMass) medical school library."

Volpe said that since he took office in January, 1965, there has been a 50 per cent increase in enrollment at state education institutions and Legislative approval of a $70 million education construction program.

COMMONS WORKERS

The Food Service Department is in desperate need of more students who can work part time in the four dining commons. The beginning hourly rate is $1.25 and all interested students should contact Mr. John Seegrist, Placement Office, Machmer Hall. The particular times needed are breakfast, dinner and all weekend meals.

Students Urged To Apply For Work-Study Program

The work-study program is becoming big business at the University.

Although there are more than 200 students employed under the program, Director John Siegrist is encouraging all qualified students to apply.

Since its beginnings in 1964 with the Economic Opportunity Act, this federally supported program has been greatly expanded. Under the Higher Education Act of 1965, the work-study program includes all financially needy students who qualify. The work-study program is now in effect at many universities and colleges in the U. S. The individual schools are given the freedom to set the criteria and limits of financial aid under federal guidelines.

Students in the program may work up to 15 hours a week while school is in session and up to 40 hours weekly while not in session. This helps provide money for the necessary expenses of higher education. Wages, at $1.25-$2.50 are comparable to those paid to University employed part-time workers doing the same jobs. The federal government provides 90% reimbursement and the University 10%.

According to Siegrist, a member of the Placement and Financial Aid office of the University, there are many qualified students who have not yet applied for assistance. He foresees a continuing success for the program because of such attractive benefits as being able to work in one's field of interest.

However, he said, departmental jobs such as teacher's aides are generally filled first in the work-study office's attempt to "fit the job to the student." Also available are such jobs as night attendants in dormitories, working for non-profit oraginzations, or working in dining commons.

Information about the work-study program and applications are available at the Placement and Financial Aid Office in Machmer Hall.

Visitors View Agricultural Fair

by BOB GORMAN
Staff Reporter

The annual Agricultural Science Fair was held this weekend in back of the Student Union. Theme of the fair was "Careers in Agriculture."

Alpha Zeta, the agricultural honor fraternity, organized the fair under Walter Wintturi '67.

Arboriculture and Park Management exhibit winner of the first prize, consisted of two slide shows and a model on careers in arboricultural technology. Also, the models of Park Management on the national, state, municipal, and private levels was very interesting.

The Animal Science Club's second prize winner, was the main attraction. It consisted of four dairy cows, two beef cattle, two lambs, one pig, four chickens and chicks in an incubator. Also one cow had an opening in its stomach which could be looked into.

The Fernald Club third prize winner was an exhibit on entomology. Insect control, taxonomy and honey bees formed the center of this display.

Besides selling fresh apples and cider, the Horticultural Society's exhibit explained the fields of construction, extension, research, and control in Plant and Soil Science.

The Floriculture Club had colorful flower and fruit arrangements aside from making and selling bouquets.

Turf Management Club had a display to warm the hearts of the home owner. A complete display of local weeds, where they grow, and how they are controlled was given. Another exhibit consisted of various grasses, its uses, and best habitate.

The graduates exhibits consisted of a model fertilizer plant, a computer used for agricultural purposes and a complete slide show on watershed management.

The Wood Technology and Science exhibit centered on new uses of wood and its by-products.

The Forestry Club was unable to hold the Loggers Jamboree. At the last minute the competing colleges informed the Club of an inability to attend. However, the Jamboree may be held in the spring.

Harrumph

By DEE SMITH, Day Editor

Vote for Mr. Polyman, he just kissed your baby.

He just kissed my baby.

Yes Ma'am, he did, right there, look closely and you'll see the spot.

Peering closely, yes I can all right, right there, no doubt, that's it, the spot.

Hooray for Mr. Polyman, as the baby begins to howl.

We turn our head and notice a clump, a group of people clustered around, and one man in the middle. He's holding his hand, while the people peer, as if it hurts or threatens to float away. What happened, I asked, Did someone step on it? He shook my hand, was all he said, and held it up for me to view. From where I was it looked just like a hand but then I read with glasses and the sun was in my eyes. At any rate, the time had come for more important things as the great one cleared his throat.

Harrum h, he said, and the crowd roared. I will not waste your time.

The rest of his words were hard to hear because of the crowd and the baby's howl and the local band which lent a certain dignity to the occasion. But from what I could hear, I gathered the man stood staunchly for liberty. Not merely that but for enfranchisement and manumission as well.

Things like men and women, America, and God, were mentioned too, but as to how he stood on those I couldn't say for sure, because as I've said, of the noise, and some leaflets that caught my eye.

These were scattered around on the lawn and one was beneath my foot. Picking it up and shaking it off I glanced at what it said:

Freedom, Frail Friend just that, and it bothered me for some reason. So I shook my head to clear the cloud and looked at what was near. The crowd, the band, and the man still there on the platform. He said something just then and the crowd burst into a frenzy, waving their arms and jumping about, like the flag, slapping behind the speaker.

Then it was quiet and the man stepped down waving his way through the crowd. Voices tagged behind as he left and one above the rest.

Vote for Mr. Polyman, he just kissed your baby.

The Democratic Party rally last Saturday was an insult to the intelligence of a college audience. The candidates did not discuss their qualifications or what they planned to do if elected. The main theme of every speech was that All the problems of the State and the Nation could be solved easily if only there were no Republicans!

Not long ago demagogues blamed all problems on the Jews.

Neither party has a monopoly on good or bad ideas. Both parties have their great men and their incompetents. Both parties must share the blame for the present condition of Massachusetts government. Both should work responsibly towards cleaning up the mess that they both made.

A strong two-party system is distinctly superior to a one-party state. Nobody is better than a Democrat at showing the Republicans where they are wrong—and vice versa. When one party remains in office for too long, they get stale and complacent.

The answers to the problems of Massachusetts and the nation do not lie in oversimplifications. They do not lie in eliminating the Republicans or eliminating the Democrats. Nor do they lie in the permanent ascendancy of one party over the other. Our problems can be solved only by electing honest and competent men — regardless of party.

Fraternities in Ferment

To the Editor:

In every area of Greek life—academics, social, cultural—fraternity men have become aware that what was suitable or at least satisfactory in the past will no longer meet the demands they expect in the future.

In recognition of this awareness, the Inter-Fraternity Council recently held a Workshop to decide upon a way of meeting the finer demands of the higher caliber student in a surging university. The Workshop focused upon a re-evaluation of the role of the fraternity at the University of Massachusetts. The leaders at the Workshop stated that, as an integral part of a growing institution, fraternities must redefine their goals and at the same time quicken the pace of the academic, social, and cultural aspects of fraternity life in the achievement of those goals.

By redefining and readjusting fraternity objectives, a two-fold purpose would be served: Fraternity men would have a greater opportunity to fulfill the ideals they profess and, concommittantly, realign themselves to the more purposeful functions of offering individuality amidst the masses and, of realizing the goals of the University in a more complementary manner.

As a result of this new awareness, fraternities have taken a first step in the sphere most fundamental to Greek life—academics.

The grade-point average to rush, pledge, and be initiated has been raised to 2.0. It was felt that by raising the grade-point requirement, the Fraternity System would not only raise its over-all cumulative average by attracting the better student and avoiding the one who will pull the average and eventually drop out, but it will also draw the more purposeful and responsible personality to fraternity life.

Fraternities have taken a further step. They have instigated the creation of the new position of Director of Fraternities. The Director of Fraternities, Mr. George Rogers, will serve a most essential function as an official, independent liaison between the Fraternity System and the administration of the University, thereby strengthening the ties between fraternities and administration and making the way possible for clearer, more direct contact in the hope of a better understanding between the two.

Two major steps have been taken; more are planned. It is the hope of the entire Greek System that students, faculty, and administration alike become aware of the new attitude in fraternities—that the codes framed on the wall are ready to be taken down and lived.

Inter-Fraternity Council

Film Critic Insectiverous

To the Editor:

Bob Wilfond is a lousy film critic, even for an amateur. After making a sweeping generalization like that, let me point out some specifics that reinforce my generalization (which is something Mr. Wilfong did not bother to do).

First and most glaring of the errors in his review of Jules and Jim, it was Francois Truffaut, not Truffant, who directed and co-authored the film.

Next we have his contention that the film is "largely built around Jeanne Moreau's remarkably sensual mouth", but not once does he cite even one shot that was built around Moreau's mouth.

Then he says "it might easily be dismissed as...not in the same class with ...Shoot the Piano Player." Again, this is rubbish. Truffaut also did the latter film, which is very similar to Jules and Jim in style and content. A specific example: what Wilfong calls Truffaut's "easy humor" is again evident in Piano Player when the hood says "may my mother drop dead if I am not telling the truth" and the shot is followed by one of the old ladies collapsing.

This kind of sloppy mistake is found of ten throughout the review. Wilfong claims that the film is "not particularly difficult or challenging", but he compietely overlooks the fact that Catherine drives her car off the bridge for a variety of reasons, none of them simple, and this carries considerable food for thought in my opinion.

I would like to know what he means by saying that the film is "an experience in itself". Isn't any film "an experience in itself"? If so, why bore us with something we already take for granted?

As readers we have a right to say "show me", but Wilfong proposes instead to make meaningless generalizations, of which his editors seem to approve. In any review what is needed are specifics, which amazingly were lacking from this review of a picture that abounded with beautiful images.

George Sibley

Adrenal Cerebration

To the Editor:

After reading Mr. O'Connell's letter in the Oct. 14 issue of the Collegian, I am convinced that either he did not attend Mr. Morse's D.V.P. lecture, or did not pay attention to anything he said. To suggest that Sen. Morse "consistently disagrees on every major issue just for the sake of disagreeing" is absurd. It implies first, that he disagrees on every major issue; this is patently false, indicating that Mr. O'Connell either is unaware of the facts, or not sufficiently interested in them to try to seek them out.

Secondly, to suggest that Sen. Morse disagrees with the administration for the sake of disagreeing is to suggest that he is mentally incompetant; I don't think many people would agree, although there are some who would like you to believe that.

In short, I am suggesting that Mr. O'Connell could use some remedial homework, i.e., spend time in the library reading The Congressional Record, and inform himself of the facts. After all, Sen. Morse did suggest that we substitute cerebral impulses (Thinking) for adrenelin secretions (like Mr. O'Connell's letter).

INSIDE YOUR STUDENT SENATE

Taxation Without Representation?

by BURT FREEDMAN
Senate Treasurer

One of the problems of the delegates to last year's Student Government Conference was the lack of fiscal autonomy of their respective student governments. "We have little to say about how our money is spent," was the sentiment most often expressed. We of the UM student government were incredulous.

What power could a student government have if it did not fulfill one of the primary functions of all legislative bodies — the power of the purse? Why should there be a student government at all, if it cannot meet the needs of its individual members?

Now, you might ask, "Why should I be concerned with all this?" (I certainly have better things to do.)

The first and most obvious answer is that you are forced to pay (since it appears on your bill) $10.50 a semester to the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF).

More important, however, is the fact that paying the fee, and being part of the Student Government Association, your life as a UM student is affected in myriad, subtle ways.

Whether you read two or four Collegian's a week, hear your favorite record on WMUA, see your picture in Index, take a free trip to Belchertown to work with retarded children, answer one more interdorm house phone put in your dorm (the Senate foots the bill), or attend four concerts during Winter Carni', instead of one (class funds must go through the Senate), are all ramifications of paying your tax.

It goes without saying, that if the government is to serve your needs, you must have access to its financial administration. The first avenue is that of your elected Senator.

Almost every Wednesday night, your Senator must decide who gets the money, how much, and why.

Questions of whether we should send the Science Fiction Club to Cleveland or appropriate money for coffee hours to the University Reform Committee must reside somewhere in a Senator's hierarchy of values.

As a constituent you can influence these value judgments.

Second is the organization itself. As a Heymaker you may want more money in your record category or perhaps you'd like to provide honoraria funds for a speaker for the Accounting Association.

Finally, you may wish to serve as a non-senate member on one of the financial committees — Budgets, to determine the future needs of Senate-funded organizations; Finances, which disperses funds on a weekly, ad hoc basis; or Ways and Means, to regulate and investigate the financial operation of Senate-funded groups, and to make financial policy.

If you have ever thought about the justifications for the existence of student government (in particular in regard to spending money), come down to the Senate Office and pick up a Budget Act, go down to WMUA and look at all the capital equipment that you own (the Flying Club even owns a plane), sit on a committee and make those difficult decisions of Who, How Much, and Why.

If there were ever a government more accessible to your demands, it is this one. And if you don't believe it, call Frank Verock of Budgets (369-4309, Conway), Jim Collins of Finance (6-8868, T-5), Pete Ward of Budgets and Public Relations (6-6079, Baker), or Burt Freedman of Ways and Means and Senate Treas. (6-6042, Baker).

Why don't you dump the tea in the harbor and shout: "No taxation without representation."

It's your tea.

The Senate Committee System

The Student Senate consists of ten standing committees made up of senators and interested students.

The Finance Committee handles requests of appropriations from campus organizations.

The Budgets Committee approves the budgets for all Senate funded organizations that spend money on a year to year basis.

All charters of campus clubs and organizations are reviewed by the senate Activities Committee and recommendations are made as to whether the charters shall be approved.

The Academic Affairs Committee reviews policy and examines problems or questions in academic matters.

The Student Government Affairs Committee is responsible for the conduct of all Student Government Association elections, except Judiciary elections, and all revisions to the Constitution and By-Laws.

Publicity for the Student Government Association is promoted by the Public Relations Committee. It advises the Senate on all matters of University public relations and executes programs to extend the name of the University. It also orients new Senators to parliamentary procedure and the functions of the standing committees.

The Services Committee deals with student aids, food and health conditions, and commercial operations involving students.

The Men's and Women's Affairs Committees each review rules affecting students and proposes necessary changes to their respective deans. Each committee also conducts the elections of their judiciary boards.

The Ways and Means Committee examines the manner in which R. S. O. organizations discharge their financial responsibilities with regard to S. A. T. funds appropriated or otherwise made available to them by the Student Senate.

HOMECOMING

SATURDAY

SHIRELLES

It's supercaliphragilisticexpealidocious! It's Homecoming '66, the biggest and best weekend yet. Planned to please and appease students guests and alumnae Homecoming '66 will feature fantastic talent, terrific events and a winning football game. Unlike prevous Homecoming weekends October 21, 22, and 23 will be jampacked full of fun for all.

Beginning Friday night with the annual float parade and rally the fun will move inside to hear the new and incandescent Blues Project an exciting folk-rolk group. Next on the agenda will be the famous and infamous Doug Clark and the Hot Nuts rounding out an evening of fun and music.

Saturday will host the tailgate picnic for alumnae and the exciting football game between the Redmen and Boston University. Early Saturday evening a free dance will be held in the Union Ballroom featuring Barry and the Remains.

Later Saturday evening a unique nightclub show will be featured in the Curry Hicks Cage. Dionne Warwick, The Shirelles and comedian Jackie Vernon will combine their talents to present what most definitely be one of the highlights of the weekend.

But, its not over yet!

For a change of pace and a great way to end a great weekend Homecoming '66 will present Arthur Fiedler and The Boston Pops Orchestra.

You won't want to miss one minute of this Homecoming '66 weekend. Be sure to watch for more Homecoming news and be sure to be in line when the tickets go on sale.

SUMMER'S STUDY TRAVEL VACATION

A summer of study abroad awaits some UMass students and if all are as satisfied with their stay as 78 UM students were this summer, the entire student body may be applying another year.

American students were given the opportunity to study for credit at Oxford, England, last summer. Of the 125 who attended the 1966 Seminar at Oxford, 63 percent were from UMass. The others came from 31 other campuses.

The uniqueness of the program was that American courses were taught by British instructors or "dons," specialists in areas of English literature.

Dr. Ernest Hofer of the UMass English Department organized and directed the academic and social aspects for the American group while they stayed at St. Hilda's College in Oxford. Guest lecturers once a week and informal coffee hours every day quickly broke the barrier between faculty and students. According to Dr. Hofer, this pleasant and informal atmosphere was greatly appreciated by both the students and the dons.

Dr. Hofer told the Collegian he is very pleased that the entire British faculty wishes to take part again this summer. for they found the American student very "stimulating, friendly, enthusiastic, and capable."

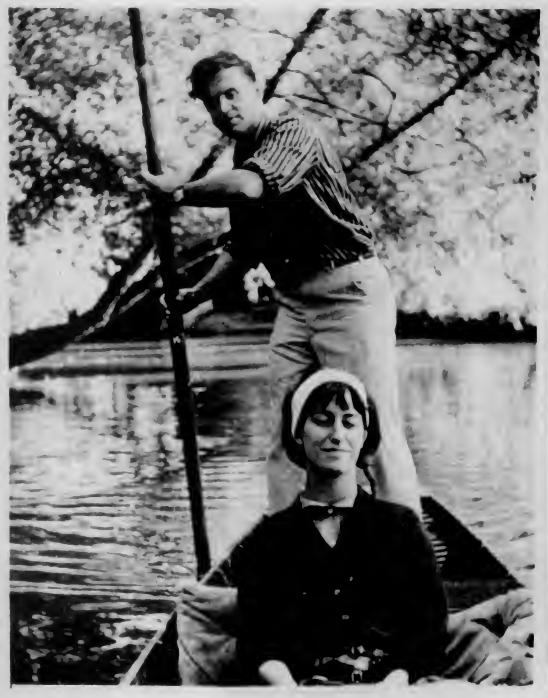
As for the academic side of Oxford, students felt the courses were interesting, in that they were taught from "the very British" point of view; a grad student commented that the Modern British and American Drama course was "quite British oriented." British critics were emphasized over American ones. However, all courses were conducted as discussions, and the Americans' opinions were welcomed and respected. In addition, students were allowed full access to research facilities of the famed Bodleian Library.

British dons with their vast knowledge and supreme command of the English language amazed the American students. Also, students commented that the professors "presupposed a fantastic amount of knowledge on our part" and "expected so much more." One student complained that a 4,000-word paper was assigned only two weeks before it was due. Some instructors gave heavy reading assignments; others relented if the students cried, "Too much work." From the American point of view, the six week summer session at Oxford was "more intense" than a UMass session.

When not studying, the Americans were busy "punting" down one of the canals that laces Oxford, throwing darts in the local pub, playing cricket or bicycling over the countryside. Saturdays were scheduled with "You Move" tours as busses transported the group to country houses, castles, cathedrals and such English high spots as Stonehenge and Stratford.

Some students attended the Bach and Handel Music Festival, a Gilbert & Sullivan production and London ballet. Others thumbed to Ireland, Scotland and even Paris. Most of them saw "London by Night" and Ellie Mahar, a UMass English grad student, went to Liverpool where she caught a glimpse of Peter Best, ex-drummer of the Beatles.

When asked about the British people and their attitudes toward the Americans, the students responded that they were "genuinely friendly and extremely helpful." There was little difficulty in communication except for an occasional "very thick accent which I couldn't believe was the English language being spoken," said Lynne Darrah, a UMass nursing major. A point of interest to the Americans was that the English failed to introduce themselves; they talked for hours and never mentioned their name.



One student considered the British "morose drivers;" another commented with a sly smile how "fashionable" the British girls were in their miniskirts. Food was excellent "except for kidney pie;" the "desserts were great." The English showed surprise at the American students' love for milk.

There were but few criticisms of the new program at Oxford; most of the students agreed it was "the most valuable experience" of their lives. Objections included too much time spent on tours and not enough time for individual traveling and the 12 o'clock curfew every night. However, the group appreciated the British informality and hospitality. Most appreciated of all the students emphasized were the efforts and accomplishments of Dr. Hofer in making possible the Oxford summer program.

Anyone interested in going to the 1967 Oxford Summer Seminar must apply before Nov. 15, and obtain an application blank from Dr. Hofer, Bartlett Hall.

Newman Center Holds Discussions

Every Thursday in the Newman center a discussion will be held in the lounge at 8 p.m. Father Quigley and guest speakers will lead the discussion on "The Art of Being Human."

This is aimed at trying to prepare men and women for the everyday world. "What every man and woman needs to know about anatomy." is the problem. Father Quigley and the guest speakers will be concerned with.

The main purpose of this is not to duplicate what has already been said but to teach the basic concepts of human anatomy. The discussion is informal and everyone is welcome.

Recruiters Needed for Blood Drive

A recruiters' meeting will be held Thursday, Oct. 20, at 11 a.m. in the Student Union Senate Chambers to organize and discuss plans for this years University Blood Drive. The Campus Religious Council, as in past years, is co-ordinating the program.

Gamma Sigma Sigma, Alpha Phi Omega and the campus religious organizations will aid in the recruiting phase of the project.

Volunteers are needed to man the registration table in the Student Union and to recruit blood donors from the individual dormitories for the week of Oct. 24. All those interested are asked to attend Thursday's meeting.

The actual donating of blood will take place Nov. 15-17. Past blood drives have been quite successful and it is hoped that campus support for this worthy activity will continue.

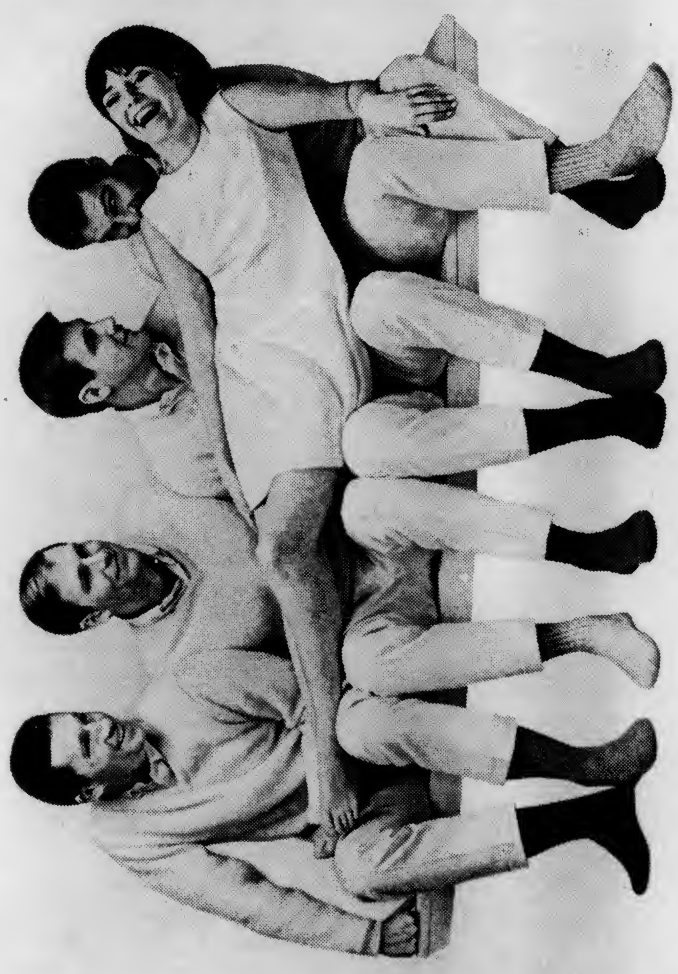
'CHUTING IN THE WINTERTIME

How does it feel to make a parachute descent in the dead of winter? This and many other questions related to winter sport parachute jumping will be discussed Thursday night, Oct. 20.



On hand will be two jumpmasters from the Pioneer Valley Parachute Center who will lead the discussion and show a training film related to beginning jumpers. Both Jesse James and Ken Caravelle are experienced instructors with several hundred jumps to their credit.

Mr. Caravelle, who has trained many UMass student parachutists at the Pioneer Center, will talk on problems related to Club operations at the Center.

Also under discussion will be Club proposals for the Inter-Collegiate Competition to be held at Orange Parachute Center next May.

The Club welcomes any interested students to stop by. Coffee and doughnuts will be served.

Debate Club Hopes For Winning Season

This weekend the UMass Debate team will start the new season with hopes of bettering the winning records posted last year.

On Thursday, Oct. 20, a team of two varsity debaters, Debbie "George" Feiker and Neal Whitman, plus a number of observers will travel to Waltham for the Brandeis Invitational Debate Tournament.

The Brandeis tournament has always been one of the most highly competitive tournaments on the East Coast and our debaters will certainly come across some rough competition.

This years national collegiate topic is Resolved: The United States Should Substantially Reduce Its Foreign Policy Commitments. The possible affirmative cases which can be derived from the proposition are innumerable since the debaters can choose to revolve a case around any of the many military, economic, and political commitments that have been made to any nation or group of nations.

The Debate Team is looking forward to a very profitable season and feels fortunate to have an excellent new coaching staff with Dr. Ronald Matlon from Purdue University and Miss Sandy Purnell from Wayne State.

DEADLINE!

The deadline for all news copy and club notices is 1:00 p.m. on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. No copy will accepted after that time.

Y'ng Independents To Hold Talks

Young Independents, a member chapter of Students for a Democratic Society, is starting off this season with a coffee hour at 3:30 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge.

The hour will revolve about small, informal discussions on the role of the student in the University, the draft, and Whatkind-of-an-organization-is-YI?

New members are invited—all interested students and faculty are welcome.

"Music That Will Last"

Orch. Director Discusses New Sound

by RICHARD COOPER

"Out of nonsense sometimes comes good music that will last." Is this true of rock and roll? Prof. Ronald Steele, director of the University Symphony Orchestra thinks almost any kind of music can be enjoyed.

His opinion of rock is simply that it is "not good jazz" and it shows no inventiveness. Occasionally, however, and possibly accidentally, a good sound does appear on the scene. Folk rock, a newer breed of contemporary music, is more to Prof. Steele's liking than the older, three-chord progression style of standard rock and roll.

Though he does not consider it to be music, which he defines loosely as any series of notes, Prof. Steele finds avant-garde "music" curious and interesting, "fun but no craft". The idea behind this type of performance is not to please the ear but to amuse the mind.

One such performance the professor attended consisted of an "artist" having his head shaved on stage, the point being to make the audience realize how long it would be before this particular "piece" could be played again. He had to wait for his hair to grow back!

Another example is that of a young lady playing a flute while clad in a cellophane dress (that's what he said!) with a grand finale of jumping into a tub full of water.

Prof. Steele has also participated in experiments with "chance music". This is music composed extemporaneously by a group of musicians, and the particular instance in which Prof. Steele was involved employed music cards.

This is a special deck of cards, dealt randomly, with written instructions on each card, such as "Play an ascending scale from D to D, slowly." or "Trill on A#." Each musician may begin playing whenever he thinks he has something that will fit with the rest of the composition, or he may skip a card and go on to the next.

Instantaneous composition such as this can produce "some beautiful music", says Prof. Steele, and although it is in the spirit of fun it is also a real trial of musicianship.

You don't have to be a genius to work at G.E.

Near genius is okay.

A near genius with drive, stamina and imagination, that is.

And it doesn't really matter what subject you're a near genius in. General Electric is looking for top scientists — and for top graduates in economics, business, law, accounting and the liberal arts.

Nobody who joins G.E. is going to feel cramped. This is a worldwide company, and it makes over 200,000 different products. So there's plenty of room to feel your strength — and in some of today's most challenging fields: transit design, urban lighting, jet propulsion, computers, electronics, aerospace, you name it.

Challenges like these have raised a new generation of idea men at G.E. If you're good enough to join them, you'll find responsibilities come to you early. Your talents are recognized, your work is rewarded — in money and in opportunity.

This time next year, you could be on your way. Talk to the man from G.E. next time he visits your campus. And don't be surprised if he's young, too. At General Electric, the young men are important men.

Lambda Chi, KS, TEP Win; Flaming A's Handed Loss

by ROGER KIPP
Sports Staff

Lambda Chi and Kappa Sig remained unbeaten in fraternity grid play, LCA clobbering AEP, 31-6, and KS getting by Alpha Sig, 18-12.

Dave Woodcock did everything for LCA, throwing for a TD, running for one, and catching a pass for another. Other stars for LCA were QB Donahue who threw for 3 TD's, and rugged end Jeff Larson, who caught two of those TD passes.

Kappa Sig, meanwhile, found themselves behind at the half, 12-6, to ASP, thanks to Bill Cannata who had run for a touchdown and passed for the other. In the second half, however, Kappa Sig QB Ed Godek hit Paul Sculley with two passes good for touchdowns to pull it out.

Elsewhere in the Fraternity division, Steve Hammond's clutch passing put ATG over PSD, 14-6, and PMD bested TKE, 27-12.

TEP Triumphs

In the Fraternity "A" league, TEP and QB Bob Epstein did it again, beating Beta Kappa Phi, 19-15, with two second half TD's. The win runs their record to 4-0. Epstein hit on 15 of 22 passes.

QTV used a good defense and the arm of Norm Sherman to lick Zeta Nu, 15-0, and SPE was declared the winner over Theta Chi, 1-0, by forfeit, Theta Chi having used an ineligible player.

Turning to the Dorms, the Grayson Flaming A's were edged by the Birches, 19-14, on three TD passes by John Buckley. Danny Kausel of the Grayson Aces, after catching a TD pass in the first half, scampered for two more in the second to lead the Aces over the Rams, 18-0.

Barracudas Whip Bruins

Turning to the East, the Barracudas used their John Roark to Ron Weaver combination for two TD's and overcame the great arm of last year's All-Star QB Ed Polchlopeck to down the Bruins, 19-12, while the Eagles succumbed to the Giants and Earle Richardson by 27-12.

Action in the Southwest league saw Joe Ward and Tom Bigelow lead the Cougars by the Jaguars in a close one, 14-12, while the Leopards took the measure of the Colonials by 20-7.

Independent action saw Ron Kowalski turn in the top performance of the night, throwing five TD passes in helping Selohassas clobber Smitty's, 31-7.

Mike Gould hit Ken Kurkler with too many passes for the good of Adams. As a result, the Numerals knocked off Adams, 26-0. The Bombers took Griffins by 19-13, and Stan Baran threw four TD passes, all to Larry Dubois, as the Fourdrymen whipped the Hanovers, 24-7.

All Star Game

The Third Annual All Star Game will be held on Nov. 9th, at 7 p.m., on the Intramural Football Field, between the Dormitory and the Fraternity All Star teams. Each team will consist of the six outstanding offensive and defensive stars in each division.

This, year, there will be an extra attraction to the already exciting intramural football season. The UM campus champions will play the campus champions of the intramural program at the Univ. of N.H. That game will be played here on Fri., Nov. 11, at 8:30 p.m.

Tennis Singles

The singles intramural tennis tournament is nearing completion with finals scheduled for Oct. 26 and 28. Among those who have advanced to late rounds are Neil Whitman (SAM) and Hank Hershel (TKE), in the Fraternity division, and Dick Shuman (Webster), Mike Delugan (Hills No.), Larry Barron (Adams), and Rich Minton (James), in the Dorm division.

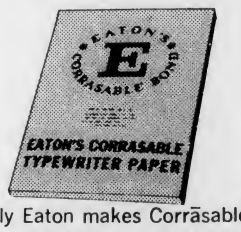
Women's Ski Team?

Yes! UMass has a ski team especially for women. Sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association, the team is a member of the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference and competes in annual races with eleven other colleges.

Last year UMass finished second in the conference. The program gives girls experience in helping to run and organize races. It's also a great way to get to the slopes on weekends!

This year the UM team is sponsoring a race at Mt. Ascutney. The squad will begin pre-season conditioning exercises in November and as soon as the snow arrives will practice weekly at Mt. Tom.

For those who are interested in learning more about the WAA Ski Team, there will be a meeting Nov. 1 at 7 p.m. in the Women's Physical Education Building lounge. Further information may be obtained by contacting Miss Biggiestone in WoPe or Kim Garrison in 409 Hamlin.



Remember—no past racing experience is necessary, but you do have to love skiing.

UMass sophomore defensive end Randy Robinson was named yesterday to the Division I All-East team of the E.C.A.C. for his performance against Rhode Island Saturday. The 5-11, 190-pound Robinson, a native of Belle Harbor, N.Y., was a last-minute replacement for the injured Paul Milnar.

Briggsmen Tie Rhody in Thriller, Aim for Ambush at Tufts Friday

by TIM MURPHY, Sports Day Editor

A soccer game is eighty-eight minutes long and, to paraphrase an old baseball cliche, the contest is not over until the last minute is out.

So it was Saturday at the University of Rhode Island. The Redmen, involved in a scoreless duel for 80 minutes, had broken the tie with a 25-yard free kick by wing Gerry Cellilli at the 17 minute mark of the final period.

Coach Larry Briggs' boys then held sway for little more than four minutes before the Redmen were whistled down for a hand ball violation in the penalty area surrounding the UMass goal.

Ram center foreward Steve Collis then upheld the aforementioned time-worn chestnut as he knotted the UMass twine with less than a minute left.

Rhode Island held the edge in statistics in the encounter, outshooting the Redmen by 22-20. Redmen goalie Larry Martin was tested 20 times while his Rhody counterpart was forced to come up with only 11 shots.

Cellilli's goal boosted his season total to a team-leading four. Other Redmen who have tallied to date are center forward Phil Bozenhard, inside Marty Smith, wing Pete Makhambera and half back Bill Allan.

BASELINE BOOTS — The tie Saturday leaves UMass with a 2-0-1 Yankee Conference record, 2-2-1 overall. Other Yan Con slates show Vermont at 3-0. Rhode Island at 1-1-1, UConn at 1-2, New Hampshire at 1-2, and Maine at 0-3. The tie with Rhode Island leaves UMass with an unmarred alltime record against the Rams. The series composite now reads 5-0-1.

Interestingly, the only Yan Con soccer team to ever top a UMass contingent in Conference play is UConn. That series now stands at 16-15-4 with U-Mass holding slight sway.

Tufts will be the Redmen's rival Friday when the booters journey to Medford to do battle at 3 p.m. A year ago the Redmen took the measure of the Jumbos, 4-1.

Harriers Deal Defeat to URI

Showing Rhode Island a remarkable display of depth, the UMass cross-country team swept to a surprisingly easy 24-33 victory at Kingston yesterday.

Paul Hoss was beaten by only five seconds. Marc Gelinas led a wave of Redmen across the line for fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh positions. Charley Lang, Greg Bowman and Terry Carpenter followed.

The team brings a 4-3 record into its next meet this Saturday against Holy Cross at home. The meet will begin at 11:00 a.m. behind the Women's Physical Education Building. Spectators are advised that there will be plenty of time to watch the meet and make it to the football game at 1:30, since the meet should be over by noon.

A Thinking Backliner...

by BILL MURRAY, Sports Staff

"If there were eleven Mike Russos on a team, it would be damned tough to beat," exclaims Coach Larry Briggs about his varsity soccer captain.

The 6'1, 175 lb. halfback is not rough, but he does not mind being bumped or bruised. According to Briggs, Mike is a "natural competitor." The coach called him a "good thinker," who knows what the game is about and who knows the weaknesses and the strengths of the team.

Hailing from Deerfield he attended Deerfield Academy where sport participation was compulsory. Mike began soccer and played all four years at the academy. In his senior year he was co-captain, and the team ended up with a 9-1 record.

Russo has played halfback on the UMass soccer team for three years. If a player makes a mistake, the history major explains the error to him. He gives a 100% effort in leading the team in their exercises at practice and on the field at the game.

He likes the immense amount of "action" in a soccer game, and says soccer makes a player "mentally alert" and "physically able".

After graduation, he plans to teach history and coach at the secondary school level.

A Coachable Tackle...

by JERRY KASSOY, Sports Staff

With the UMass offense sputtering somewhat, it has been an outstanding defense which has been mainly responsible for the Redmen's winning record. One of the mainstays of the outstanding defensive line is tackle Dick Qualey.

Qualey is a six-foot, 250 lb. product of Woburn High School, where he was captain of both the football and basketball teams before coming to UMass.

A physical education major who hopes to teach and coach after trying professional football, he is currently president of TKE.

It has been noted by many followers of U Mass grid fortunes that Qualey is particularly adept at controlling crucial fourth down situations. Asked to what he attributed his success in stopping the opposition, Qualey replied, "It's a team effort. If one man breaks then it's no good."

Coach Vic Fusia commented that "we at the University think very highly of Dick as a man, student, and football player. He is typical of the type of player here at U M in that he is very coachable. His progress shows this. Dick has played outstanding ball for us for two years."

Two Time E C A C Pick

Qualey personally regards his greatest football thrill as blocking a Holy Cross punt in last year's game. The block resulted in a victory for the Redmen.

About the rest of the campaign, Qualey believes that "now that we've taken UConn, we'll really move."

Frosh Booters Drop 3-0 Decision to URI

by JOE DUFFY
Sports Staff

A strong fourth period effort and some heads-up play gave UConn's freshman booters a 3-0 victory over UMass Frosh Friday at Varsity Field.

The Little Redmen continued to be bothered by an ineffective scoring punch.

The first half was all U-Mass, with the visiting Huskies unable to make any concentrated thrust into Redmen territory. UMass continually pelted the opposing goal with shots but could not negotiate a score.

The Huskies seemingly came up with an offense out of nowhere to start the second half, representing a complete about-turn from their efforts in the first half. UMass countered well, however, and the Yankee Conference rivals remained deadlocked as the third period drew to a close.

At the start of the fourth period UConn struck swiftly. Bill Sahnas booted the ball into the strings from a jungle of players clustered in front of the Redmen goal to boost the Huskies into a 1-0 lead.

Six minutes later a hard kick deflected off the head of UMass foreward Tom Meyer and sailed into an undefended goal. The marker, tallied when UMass tender Pete Scoville was momentarily out of the nets in an effort to snare the loose ball, proved to be just icing on the UConn cake as the Redmen were unable to come back in the period.

Sahnas tallied his second goal of the afternoon with four minutes remaining in the game.

CORNER KICKS — Ralph Etna, John Mercury, Paul Bregoli and Tom Way were singled out for their play in the losing cause. The loss brings the Little Redmen slate to 1-2. Next encounter is Friday at Tufts with the contest slated to begin at 3.

Redmen forewards press attack in spirited action near Rhode Island goal in Frosh encounter Friday but were unable to score on the effort.

THE BLUES PROJECT

5000 Alumni Expected For UMass Homecoming

Among the throng expected to pour into Amherst for the UMass Homecoming Weekend Oct. 22, 23 and 24 will be an expected 5000 alumni.

The graduates will be returning to their alma mater for a weekend of fun (parades, dances dinners and parties) football game (UMass versus Boston University) and serious business (the annual meeting of the Corporation of the Associate Alumni).

Sixty-nine years of University growth will be represented by returning 'grads', from the class of 1897—in the person of Dr. Charles A. Peters of Amherst—to members of last June's class of 1966.

Official Associate Alumni functions start with the 4 p.m. meeting of the board of directors on Friday, Oct. 21, in Memorial Hall. The traditional homecoming float parade — when dormitories, fraternities and sororities all compete for prizes —will begin at 7 p.m. The line of march will take the colorful floats and marching units down North Pleasant St., to the Center of Amherst, returning to campus via Lincoln Ave., for an 8 p.m., homecoming rally and bonfire behind the Student Union.

Following crowning of the Homecoming Queen at the rally, a dance in the Student Union Ballroom with music provided by Doug Clark and his group and the Blues Project will round out the day's activities on the eve of the big game. The dance is scheduled to begin at 8:30.

The annual meeting of the Corporation of the Associate Alumni will get under way at 10 a.m., Saturday in the auditorium of Memorial Hall, where assembled alumni will hear committee reports, elect officers and appoint association directors.

POSITION WEAKENED

'Yahoo' Adviser Resigns

by CAROL SCHULTZ

After five years of Yahoo, Wesley Honey has become disillusioned.

"I'm their adviser until they do something, get another adviser or prepare copy," he said. Which means he's getting through. He is not quitting in disgust. He is terminating his relationship with the magazine because of beliefs which he has about the nature of campus humor magazines and of extracurricular activities in general.

"I feel my effectiveness as an adviser was wearing off," he stated. "Someone with a different viewpoint is needed — someone fresh."

Honey was editor of Yahoo before his graduation in 1962. Since returning to the University to become assistant director of alumni affairs, he has been adviser to Yahoo.

"It's been a long and fruitless association," he confided.

"I wasn't completely and utterly satisfied with the way Yahoo was going."

He explained, "Yahoo staff members try to elect the funniest person as editor. The editor of a humor magazine does not have to be a hilarious person."

"I think there was a time when Yahoo attempted to be particularly blunt and pointed," he said after a moment of thought.

"I think that now Yahoo tries to hit people over the head. I guess I'm trying to say that the magazine has shifted from satirical to slapstick.

"There was one cartoon in the last issue, however," he said, "which is the best I've ever seen in a college humor magazine—the cartoon with the State House. It was satirical and pointed."

"A humor magazine, like any other extracurricular activity," he said, "mainly has to be educational. The educational value accrues predominantly to the people putting it out."

"What makes a good humor magazine," he added, "depends on what the editor is trying to accomplish.

"I think a humor magazine should poke fun with style.

"Yahoo is unwilling to accept sacred cows as objects of satire. Only one sacred cow is being poked at now," he added. "Sex can be funny; but after a while, it gets boring."

Recalling the cartoon which set off the legislative protest last Spring, he said, "I thought it was funny, but I thought many other people would not think so." Sen. Kevin Harrington claimed the cartoon attacked the Catholic faith.

Honey, a Catholic family man, said that he did not consider the cartoon sacrilegious.

"I did, however, advise the editor not to print it. It was omitted from the first issue. I

Senate Discusses Revamping Of Class Executive Councils

by MAX STUMP

Constitutional amendments to re-vamp class executive councils and release Senate officers from their constituencies highlighted Wednesday night's meeting of the Student Senate.

At the beginning of the meeting, President John Greenquist announced that the Board of Trustees will hold an open meeting this Saturday morning at 10:00 in the Southwest Dining Commons. Greenquist urged Senators and other students to attend.

Assembled in Constitutional Convention, the class officers joined with the Senate to consider amendments to the Student Government Association Constitution.

The first item of new business provoking spirited debate was a bill sponsored by Senator Mike Garjian (Upper Kennedy) and Presidents Wayne Thomas ('69) and Dick Wood ('68).

This bill would have required class executive councils to have one representative from each dorm and a proportional number of representatives from Greeks and Commuters.

President Wood, presenting the bill, said that it "guarantees that class opinion is being represented in the executive council when it votes."

Senior class officers, led by President John Mullin, opposed the bill on the grounds that it would make the executive councils too large.

After an attempt to table the bill for study had failed, the bill was overwhelmingly defeated on a roll-call vote.

The Constitutional Convention then passed a bill which would release the Senate officers from their constituencies upon their election in the spring. New Senators will then be elected from those constituencies.

Opponents of the bill argued that if a Senator is elected in his constituency one year, the constituency should have the right to turn him out of office the next.

The rules were suspended to allow the bill's originator, ex-Senator Joe Ross, to speak.

Ross defended his bill, saying that representing a constituency was in itself a big job, if done properly, and that the Senate officers were too busy to do the job well.

He also pointed to the growing need for planning over the summer and the lack of continuity resulting when a Senate officer is not re-elected to the Senate from his constituency.

President Greenquist, leaving the chair for the bill, said that he had opposed a similar bill passed last year which released the president from his constituency, but now felt that it was necessary. He said that there would have been serious problems this year if one of the officers had not been re-elected.

After the Constitutional Convention ended, the Senate turned to its regular business.

An election held in John Adams Middle was invalidated, because people were present at the polls telling voters how they should vote. A new election was announced for Monday night.

During debate over an appropriation to the Accounting Club, President Greenquist announced that a quorum was no longer present.

RED CROSS BLOOD DRIVE BY CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS

The annual UMass Red Cross Blood Drive got off to an enthusiastic start with a recruiter's meeting in the Council Chambers of the Student Union at 11:00 a.m., Thursday.

Participating in the drive this year are the Newman Club, Hillel, Alpha Phi Omega, Gamma Sigma Sigma, and many individual students on campus.

Last year's drive was the second largest Red Cross Blood Drive of the year in Massachusetts. There was a total of 669 pints of blood collected over the three day period. With the increased enrollment, this year's drive is expected to top all records.

Again this year the Hampshire County Red Cross Blood Insurance Program will be in effect. Under this program donors and their immediate families are entitled to all the Blood they need for a period of one year from the time the blood was donated. Those not covered by this program are asked to replace blood used from the blood bank.

AMERICAN COLLEGE STUDENT IDEALISM DISAPPEARING

The student idealism of the "War Baby Generation" is disappearing from American college and university campuses.

Students have dropped out of the civil rights battle or been pushed out by "Black Power" advocates. They are disillusioned with Pres. Johnson's peace talk and the Vietnam escalation that "out-Goldwaters Goldwater."

They have found that mass picketing on national issues doesn't accomplish much.

A few have become cynical and turned to drugs or other personal excesses.

But most are turning to campus educational issues or other problems where they can be active locally and see results.

The Peace Corps still has strong backing, however.

This is the finding of a nationwide Los Angeles Times survey of students, professors and administrators in the early weeks of the academic year taken at colleges and universities across the country, including Yale, Bryn Mawr, UCLA, Emory, Stanford and the Univ. of Calif. at Berkeley.

An interview with Ilene Strelitz, a Stanford Univ. grad who now teaches American civilization at Tougaloo, a mostly-Negro college near Jackson, Miss., captures strains that run through many of these interviews.

Miss Strelitz, an intense activist at Stanford, said:

"A lot of things have happened since those idealistic student movements started. We used to think that once people knew what it was like to be a Negro in Mississippi, things would change. Now people know — and things are the same.

"Students now realize that all your demands can't be met immediately. We used to think that when things are wrong we could all get together and work them out for the old American dream. Now students are learning that the goals of their ideals can be awfully involved. Maybe people are getting more embittered, but they're getting more realistic, too."

A few years ago Miss Strelitz was organizing large numbers of students to participate in Southern civil rights demonstrations. Now she is working on a smaller scale—providing Southern Negro college students with better instruction than they might otherwise receive.

Joel P. Smith, Assoc. dean of students at Stanford, recently said he feared that "the wonderful, thrilling idealism that has predominated on so many campuses is beginning to curdle in important ways."

This is happening, Smith said, for four reasons: Distrust of Pres. Johnson and unfavorable comparisons between Mr. Johnson and the much-admired Pres. Kennedy; dislike for the Vietnam war; the belief of many white student activists that they are being elbowed out of the civil rights movement by "Black Power" advocates, and general disagreement with what students think is the excessive materialism of American society.

Smith said these forces of discontent are "coalescing and turning things sour" on many campuses.

In some cases, he said, students have abandoned political issues in favor of indulgence in "intense sensualism"—drug-taking, sexual promiscuity and "irresponsible personal actions regarding the draft."

Around the country there was general agreement with Smith's description of the symptoms of this student malaise.

Dan MacIntosh, student body Pres. at the University of California at Berkley said:

"A lot of kids worked for Johnson as a man of peace, a man who would not escalate the war. Six months later they found out the campaign was essentially a fraud. Johnson was doing precisely what the students thought they were voting against. He was out-doing Goldwater in escalating the war."

"I Want to Turn On the Whole World"

by DONNA LEE DOMANA

A University of Massachusetts psychology professor believes any religion based on Timothy Leary's psychedelic movement is bound to fail because anything that takes one on a trip should also return him.

"I want to turn on the whole world," declared Timothy Leary, the former Harvard professor turned preacher of a new religion whose communion wafer can be made in any chemistry laboratory.

At first, one could "take a trip" by eating a drug known as LSD. Now, a simple calico print of pulsating rhythm of a drum is able to "disorient one from the normal time sense and preoccupations, lift one into the state of heightened consciousness, or vaporize one's mind by bombing the senses." That's how Leary describes the feelings known as the psychedelic.

Such terms form the basis of the cloud that has been shrouding the topic of psychedelics, which translated from the Greek means "mind - manifesting," Dr. Kates, a professor in the psychology Department at the University of Massachusetts.

Leaning back in a soft leather chair in his Bartlett Hall office and folding his hands behind his head, Dr. Solis Kates gave the Collegian his views of the Leary cult.

Dr. Kates divides the cultists into three categories. He said the majority are college students. In LSD, they find "freedom from the restraints that have been placed upon them by convention and possibly the home situation," he explained. LSD satisfies their need to "burst out."

As The Saturday Evening Post recently commented, "LSD appeals to those who want to be super cool and belong to the drug aristocracy."

A second Kates category comprises those who are fearful of life in the modern world—"those who are anxious concerning the threat of the atomic bomb which could one day destroy the world." For these who prognosticate with pessimism, LSD fulfills their desire "to live as fully as possible each day," to open oneself to the sharing of new experiences.

In the minority, Dr. Kates places "those who have achieved all that is necessary in terms of comforts are now seeking a new consciousness, awareness of one's self."

He elaborated by referring to Modern Man in Search of His Soul by Carl Jung, who says that "people after 35 are trying to let the unconscious unlease itself. If one has reached the pinnacle of his ambitions, the key to a new meaningful development in life lies in going within oneself."

Dr. Leary has said that the aim of his religion, the League for Spiritual Discovery, is not conversion out of but a deeper understanding into one's religious beliefs. Can LSD — the league—ever become an established religion in America? Dr. Kates is somewhat doubtful. "As you know, almost anything can be made into a religion," he commented. You can use money or even sex as a religious basis. But for its establishment, a religion requires the setting down of its rules, regulations and commandments, so to speak. He cited a religion based upon the drug, paote, and blamed its failure in acceptance to the lack of regulatory precepts.

He sees failure ahead for LSD and psychedelics in providing anything beneficial to society. Echoing his Freudian view of analysis, Dr. Kates said, "Civilization is partly the cause of all neurotic behavior. We have been forced to give up the creative part of ourselves. Although LSD has been proven to generate inspiration in its takers, to be proven beneficial it must provide a recovery—the lack of which is the basic failure inherent in hypnoanalysis. LSD and its effects must be able to be carried over into a life which doesn't 'take trips'."

VIRGINIA WOOLF

Liz and Dick Batter and Bruise

by GORDON A. DAVIDSON
News Editor

. . . "He's an old bog in the History department. That's what George is. A bog. A fen. A G.D. swamp. A Swamp. Hey Swamp! Hey Swampy!"

And so it goes, as Liz Taylor and Richard Burton lacerate, puncture, batter and bruise each other with Albee's cruel, punning dialogue.

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? leaves the viewer emotionally exhausted, and so shocks and numbs his consciousness that it takes him several days to realize the significance of what he has seen.

Director Mike Nichols has vividly presented Edward Albee's portrait of the far from ordinary marriage of a college professor and his wife, who rely on a system of games and tortures to enable them to cope with the reality of their marriage. Albee's dialogue cuts to the heart of the complexities of the characters with a cruelty seldom before presented in a film.

Albee has utilized the concept of time by referring to the length of the marriage as "centuries" to emphasize the duration of the agony which has been suffered by the participants. The story is also a completely perfect whole, coming full circle in only one night, the crisis point of the marriage.

This crisis comes when the

INTERESTED IN THE STUDY OF LAW?

A representative of the Washington University School of Law (St. Louis) will be on campus October 26, 1966 (a.m. only) to talk to students planning to enter law school upon graduation, or thinking about it.

Prof. Dorsey will be available in the Placement Office in Machmer Hall on this date.

Cultural Group Outlines Program

by JOANNE BUCEWICK

Cultural representatives of all the residence halls, met with Mr. Barnard, Student Activities Advisor for the Cultural Enrichment Program (CEP) on Tuesday night to discuss the newly inaugurated CEP.

Beginning this month, each residence hall will receive $100 per semester to sponsor cultural activities. The money, which was once given entirely to the athletic deparment, is derived from vending machine income.

This amount is expected to increase steadly. The operation of vending machines, under the professional management of Mr. West, should increase their efficency.

The primary purpose of the program is "the development of cultural activity for, by, and within the residence halls, the basic unit of campus society." The program is planned "to be for and by the students, with the involvement of appropriate resource people" to act as advisors.

Mr. Barnard explains, "there are unlimited possibilities" within the guidelines of the committee. Suggested areas are: publications, subscriptions to newspapers and magazines; equipment, film projectors, screens; permanent acquisitions such as art objects; programs including lectures and visitors, trips to museums; miscellaneous such as refreshments for programs.

Mr. Barnard suggests that each residence hall develop a program committee that would vote on the spending of funds.

The Student Activities Adivsor for CEP is responsible for "administering the program for the University." He acts as an advisor and will be informed of all planned programs.

The legality of proposed expenditures will be decided by a committee of eight. This committee will be appointed by the president of the Student Senate. It will meet with the cultural representatives from each residence hall.

The CEP is administered through the RSO business office. Each residence hall has a separate RSO account in addition to the other dorm dues account. Since students on planning programs use the University name, authorization must be given by the RSO for each event.

The new Cultural Enrichment Program offers a chance to make campus life more meaningful and rewarding. It is up to the students to make the most of the opportunity.

Alumni Give Avid Support Despite Size, Poverty

by KEN LAMKIN

Alumni is a topic of great interest to all of us, because we all expect to become alumni in a short time. What does it mean to be an alumnus? What are our alumni doing for the University? What does the university do for its alumni?

The Alumni Office, inconspicuously located in Memorial Hall, is the beehive of activity where the answers to these questions are found. It functions through alumni contributions with Executive Vice President Evan Johnston, Director of Alumni Affairs Wesley Honey, Fund Director William Lane, and six permanent girls.

The office serves as the center for organization of alumni support for legislation that the University considers vital to its existence. This is accomplished by an intricate chain of communications—from regional offices and Alumni Clubs to the individual alumni, who write to or meet with their legislator.

When the Autonomy bill was before the legislature, Beacon Hill received between three and four thousand letters in a week. Two prominent educational writers praised the Alumni Office for making the difference between passage and defeat of the bill.

The Alumni Office helps organize and coordinate Alumni Club activities among the 40 Clubs in existence. It also plans the 14 to 18 class reunions that occur every June, providing speakers, music, tours, and brief alumni courses on such general disciplines as sociology, government, and English.

Sports functions such as the alumni-varsity basketball game, the spring alumni-varsity football scrimmage, and the annual sports banquet, and social functions including the Night at Pops for UMass alumni are run from the office. Each Commencement three awards—Distinguished Service, Distinguished Professional Service, and Distinguished Public Service—are given to deserving alumni.

The Alumni Office has fostered and supported the "Massachusetts Review," an internationally-acclaimed literary publication.

The Alumni Memorial Lecture Series, which was recently displaced by the DVP, and now recruits speakers only for special functions is another one of its activities. The University of Massachusetts-Freiburg program could not be supported wholly with University funds because of its overseas location, was subsidized by Alumni funds. Legislator's Day was initiated under the auspices of the Alumni Office, which arranges tours, a luncheon, football game, and social hour for the occasion.

Up to date records of alumni addresses, gifts, and biographical information are kept, and the quarterly "Massachusetts Alumnus" is published. Executive Vice President Evan Johnston is advisor to Adelphia and the Homecoming Committee.

Memorial Hall is available for meetings of student groups. Weekly coffee hours in Memorial Hall are arranged with student groups, as the Student Senate, and the Executive Committees, so that the students can become aware of the alumni program before graduation. This varied alumni program keeps the 12 active alumni committees occupied.

As alumni we are expected to be loyal to our alma mater. This loyalty can be in the form of legislative support; selling the institution to the people of Massachusetts, for example through talks and films to various organizations; recruiting good students and athletes; starting local scholarships with a fund-raising event; as well as direct financial contribution.

Alumni contributions made the construction of Curry Hicks Physical Education Building, old Alumni Field, and Memorial Hall possible. The architetcs for these buildings, the Student Union, Goodell Library, North Dining Commons, ROTC building, and most dormitories until the Orchard Complex were alumni.

The Alumni Building Association with considerable volunteer support from alumni built most of the dormitories, the Student Union, and Dining Commons at no cost to the State. This Association has now become the Building Authority which functions with continuing alumni support.

The University of Massachusetts Foundation was incorporated by alumni to receive tax-deductable gifts, wills, and bequests, and to administer scholarships and loans from its income.

In the past ten years one million dollars in large gifts have been received by the Foundation. At the moment $48,000.00 a year are available for scholarships and loans.

The Alumni Association is too young and too small to produce large amounts of cash. Of the 22,000 alumni, two thirds of them have graduated since 1949. This year 20 to 25% of all alumni are expected to contribute $60,000.00, an average of $13 to $14 per gift.

This is compared to $22,000.00 contributed 8 years ago. This increase is due to the growing alumni body and to the fact that the Alumni Office has become more professional at fund-raising.

Any alumnus who contributes at least a hundred dollars is a member of the Century Club whose members receive a special newsletter, are invited to the President's reception Homecoming.

50% of our alumni live in Massachusetts, 70% in New England, and the remainder are well scattered around the world. Statistics on the accomplishments of our alumni are not available, but individual profiles of alumni will appear in future Collegian issues.

Voters in Absentia: READ

PROCEDURE FOR ABSENTEE VOTING

1. An absentee ballot may be obtained only by those who have registered with their town or city clerk. Those who have not yet registered cannot do so until after Nov. 8 and therefore will be unable to vote in the coming elections.
2. The ballot may be obtained by writing to your town or city clerk. You must include your home residence, your ward and precinct (if you know them), the address you want the ballot sent to, and your signature.
3. Upon receipt of the ballot it must be brought to a notary public who will check to see that the ballot is not marked. Do not mark the ballot before this. The notary public will explain the marking procedure. Once the ballot is marked the notary public will seal it in an envelope provided. Then you must mail it back to your town or city clerk. The postage is 10¢.
   A notary public will be available in the Student Union at times to be announced later. If you're unable to see the notary public in the Student Union, you may go to the Town Clerk in Amherst, Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Lit. Society Awakens With Ambitious Plans

Dormant no longer, the Literary Society has once again come alive.

It had its second meeting of the semester last night in Bartlett Faculty Lounge.

Conceived as a joint student-faculty alumni organization, the Literary Society, which is the oldest society on campus, was established to promote free discussion and indivual creativity.

At the opening meeting of October 5, the Scottish poetry and prose selections of Mr. David Buchan, a native of Scotland, transformed the contemporary decor and modern art of Bartlett Faculty Lounge into a Scottish livingroom whose walls echoed the music of the bagpipes and exhibited the plaids of the county.

In a hint of a brogue, Mr. Buchan, who is a member of the English Department, also led a discussion comparing the educational systems of Scotland and the United States.

For Future meetings, the society which is open to all undergraduates and graduates regardless of major, is planning to hold poetry and play readings, to discuss reoccuring literary themes and to host guests distinguished in the fields of poetry and prose.

Also on the agenda are the presentations of films in which contemporary novelists discuss their works and tapes which, made especially for University use, deal with various literary topics.

At Least an Effort

President Johnson is well on the way in his historic journey to Asia and the Manila summit conference of October 24 and 25. The President has been wise in discouraging the notion that the summit conference would prove a panacea for our troubles in Vietnam. The American people should not hope for burning bushes or opening seas.

Mr. Johnson has vowed he would order a cease fire as soon as the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese assure him in some way, shape, or form that they will respond by not advancing the war during the cessation. But he would make the difficult first move. To cease firing without assurance from the enemy would endanger the entire American stand and untold American lives. How much finer is the war against ignorance and poverty in which the President pledges United States involvement in all of Asia—including North Vietnam.

The major blocks against finding a peace—Ho Chi Minh's belief that he can win the war and refusal of neutral countries to physically enforce an agreement—still exist as the President wings toward Manila; therefore, nothing dramatic can be expected. Yet, his recent speeches and his perilous journey to the troubled area offer some encouragement . . . and a bit more hope. When this trip is over, at least a sincere effort will have been, and this is far better than standing out side the White House mouthing pat cliches and never having left at all.

Rumbles in the Night

by Jerome Horvitz, Editorial Staff

Do you remember sitting in your dorm last year, and hearing your stomach rumbling for some food at about ten-thirty at night? Well, at this time the books probably went down and out you went to the closest grinder wagon to fulfill that desire of hunger and quiet that stomach until the following day.

But what you had to eat—was it really worth it? The taste of cold cuts stayed for about a week, and in some cases the cold-cuts themselves stayed with you for about a week. There was just nothing to do. Your hunger was one of those uncontrollable drives which made you do and eat about anything to alleviate that hollow feeling inside. But you also found going out for food was a good excuse to take that well deserved study break or just "hack away" the time with some friends.

Thus one can now ask—why isn't there a concession on camus today where the student can use a good opportunity to have a snack. There should be a wagon that is clean with good quality food that would be inviting to the eye as well as to the stomach, a wagon that would be situated near the dorms so that the student could just hop outside for a few minutes and get what he desired—unlike last year's situation which existed at the Orchard where one had to tramp down the hill to Gorman. In the cold of winter, not only the student found himself freezing, but the food itself was frozen before he returned to the warmth of his room.

There now exists a concession off campus which does dispense clean, good quality food in an attractive wagon. But unfortunately this seems to be the only one, and presently it is found off campus —out of the convenience of most students. A concern such as this would be an attractive addition to the campus and to the stomach of the student body.

Why must 'ramblings' continue? There are so many hungry hours that separate that last bit of supper dessert from that first sip of juice in the morning. There are indeed many people who go to bed hungry every night—but President Johnson didn't have the UMass student in mind when he said this.

AS GROWS THE UNIVERSITY SO GO THE PARKING LOTS AND SO GROWS ANDERSON'S

To the Editor:

Congratulations to Red Blasko and U-Mass' Finest, for truly they have come up with another ingenious move, and, as is the spirit on this ever-growing campus, they continue to have only the students' interests at heart.

I refer, of course, to Wednesday's towing crusade. Thoughful of them, wasn't it, to wait until a nice rainy day to launch the largest towing drive of the year? Of course it was. And smart too. For they well know that if you tow students' cars from faculty lots on nice days, you won't come up with very many "clients" for Anderson's ever-growing storage area. But wait until a rainy day, they probably schemed, when students will be more likely to take a chance for an hour in a half-empt faculty lot to avoid getting drenched crossing campus through cleverly constructed ruts and strategically placed puddles.

Consider this well-thought-out plan: assign commuters to a parking lot as far away from most of their classes as possible, this will force them to wade through several thousand yards of wet lands each time it rains; their misery will make them mistakenly think: 'why not take a chance, after all, that faculty lot is only about ¼ full anyway' and then, snap, we'll get 'em!

So your car is towed. Okay, you were wrong, you deserve to be punished. But $8??? (Last year's fee was only $7, the police advise me. Contract for the towing service is awarded to the lowest bidder). It appears as if the powers that be have decided that the mere $8 would be like an appropriate drop of water off a duck's back. Now, what about those of us who don't have the $8 immediately available? We commute, perhaps our check books were left at home. Too bad. So you thumb home (remember its raining) or you leave it in the lot for another day. But wait, there's an additional $1 storage fee for taking up so much of Anderson's valuable storage area!

Isn't it Ironic that Anderson's garage is expanding in direct proportion to the rapid growth of the University, and as the University grows, parking lots for students are rapidly converted to faculty lots (a factor, perhaps, in the recruitment of new faculty?) and those areas where students are permitted to park are pushed further and further to the edges of campus. The day will come, future commuters, when the student parking lots will be just south of Springfield, mark my words!

Was I wrong? you bet. But I'm bitter, too. I've learned my lesson, never fear. I can't afford another expensive lesson like that. But I can't help but think some of the blame lies with the system. The point could have been gotten across with a parking fine, for we can't afford many of them, either, and aren't allowed to graduate until all parking tickets are paid. It's too bad the University has gotten my contribution to any alumni funds in advance, in the form of an oversized towing fee, not entirely justified.

QUORUM QUANDARY

To the Editor:

I am a non-senator who is presently working for the senate and the student government on four student senate committees. In the past two weeks I have been writing an article in the Collegian for the Senate urging other non-senators to assist their Student Government in a similar way. Thus I find it very disconserting when last Wednesday, the Student Senate had quorum problems for the third time this year.

How can the Senate expect the students to take an interest and a serious part in their Student Government when it seems many of their Student Senators do not? If we are to have a responsible effort towards good government, there must be a better showing on the senate floor than was apparant last Wednesday. The few regular Senators can not provide the good example needed on this campus by themselves.

PEOPLE CARE TOO MUCH?

To the Editor:

Has it occurred to anyone on the Collegian that campus elections wither not because no one cares, but because people care too much. . .about things of more substantial and lasting value, like their studies, for instance? Those individuals who seek self-fulfillment in the library instead of on the ballot should hardly be accused of apathy!

Personally, I much prefer to contemplate the sunset from my beautiful Tower dorm than the present scrappy wallpaper of election posters. I'll let you have your values; please leave mine alone.

Already I hear the candidates (though not the incumbents) protesting their undying love for the University. One suspects that many of our national and state political candidates are in love more with themselves than this grand institution of America. To lump school spirit with patriotism may be going a bit far, but does not the excellence of both depend on a mature appreciation of their respective systems? What are we here for, anyway? You can win a popularity contest in a poolhall.

Vandalism Rampant: Harrumph, SW Residents

To the Editor:

The new Southwest Complex is fascinating. New buildings and new ideas on running them give the student a unique world to live in.

Unlive the "old" house mother and tradition setting the rules in the dorms, the Southwest Towers are run by a student government set up in each dorm. The students are obliged to follow these rules using an honor code. It is assumed in other words that the students are old enough and mature enough to follow these rules.

Recently we have seen a number of examples of how fine these mature young citizens of a new world can handle themselves under the ideals of the Southwest. "Vandalism Rampant: Southwest Elevators Jammed, Doors Jimmied" was a front page headline of a recent article in the Collegian. With the addition of the wonderful facilities of a kitchenette, food can not be left in the refrigerator without someone helping himself to it within a day or so. Quiet hours, between 8 p.m. and 7 a.m., are observed by many by seeing who can make the most noise or win the local football game in the halls. Did you ever try to sleep to the sound of someone practicing on an electric guitar, at midnight? At present the list seems to be aiming at infinity.

Yes, we citizens of the Southwest certainly know how to show the rest of the University what we think of the privileges we have. Or do we?

Poor Dylan Imitation; Harrumph, Mr. Aliferis

To the Editor:

I've become accustomed to seeing the English language mangled in the Collegian, but before reading Mr. Aliferis's editorial, On Faculty, I never felt impelled to write.

I got the impression that Mr. Aliferis is dissatisfied with the faculty and that he feels raising salaries would make it possible for the "even eager" UMass student to become intellectually "committed." He suggests that the students today could be excited by their classes, if it weren't for those "minds marinated in mediocrity."

It is not my intention to argue with his position, which is tenuous, at best. What I find particularly distasteful is Mr. Aliferis's weak attempt at Creative Editorials. I prefer mine in English.

These are some of the more outrageous lines from the editorial:

"To question would be nowhere. Turned off." "Money is like water for electric power." "In time, maybe the non-intellectual atmosphere will change or at least the 'image'—more seductive."

I'm all for creativity, but Mr. Aliferis might do well to submit his poetry to a campus literary magazine. Perhaps it would be received more favorably.

I think I can recognize the influence of Bob Dylan in Mr. Aliferis's writing. Since I am a fan of his, I couldn't be more displeased with such a poor imitation.

Just Plain... Harrumph, Mr. Smith

To the Editor:

In his editorial entitled HARRUMPH (Oct. 19), Dee Smith has again shown his ability to write a poor editorial and remarkable inability to make sense.

After reading his editorial through twice, I finally extracted his rather vague meaning. He seems to think of 'Mr. Polyman' as a lowly, baby-kissing fraud. What, Mr. Smith, is he supposed to kiss?

An office-seeker, making a public appearance, is governed by a set of informal rules that are set up by the electorate. Examples are: He may not criticize his opponent too violently and he may not make far-reaching ,although important) proposals. If he does these, he is, in the first case, a dirty politician or, in the latter case, he is a radical.

These restrictions are determined by the general electorate. In other words, the office seeker's behavior is limited to what the people are willing to listen to. This is essentially because the electorate is interested in only those things which will directly affect him, i.e., income tax and job opportunity. He is not interested in things that affect him indirectly, such as, proposed cuts in the legislature or the new public works program.

This sphere of interest of the voter is not to be scorned but should be used as a base to construct as near to the ideal voter as possible. Thus, it is not the politicians who are to blame—it is you and the rest of the American people, myself included, who are at fault.

By trying to make a fool of the politician's campaign methods, you are making fools of the electorate (who determine the rules by which he must conduct his campaign), and quite appropriately of yourself.

If these rules are changed and the politicians do not upgrade their methods appropriately, then it is time for criticism of the politicians. If, at that time, Mr. Smith wishes to criticize, please do so in an intelliegnt, clear manner and with evidence of an adult mind.

The only thing that he has proven is that he hasn't the sense to understand that for which he so ineptly appeals.

THE LEGEND OF LILIOM - and his wife Julie - takes shape with the talented touch of Peter Stelzer and Rita Crosby in the year's first production of the UMass theater. Harry Mahnken directs this "blend of make-believe and truth packed soundly . . ."

The Legend of Liliom

by JAN SULLIVAN and N. C. SCANLAN

A carnival called Liliom opened Wednesday night in Bowker Auditorium. Despite a sparce crowd, Harry Mahnken, director of his little legend play, can be proud he picked a winner on the first of four attempts.

It is a fantasy by Ferenc Molnar presenting a pleasant blend of make-believe and truth packed soundly with a hard-core of central players.

Liliom is the carnival barker-boy who falls for servant girl Julie. After marriage, he is presented with some real, non-carnival problems: earning bread, the coming of a child, and how to beat Ficsur at cards. Too proud to return to Mrs. Muskat's amusement work, robbery seems the logical answer.

Cripple Ficsur and he fail to rob the Jew

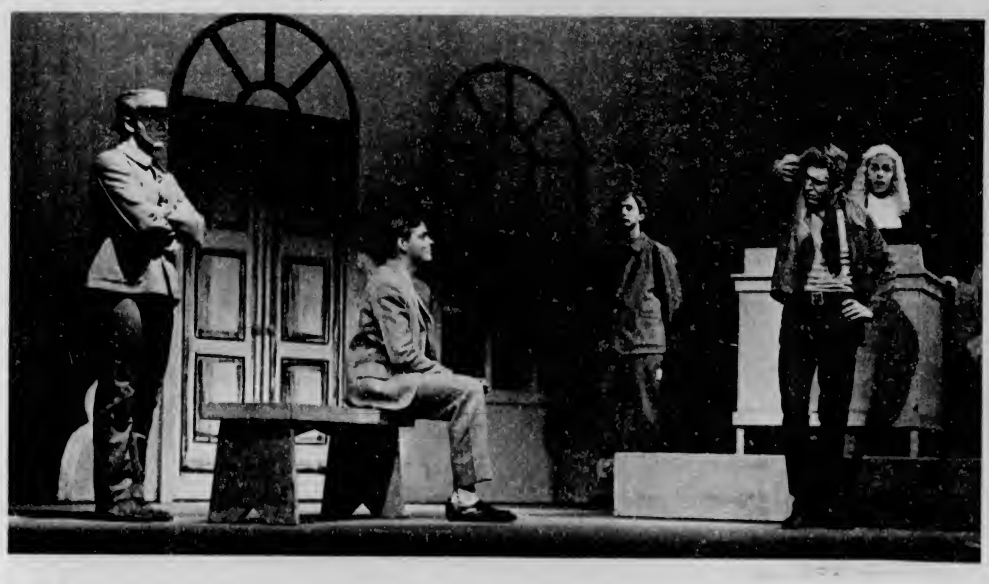
Linzman; Liliom despairs, dies, and is arrested by the heavenly police. He returns after sixteen years of "purification" still a boy, still a strong-man, to offer a star to his and Julie's child.

Central person of top performance is Rita Crosby as Julie. She leaves her land of carousel simplicity and gradually hardens into understandings as the play developes.

Peter Stelzer plays his Liliom with explosions of his bully-barker-interior and rare moments of wistful boyishness never overdone. As opposed to hardening Julie, Liliom never turns one side on too long. In the last scene the boy carries the star and the mean-man slaps daughter's hand — same old Liliom.

Paula Norton as lover-mother Mrs. Muskat seems the villain in trying to get Liliom working at the carnival again. (She also likes to give him backrubs.) Jane Helman high-shrills her way to silly Marie, Julie's little-witted friend.

All four are very convincing. They are the main ingredients for a rich and successful cake that Harry Mahnken bakes. A teaspoon of graduate students (Wilker and Titcomb) sweeten it up in the heavenly courtroom. The icing is two minor characters: shadow William Sibley as carpenter hoping to marry widow Julie, and hen-talking Anne Agard who squawks of "good-for-nothing, card-playing" Liliom.



All make it easy to swallow. One phlegmatic cop with a nervous leg and a comical suit and depression hat on Ficsur spoil his entrances (which are many) hurt.

The Mehnken mechanics hold up well. Players speed through scene one to provide time for two terrible "slow curtains". (Or were they tableaux?) Other than this and a late-leaving pocket-book following Marie, timing flies well. Settings, very gently moved by the movers of such things, mixed real stage of chairs, bottles and camera with indication back drops of ferris wheel and park scene. Keith Michael integrates these effectively.

Lighting is also a bright spot. A fine fade on Liliom, Julie, park bench add a romantic mood.

Despite a scant first night audience, Liliom was generally well done with few noticeable or distracting flaws. Molnar wrote a fantasy, a hard-to-swallow form for Americans who usually turn them into musicals. (This one-Carousel) Liliom will be performed tonite and close Saturday.

AFROTC PRAISED FOR INSPECTION

Key members of 370th AFROTC Cadet Wing meet to discuss results of recent inspection.

The 370th AFROTC Cadet Wing of the University of Massachusetts was visited by a team of inspecting officers from Headquarters, Air University, Maxwell A.F.B., Ala., during Oct. 17-19.

The entire Cadet Wing, commanded by Cadet Col. Albert P. Richards, Jr., Class of 1967, was lauded for their performance and status of training indicated during the inspection. The cadets are responsible for planning, organizing and implementing all the activities required by Air Force regulations and are doing so in an outstanding manner.

The inspection report reflected that the cadets of AFROTC Det. 370 have a positive and enthusiastic attitude towards Air Force ROTC and Corps Training activities. In the opinion of the inspecting team the objectives of the Dept. of the Air Force are being attained to an excellent degree at UMass.

Senior Women Participated In Placement Convocation

by HELEN LAZARRI

The University senior women met again Thursday morning in Mahar Auditorium for their second Placement Convocation.

Mrs. Dorothy Hardesty, the new placement officer for women, began the meeting with tips on interviewing techniques. She stressed the point that there is no need for nervousness. "Job interviewers are there to hire you, not to trick you," she explained.

An average interview takes about half an hour and within this period nervous habits such as gum chewing and smoking are discouraged. "Follow the interviewer's lead: "Mrs. Hardesty advised, "always look alert and interested."

A girl's own good taste, she felt, is her best guide for an attractive appearance. Clothes should be conservative, and unnecessary accessories or cosmetics should be avoided. Naturally a neat hair style is a requisite for a well-groomed appearance.

After concluding her discussion on interviews, Mrs. Hardesty informed the senior girls about the annual report which will be posted in the girls' residences shortly. This is a report of the girls who graduated last June, where they went, what their jobs are, and other similar statistics.

It will give the present seniors an insight of what's ahead for them in their respective fields, and where the job opportunities are.

Mrs. Hardesty emphasized how important it is that senior women make appointments soon for their interviews with her at the placement office, in order to discuss their future plans, and their occupational and geographical preferences.

Her office will be open for personal discussions; or if three or four girls have similar interests, they are welcome to make an appointment for a small group discussion if they prefer. Mrs. Hardesty said that she would like to see all the senior women as soon as possible.

The convocation closed with a short question period in which the following major points were made: a graduate doesn't have to begin work immediately after graduation — she can choose her own date to start; grades are important, but personal qualities and past record are also seriously considered; all the information on the National Teacher's Exam are available at the Placement Office.

The final announcement was that of the Vocational Forum for senior women in Springfield, Friday.

Virginia Woolf...

games threaten to become so vicious and irrational that they must either cease or destroy the participants. George forces both he and Martha to come back to reality and face their individual shortcomings, by destroying the imaginary son which had become a "beanbag" created by both of them to compensate for their own failures.

Using Haskell Wexler's photography, which fades in and out of focus as the intensity of emotions rises and falls, Nichols is able to communicate the intensity of his characters.

There is almost a surrealistic quality to the silhouetted bedroom scene in which George watches his wife being seduced by a younger professor. But the danger that the growing intensity of the game playing and arguing will give the story an unrealistic quality is adeptly avoided. Nichols introduces the magnificent irrelevancy of the flashing directional signal of the station wagon, the light which takes the drunken Martha several minutes to turn off, to snap the audience back to the reality of the existence of normal people.

Burton flawlessly portrays the intellectually undefeatable, yet academically and emotionally vulnerable masochist who is able to adapt to any game which Martha can invent, and defeat her despite temporary setbacks because of weaknesses in his emotional background. His portrayal does, if nothing else, raise the question of what actually does go on behind the tweedy exterior of the average college professors, and what problems exist for professors which can never be revealed in classrooms.

Taylor presents one of the great acting performances of her career in her portrayal of the barren, insecure, frustrated woman who spends so much time trying to prove to her husband that he has made a terrible mistake in marrying her. Both husband and wife are intense and effective in acting, and one almost feels that there may be more than acting in some of the scenes of anger.

Virginia Woolf is an emotional experience, which gives the viewer a catharsis the like of which has not been seen since Oedipus Rex. But set in a modern format this story has relevance and meaning for men of today, men who constantly deceive themselves concerning the reality of life.

BOOK REVIEW

A Guide to Manhunting

Ladies, have you ever considered selective promiscuity?

Dr. Albert Ellis has, and further he thinks it is the best thing for you. He says so forthrightly in one of his newer manuals of psychological health, The Intelligent Woman's Guide to Manhunting (Dell, 60¢).

By his own admission the book is addressed to the swinging emancipated female who can tell her man where to go. And directions usually point to the area of her boudoir. By giving freely of herself, he says she is all the more healthy psychologically and has objectively appraised a potential candidate for "till death do us part."

The free woman should not be afraid of picking up any likely looking candidate, whether he be on a street corner, in a museum or at a cocktail party. Sure, he may think she's a tramp at first but when he converses with her half an hour he will realize that she is intelligent, attractive, and desirable.

Boldness Equals Femininity

She has been bold, certainly, has violated the minor mores of her inane society, yet she is also totally feminine. "Practically all males love women to make frank, open, undisguised friendly overtures toward them: to pick them up on street corners, give them their telephone numbers, ask them for a date, call them when they are lonely, and start taking off their own and the male's clothes when they are alone together."

He says women think a man wants in them: brainlessness, stylishness, mothering, and romance-seeking.

What men really want, he stated, is assertiveness, guts, competence, permissiveness without ingratiation, and concern without worry.

Throughout his book Ellis seems to subscribe to the old maxim that a woman should be a chef in the kitchen, a duchess in the drawing room and a whore in the bedroom. Figuratively speaking, that is.

He puts a pox upon the demure fanfluttering female whose watchword was 'Be Chaste But Chased.'

Questions To Consider

In considering the morality of a premarital sex relationship there are just two questions which should be in the young lady's mind: 1) Afterwards, am I going to feel guilty about this act? 2) Am I using a contraceptive?

Number two is a practical momentary matter, easily answered. If the lady says yes honestly to the first question then she should not go through with it. If her answer is no or if she is uncertain then the only thing to do is to try to find out.

Dr. Ellis is exciting reading and not simply because of what sensationalist elements of libertinism may be involved. He is often brilliantly colloquial, and his sentences hit hard, direct, and convincing. He offers some sane, solid advice.

Personal Decision

He asks that people decide for themselves what things are important in life and assert that they exist not only for themselves, but if necessary by themselves. In essence, there is nothing wrong with being alone, if you are not lonely. Happiness consists of living on your own terms, making these terms as minimal as possible.

Ladies, read what Dr. Ellis has to say—you will find his advice pungent, bitter-sweet, and biting. And you may find his kind of cold, clear logic almost refreshing.

365 Problems to Solve For New RSO Administrator

by JOHN M. CAHILL

Although virtually unknown to the mass of students, the actions of a new UMass administrator will, in one way or another, affect every one of them.

Through the office of the "freshman" director of Recognized Student Organizations, Gerald Scanlon, are channeled the activities of every organization on campus, a total of 365 ranging from the Student Senate to the Outing Club.

Seated behind a kidney-shaped desk in an office on the Student Union second floor, this ex-salesman has the monumental task of giving to each of these his personal and undivided attention.

"With 365 different organizations, we can expect 365 completely diverse problems which we must attempt to solve," he commented. All activities, all matters concerning money, anything which affects the student body eventually finds its way to his office. Activities ranging from a dormitory's spaghetti supper to Homecoming Weekend are planned, organized and motivated from this central point.

All requests for money, be they for a Sousaphone or for ink for this copy of the Collegian, must be approved by Scanlon or a staff member.

Although the incessant ringing of the telephone and the constant harangues of various representatives of student groups would seem to have an adverse effect on a person's nerves, Scanlon appears undaunted by them. "I have an adequate and more than competent staff, who always get the work done, although, at times it eludes me as to how they do it," he said.

"Our job is to advise," he stressed. "We cannot force a group to change their minds on a matter, unless it is in direct contrast with University regulations." For example, if a group wishes to sponsor an activity—a dance or a concert—Scanlon can only offer advice as to the feasibility of holding the activity on a certain date, or to the feasibility of the activity itself. His personal opinion of the activity carries no weight at all. If the group, as sometimes occurs, chooses not to heed his advice, it is perfectly free to do so. But, in most cases, they find that his advice will help rather than hinder them.

Unlike many who are new to a job, Scanlon does not believe in making any moves towards reorganization this soon. "I believe that a time period of at least six months to a year is needed before any major changes should be made. Of course, many of our methods are outmoded, but the majority of them were, in the first place, established for good reasons and have held up under the test of time," he explained.

All in all, it appears the extra-curicular affairs of University students are in the hands of a man who has the best interests of the students at heart.

How to tell if you're an Ale Man

You'd rather play football than watch.

You don't let a little thing like cold weather interfere with your surfing. You wear a wet suit and go, go, go.

You still think James Bond books are better than James Bond movies.

You know the name and phone number of your Ballantine Ale distributor by heart. You should. You've called him enough to arrange for parties.

"Your friends think that four-on-the-floor is it. Your last car had a five-speed box."

You don't have to read an ad like this to find out if you're an Ale Man. You know you're an Ale Man because you graduated from beer ages ago. But you're still explaining to your friends how Ballantine Ale is light like beer but packs a lot more taste. You wish they'd discover the clean, dry, tangy taste of Ballantine Ale for themselves—and let you do the things an Ale Man likes to do.

Dedicated to Ale Men everywhere.
May their numbers increase.

Gorman Oaks Shade Maples; Smashers, Hi-Los Win Again

by TOM CONUEL, Sports Staff

The unbeaten Gorman Oaks just missed being upset by the lowly Maples in Tuesdays most exciting game. The Oaks, who own a perfect 6-0 record, were barely able to nudge the fired up Maple team, 7-6.

The Smashers from Adams House also remained unbeaten as they turned back the Spartans, 22 - 13. Henry DeSantis's safety late in the third quarter turned the tide against the Spartans and sparked the Smashers to victory. The powerful Hi-Los smashed the Hicks, 31-0, and in the process ran their record to 6-0.

Vic Pappadinas threw five TD passes in leading the Trojans to a 26-9 conquest of the Hoovers, while the Senators shut out the Bulldogs, 6-0. The Flaming A's were trailing the Apples, 13-6, at the half, but rallied to win, 27-13.

Alec Vyce continued his outstanding play as he led the Redwoods to a 46-12 victory over the Hemlocks. Vyce had five TD passes and one TD run.

Elsewhere in Dorm action the Pines whipped the Elms, 12-6, the Seagrams conquered the Academics, 7-0, the Monuments took the measure of the Terrors, 30-13, and the Lemons, sparked by Johnson's fine pass receiving, edged the Limes, 24-19.

In the Independent League, battle for first place, Courtesy crushed Westview, 33-13, as Bill Klaes connected for five TD passes. Dick Ahern passed for six TD's in leading Stockbridge to a 49-2 victory over the Renegades. The Sololossas blanked the Fisheries, 27-0. Ron Kowalski completed 20 of 28 passes in that game.

Rounding out the action, it was the Lucky 13's 25, the Upper Imps 20, and the Buffaloes 13, the Trojans 6.

All ballots for the All-Star team must be returned to the Intramural Office by Friday, October 28, so that selections may be announced with ample time for practice.

Redman, Wildcat, Husky Share Yankee Plaudits

New Hampshire halfback Bill Phillips, Connecticut guard Roy Lawrence, and Massachusetts sophomore Randy Robinson have been selected as the Yankee Conference outstanding back, lineman and sophomore of the week.

Phillips, UNH's hard-running back, was a standous in defeat. Against undefeated Vermont he carried 14 times for 83 yards, returned a kickoff 71 yards and punted twice for a 39-yard average.

Lawrence continued his outstanding place-kicking for Connecticut. The junior guard kicked a Yankee Conference record field goal of 50 yards, added another from 26 yards and also booted two extra-points as UConn edged Maine, 20-19. Lawrence was chosen for the second straight week and also was an E.C.A.C. choice for the second time.

Robinson, a sophomore defensive end, was inserted into the Massachusetts line-up as a last-minute replacement for injured letterman Paul Mlinar. He intercepted two passes deep in Redmen territory to stop Rhode Island drives and then intercepted a Ram pass attempt on an extra-point try. Robinson was chosen to this week's E.C.A.C. team also.

Other nominations were backs Bob Mitchell (Vermont), Gene Campbell (Connecticut), Greg Landry (Massachusetts), Paul Keany (Maine) and Brent Kaufman (Rhode Island).

Linemen cited were Joe Soldano (Vermont), Rod Brooks (Massachusetts), Frank Geiselman (Rhode Island), John White (Maine), and Bill Vasilios (New Hampshire).

Sophomore nominations were John Stroker (Vermont), Bill DiYeso (Connecticut), Tom Fay (Rhode Island), and Joe O'Connell (Maine).

20 Hoop Candidates Hit Hard-Court Again

Basketball Coach Jack Leaman welcomed 20 candidates Monday to the initial practice for the 1966-67 season.

Leaman, starting his first season as coach of the Redmen, has a nucleus of seven lettermen. The squad breakdown shows five seniors, six juniors and nine sophomores.

Lettermen are seniors Tim Edwards, 6'4, John Lisack 6'4, Mike Meola, 5'11, Bob Murphy, 6'1, and Frank Stewart, 6'4 and juniors Gary Gasperack, 6'5, and Billy Tindall, 6'5.

Other returning squad members are juniors Don Alberico, 6', Jim Girotti, 6'5, Rick Perkins, 6'3, and Greg Rand, 6'5. Sophomore candidates are Joe DiSarcina, 5'11, John Dreyer, 6'5, Alan Fisher, 6'3, Peter Gayeska, 6'9, Mike Gamei, 6'2, Lonnie Lehrer, 6'4, John Shockro, 6'2, Marc Widdis, 6' and John Mitsakos, 6'.

Massachusetts will play a 25-game schedule that includes trips to the Boston Garden Tournament and the All-American Tournament in Oklahoma City. The Redmen will play Manhattan while Boston College meets Syracuse in the opening round at Boston Garden, December 20. The winners and losers will play the next night.

At Oklahoma City the tournament includes Stanford, DePaul, Arizona State, Texas, Temple, Montana State and Oklahoma City. That tournament is December 27-30.

COACH LEAMAN
Main aim: the conference

The Redmen will also be playing such independent powers as Boston College, Providence, Fairfield, Army, Syracuse, Holy Cross, and St. John's University. However, the main aim of Coach Leaman is the Yankee Conference Championship and the automatic berth in the NCAA University Division Champion-

Please don't zlupf Sprite. It makes plenty of noise all by itself.

Sprite, you recall, is the soft drink that's so tart and tingling, we just couldn't keep it quiet.

Flip its lid and it really flips. Bubbling, fizzing, gurgling, hissing and carrying on all over the place.

An almost excessively lively drink.

Hence, to zlupf is to err.

What is zlupfing?

Zlupfing is to drinking what smacking one's lips is to eating.

It's the staccato buzz you make when draining the last few deliciously tangy drops of Sprite from the bottle with a straw.

Zzzzzlllupf!

It's completely uncalled for. Frowned upon in polite society. And not appreciated on campus either.

But. If zlupfing Sprite is absolutely essential to your enjoyment; if a good healthy zlupf is your idea of heaven, well...all right.

But have a heart. With a drink as noisy as Sprite, a little zlupf goes a long, long way.

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

Frosh Booters Strike Early to Post 5-0 Win

by JOE DUFFY, Sports Staff

With the offense finally coming to life, the UMass Frosh booters defeated Stockbridge, 5-0, Wednesday on the lower athletic field.

The Frosh took control from the start and were never headed by the determined Stockbridge club. Foreward Dick Meyer took a pass from Mark Joyce and belted it into the Stockbridge net at the six-minute mark of the first period.

Defense Held

The Stockbridge defense held thereafter and the quarter closed with the Little Redmen in command, 1-0.

In the second period, Meyer and Joyce executed a replay of the first goal with Meyer taking a long pass from the corner from Joyce and booting it cleanly into the net.

John Way then scored on a fine pass from Ron Labrecque to put the Little Redmen out in front, 3-0, at the conclusion of the first half.

Struck Quickly

The Frosh struck quickly in the third period with Martin Mughogho netting two goals on assists from Meyer and Vince Saka for the fourth and fifth scores of the day.

Although there were no tallies in the final frame there was plenty of action around both nets as coaches Pete Broaca of UMass and Steve Kosakowski of Stockbridge substituted freely.

Broaca cited the fine defensive efforts of halfbacks Mike Phippard and Paul Bregoli. The victory evens the Little Redmen's record at 2-2. The team's next encounter is today at Tufts with action slated to start at 3 p.m.

LANDRY, ROBINSON GRID FEATS MERIT VARSITY 'M' CLUB KUDOS

Defensive end Randy Robinson and quarterback Greg Landry were honored by the UMass Varsity "M" Club for their outstanding defensive and offensive contributions in Saturday's game with Rhode Island.

Robinson, a sophomore inserted into the Redmen lineup as a last minute replacement for injured Paul Minar, was previously cited by the ECAC and Yankee Conference for his three interceptions. Landry piloted the Redmen past the Rams, 14-9.

Officers of the "M" Club for 1966-67 are President Bob Foote '62; Vice-president Dave Kelly '67; Treasurer Bernie Bussel '49; and Secretary Dick Bresciani '60.

LARRY MARTIN
A three-year veteran

The Goalie: Manning the Focus of Activity

CARL GUSTAFSON
"You like to have him around"

Who's Who in UMass Nets

by TIM MURPHY, Sports Staff

He is a rare breed at the University who is both athlete and chemical engineer.

One of that breed is Larry Martin, three-year veteran of intercollegiate soccer wars, All-Yankee Conference choice, goal tender extraordinaire.

Larry came to UMass in 1963 armed with three years of impressive credentials as net minder at New Bedford High School. He stepped immediately into the starting goal position on the freshman team.

The following year Larry jumped to the varsity. His record for his first season under Coach Larry Briggs was impressive as he racked up three shutouts and allowed but 16 goals in 10 encounters, ending the campaign with a 1.6 goals-against average.

Last season he led the Redmen booters to a piece of the tripartite Yan-Con crown as he authored four shutouts and surrendered but 13 tallies during the 10-game season. His goals-against average was 1.3 per game.

Larry has not been quite so sharp in competition thus far this year. He has been victimized for six goals in the three complete and two partial games in which he has played.

He lists senior co-captain Mike Russo as being responsible for the spirit of the club. "He's a real hard-fighting type, and you can't help looking up to him," Larry explained. He also singled out center half Aba Ayanaba for his outstanding contributions to the team.

Larry, who is a brother of TEP, has no definite plans for grad school as yet. "I hope to do some work in the electrical engineering field for a year or so. Then, maybe, I'll return for graduate work."

by HARVEY ELMAN, Sports Staff

"He is the kind of guy you like to have around. He's a hard work, a plugger, and a team man."

This opinion by soccer Coach Larry Briggs indicates his high regard for reserve goalie Carl Gustafson. Adds Briggs, "I like Carl's attitude. He constantly shows improvement and has worked hard in pre-season practice for two years."

Carl is currently battling Larry Martin for the starting job. Martin, however, is more experienced. Thus far, Carl has played only the second half of the 5-0 romp over Maine and most of the Trinity game. Briggs, however, says that Gustafson will see a lot of action in future games, as there is very little difference between the two goalies.

The 6-ft., 180-lb. junior from Greenfield feels that his reserve role gives him stronger incentive. Says Carl, "I work twice as hard to correct my mistakes and to bring out my potential."

Carl's soccer career started at Mt. Hermon when he was asked to tend goal because of the great hands that he displayed as a basketball player.

Another battle looms for Carl next year when promising freshman goalie Pete Schofield joins the varsity. This battle will renew an old hometown and school rivalry as Schofield starred at Deerfield Academy.

Carl, 21, is an Accounting major who eventually hopes to become a C.P.A. after a career as a commercial airlines pilot. He is a brother of Beta Phi and a dorm counselor at James House.

Carl's greatest soccer thrill came last year when he played the second half of a 6-1 victory over UNH. This win gave the Redmen a share of the Yan-Con title with UConn and Vermont.

Beleaguered Redmen Confront B.U. In '66 Homecoming Football Tussle

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

Boston University brings its best football team in years to Alumni Stadium tomorrow to meet the Redmen in the Homecoming contest at 1:30.

The Terriers have perhaps the best 2-3 record in New England. After losing their opener to powerful Colgate, they have beaten Maine and Buffalo decisively and lost to Temple and Holy Cross by three points each.

B.U. coach Warren Schmakel has transformed the Terriers from a perennial loser to a New England power in his three years there. Long an eastern power, B.U. experienced a sharp decline in football around 1957, a nose-dive which continued until last year when a large contingent of sophomores led them to a 5-3-1 record.

Those sophomores are juniors now, giving the Terriers a solid nucleus of experienced performers. UMass coach Vic Fusia calls them "big, strong and fast" on both offense and defense.

The injury epidemic which has befallen UMass this year continues unendingly. Fortunately for the Redmen, tackle Dick Qualey, who was injured last week against Rhode Island, will be back in action tomorrow. Also returning to the lineup will be defensive end Paul Mlinar and tackle Doug Faucette.

Tackle Bill Connor and halfback-end-cornerback Bob Ellis are still doubtful starters, due to injuries in the Rhody game.

Unbalanced Line

B.U. offers a strong defense, featuring an unbalanced line. On offense, the Terriers are equally adept at passing and running. Tom Thornton, the junior quarterback, is a scrambler who excels at passes and bootlegs. He is described as a great third down man, and has completed 47 of 97 passes for 465 yards and four touchdowns.

His favorite targets are captain Bob Nichols, the tight end, and wingback Neil Smith. Nichols is the deep receiver, and has caught 13 passes for three touchdowns. Smith, a sure-handed junior, had pulled in 20.

Pete Dexter is the other halfback, a fleet-footed soph who has been clocked at 9.7 at 100 yards. The fullback is Roger Rosinski, a hard-running junior with 258 yards rushing.

After last week's Holy Cross game, Schmakel praised the blocking of his offensive line as the best he has had in his three seasons at B.U. It is led by center Jim Ashley, tackle Bob McWeeny and guard Jeff Brown.

Young, But Big

The Terrier defense is young, but it is big and storng. Schmakel called the performance last week of defensive tackles Ray Norton and Wilson Whitty the "best I've ever seen by a pair of tackles in one football game. They were fantastic." Other standouts on the line include middle guard Bill Rafferty and end John Gallagher.

Bill Campbell, the Terriers' top linebacker, set a B.U. record for most tackles in a season last year. Cliff Burton, a sophomore, has nailed down the other spot.

The defensive secondary is more than adequate, headed by soph Fred McNeilly and safety Dick Farley. The latter, an outstanding trackman, was switched to safety from offensive halfback.

Reggie Rucker, another sophomore speedster, is a dangerous punt returner. He averages 27 yards a return and ran one back for a 71-yard touchdown against Holy Cross.

Although the B.U. quarterbacks have completed 48 percent of their passes, they have given up 13 interceptions, a possible factor for the UMass defensive backs who have been so outstanding recently.

"We're still not at full strength," Fusia said, "but each day and each week I respect this team more." He praised the team's pride and character, and said that "when you have that kind of team you can't count them out until the final whistle."

Record Crowd?

A record turnout is expected at Alumni Stadium tomorrow for the Redmen's homecoming tussle with Boston University.

Officials say that approximately 18,000 alumni, students and fans will jam the concrete edifice now in its second year. If attendance goes as anticipated the crowd will eclipse the record of 17,400 persons who viewed last season's contest with Holy Cross.

Among the spectators will be Massachusetts Attorney General Edward W. Brooke, a B.U. alumnus, who will nevertheless sit on each side for a half.

UMass-B. U. Series Dates to Gay '90's

by AL PEAKES
Sports Staff

The depleted forces of UMass will attempt tomorrow to reward a partisan Homecoming crowd with a win over Boston University in the 12th renewal of a series dating back to 1892.

Redmen followers may well recall last season's triumph at Nickerson Field when Coach Vic Fusia's gridders stormed from a 12-6 halftime deficit to crush the Scarlet and White, 34-18, with three touchdowns in five minutes during a spirited third-quarter offensive.

Tom Thornton, a junior signal caller who tomorrow will take up anew his rivalry with Greg Landry, provided the Terriers' offensive punch as he hit on 14 of 27 passes for a record 260 yards. Landry handled his duties with dispatch, rolling up 89 yards rushing and 104 in the air.

The Terriers have bitten off a sizeable 7-4 edge in the long series, but have dropped the last three encounters to UMass.

Prior to their recent successes UMass had not topped a Terrier contingent since the series' initial battle in 1892. The Redmen romped to victory in the Gay Ninety tussle, 62-0. The trouncing so disheartened the Terriers that they did not play another game that year, and did not schedule the Redmen again until 1956.

The new era brought about a complete reversal of fortune as the terrors of Commonwealth Avenue reeled off seven successive victories against the Amherst aggregation.

In 1963 the trend was reversed when a stout Redmen defense and quarterback Jerry Whelchel enabled Fusia's forces to emerge victorious, 21-0. The victory was followed by a 28-7 Homecoming triumph in 1964 and last year's 34-18 second half runaway.

FIVE ENCORES

FIEDLER TOPS HOMECOMING

by PAT GROTH, Staff Reporter

An appreciative and enthusiastic capacity audience filled the Cage Sunday afternoon to listen to Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra.

An entertaining afternoon it turned out to be with Fiedler responding to the tumultuous applause with five delightful encores. The orderly and mannerly crowd met Fiedler with a standing ovation at his entrance, in anticipation of the fine music to come.

Immediately after the applause had softened, the Pops burst into a brisk arrangement of Pomp and Circumstance. Weber's overture to Oberon followed, filled with sensitive celli and vibrant French horns. Next came Fantasia on Greensleeves, as arranged by Vaughan Williams, with languid flute melody interwoven with harp arpeggios.

The versatile Pops moved from the pastoral Middle Ages to flashing Spanish rhythms with Capriccio Espagnale by Rimsky-Korsikoff. A lively clarinet solo, repeated throughout the work by a plaintive oboe and muted horn, opened the piece. A high point of a later movement was a cornet fanfare accompanied by vigorous percussion.

Following the intermission, Mr. Fiedler was presented a certificate proclaiming him "an honorary alumnus for his outstanding work in the commonwealth, in the nation, and in the world of music," by John Webster, chairman of the homecoming committee.

The suite from Carmen by Bizet opened the second half of the concert running the gamut of musical expression from heavy bassoon to melancholy English horn to light piccolo solos. In contrast to the Bizet selection was the lilting Voices of Spring, a collection of waltzes by Johann Strauss with moving strings and lively tympani accompaniment.

The highlight of the second half of the program were familiar selections from The Sound of Music, particularly appealing to the audience who responded with great applause. Final number was Look Sharp—Be Sharp, straight from the razor blade commercial.

Conductor Fiedler was called back for three curtain calls by the appreciative audience before he raised his baton for an encore, "More" from Mondo Cane, that progressed from a lyrical melody with French horn and violin to a subtle bossa nova style. Called back for a second encore, the Pops broke into a jazz version of the theme from Mame with brassy trombones and singing strings.

For his third encore, Fiedler selected the full orchestral sound of Love is a Many-Splendored Thing. A cue card announced the fourth encore—the theme from Batman, complete with cornet dissonances. To cap the entire program, Fiedler presented the spirited classic march, Sousa's Stars and Stripes Forever.

The audience was ecstatic, calling Fiedler back for six curtain calls before allowing him and his accomplished musicians to leave. The program itself was a marvelous success, containing reasonably well-known music ranging from the Middle Ages to the twentieth century, from pastoral melodies to brassy jazz.

It was a program that everyone could enjoy.

Clay Named Acting Library Director

David Clay, a former assistant professor, was named acting director of libraries by University of Massachusetts trustees Saturday pending a fulltime appointment to the new post.

The trustees created the job under library reorganization plans. The director will have full administrative control of all the libraries. At present, each library has its own director.

At the meeting no mention was made of a suit against the university filed by Hugh Montgomery of Amherst who claims he was told to "step down" from his post as librarian because of the reorganization. UMass officials last week denied Montgomery's job will change and said he is "on tenure" and will be unaffected.

In other action the trustees appointed a committee to handle representation between the Massachusetts State Employers Association and any labor union interested in representing UMass employees. The committee consists of Hugh Thompson of Milton, Joseph P. Healy of Arlington and George L. Pumphrite of Dorchester.

A Springfield native, Paul A. Gagnon, was named acting dean of faculty at UMass, Boston. The trustees are expected to make a permanent appointment to the new post soon. Gagnon is an assistant professor in Boston.

Publications Advising . . . A Profession

Editor's Note: Following are excerpts of a speech given by Alvin Oickle, adviser to Collegian, at NCCPA Conference Oct. 20.

I believe advising is and should be recognized as a profession. And I define the word "profession" as many newsmen do when they speak of their "profession." They claim it is more a "feeling" than a meeting of firm standards. To be a professional, above all else, one must feel he is a professional.

Of course, it takes more than that. He must be an expert in all the delicate, gray areas that he regularly runs into. Book learning can help solve some of the problems but the professional's best standbys are good old-fashioned common sense, a respect for the dignity of man and a yen to remain expert in the ever-changing body of knowledge that we call communications.

Through the past dozen years at the University of Massachusetts, we have had a lot of consultants and few advisers. Nobody has been paying much attention to our student publications . . . nobody, that is, except a small group of students among the 13,000.

As a result, our student humor magazine was censured last May in the State Senate, our student magazine issued to welcome students back to campus still has not made its appearance six weeks after the start of school, and the student newspaper has had more troubles than a journalism teacher with five preparations each semester.

In the 26 months I have been at UMass, there have been five editors-in-chief, four feature editors, five sports editors, at least a dozen news editors and no circulation manager until last month.

There seems to be an unwritten rule that when a student's grade average sinks below 2.0 he automatically becomes eligible for an editorship. And when he becomes editor, of course, his cum is bound to go nowhere but down to 1.6, at which point he is placed on academic warning and usually quits.

I would not want you to conclude, however, that UMass has What's in a name? He whom we call Jacky Vernon by any other name would be as humorous.

Humbly presenting his act, the first attraction of UMass's first night club proceeded to smoothly win over Saturday night's restless, expectant audience.

He began by psycho-analyzing himself. "My ideal of a wild time, he said, was eating oatmeal cookies with Koolaid." Everything seemed to go wrong for him when he was young. "I had a rocking horse . . . that died. M&M's used to melt in my hands."

As he grew older, conditions worsened. When he filled his car with gas, the tiger in his tank ate the muffler.

Poor Jacky had a weight problem. Every time a girl refused him a date, he would eat a piece of Bavarian cream pie. "One time, recalled the poker-faced comedian, I ate thirty-two pieces of Bavarian cream pie."

He later proceeded to offer some advice to his receptive audience. "If you happen to be in the woods this week-end, don't forget about forest fires. Remember, forest fires prevent bears."

Winding up his routine, the comedian commented, "You're a wonderful audience, you have a wonderful band . . . This is a recording."

All the world is a stage—and the glittering Shirelles, four of its most devoted actresses.

Opening up the second act in a splash of rose chiffon, they sang "Work It Out," followed by such favorites as "Days Like This," and "I Feel Good Now."

Next, "Mickey Mouse" the comedian of the group introduced her lovely companions—Shirley, the lead singer; Debra Lee, the quiet one, and Doris, the peppy introducer. A special introduction to the Soul-Rockers, their romping band accompaniment, was added.

The Shirelles ended up in a blast of applause.

But soft, what light through yonder wing breaks? It is Dionne Warwick, the main attraction of the show.

After majestically greeting a psyched-up audience, the sophisticated Calypso began to sing such tunes as "Don't Make Me Over," "Who Can I Turn To,"

English Professor Deeply Concerned

by ANDREY WYKE

Will the church fail us again as it did in Nazi Germany? This thought-provoking question was pondered by Andrew Fetler, associate profesor of English during a Collegian interview.

The discussion started when Fetler was asked about his novel, The Travelers. Deviating from the book's central idea—the church in Nazi Germany—he thought about the current role of the church. A charming native of Latvia, he seemed quite worried about the failure of the church to state its position on such problems as race riots.

Fetler's face lit up when discussing the courses he is teaching. Aside from a graduate course and freshman honors English, he is teaching Masterpieces of Western Literature—"the greatest course at this university."

Said Fetler, "a few of us are teaching the course as a seminar type one night a week. Often the students become so involved in discussion they stay after the 2½ hours."

Strangely, even though he is a teacher of creative writing, he seemed hard put to define "creative writing." But finally he decided the best description is: bringing order to chaos. "An author must see events as connecting, such as the Hatch, class and home, before he can write," he explained.

Candid, even boyish, Andrew Fetler shows himself as a man interested in his students, enthusiastic about his courses, and deeply concerned about his society.

PROFESSION . . .

simply given up on the publications. Some of them have become so bad and the staffs so poorly organized that the administration and the faculty are both working with the students in an attempt to bring order out of the chaos.

A commission on student publications is now winding up its work and is expected soon to develop a program featuring what it calls "strong advisership."

A Faculty Senate committee last spring recommended a new procedure for the student publications. It suggested that the students would consult their adviser before making any policy changes or writing anything which would represent a policy change.

Under this plan, the adviser would simply offer his opinion about the written material or the proposed policy change. The students would be free to accept or reject the advice. The idea was to bring to the total thinking the accumulation of maturity and experience the adviser might have.

I would get as many advisers in the Collegian newsroom as possible . . . one for advertising, one for circulation, one for editorials and so on right down the line through news and sports.

I believe strongly that a staff of advisers who develop a coordinated system of working with students will have fun at an experience that, after all, we should be trying to make educational.

In the UMass case, we are haunted by the negligence of the past few years. There has been no style book; there is no policy manual. Indeed, we were informed as the semester began that even the constitution had expired. We had only a thriceweekly newspaper and a limping staff as our assets.

A few weeks ago, I decided that the time had come for me either to start functioning as an adviser or to quit as a consultant.

I gathered the 25 or so editors around me — we have what amounts to a separate staff for each edition—and told them that I wanted to play on a winning team. This meant getting a constitution, a policy manual, a style book and, most of all, getting the staff organized. And I proposed to work with them to acquire these necessities. More important, I told them, I wanted a spirit of professionalism.

Is student publications advising a profession?

I say it must be if we are to help our students along the path to developing into happy, helpful citizens. In a world where we have such trouble communicating, one person to one person, one nation to one nation, what could be more professional than helping guide tomorrow's communicators into the channels of understanding and interpreting?

Judicial Procedure Questioned

Recent disciplinary action against a Univ. of Md. freshman charged with possession of marijuana has raised due process questions over the University's judicial procedure.

Robert F. Sauer, 18, of Baltimore, was released Oct. 9 on bond after being arrested in his dorm room for illegal possession of marijuana and barbituates two days earlier.

A University spokesman reported that the Office of the Executive Dean for Student Life has suspended Sauer from housing for "believed possession of Marijuana."

There is no specific regulation at Maryland prohibiting the possession of the drug, but University regulations state that residents who fail to observe "accepted standards of conduct" may be asked to leave their dormitories.

In "extreme cases where the conduct of a student may not be in conformity with the best interests of the University," the rule continues, a student may be dismissed from school.

Sauer's status as a student will be decided by University officials, the spokesman added. Darrell F. Rishel, director of ju- The case will probably go to diciary affairs, he said. Rishel's office usually handles student disciplinary cases.

Several students questioned whether the University's disciplinary action, which by-passed a system of student courts, constituted a denial of the rights to due process of law within the University.

University action was likewise questioned because it paralleled legal proceedings by the state, thus possibly subjecting Sauer to double jeopardy for his alleged offense.

In a similar marijuana case at the Univ. of Pa. two weeks earlier, a sophomore student was put on disciplinary probation until he graduates. Prosecution was subsequently initiated by the State.

In that instance, students protested that the University took action before the legal guilt of the accused student was determined.

A preliminary Maryland hearing for Sauer has been set for Nov. 15. Officials emphasized that he was arrested for possession of marijuana and barbituates and not for the use of drugs.

Possession of barbituates is a misdemeanor in Maryland. However, possession of narcotics is a felony. Marijuana is considered a narcotic.

Police reportedly acted on a tip in making the arrest. A search warrant has been obtained before officials entered the dorm and arrested Sauer, who was alone at the time.

Federal narcotics agents, state police, and University officials cooperated in the arrest.

Math Lecture Series

Dr. Wu-yi Hsiang, Institute for Advanced Study, will deliver a series of six lectures on compact Lie group representation theory, differential transformation groups, and differential topology and geometry. The lectures are scheduled for Friday, October 28, 7:30 - 9:00 p.m.; Saturday, October 29, 1:00 - 2:30 p.m.; Monday, October 31, 7:30 - 9:00 p.m.; Tuesday, November 1, 4:40 - 5:40 p.m. and 8:00 - 9:30 p.m.; and (tentatively) Wednesday, November 2, 3:35 - 4:35 p.m. All lectures will be held in room 120, Engineering Building.

and "Reach Out for Me."

Next she asked the audience to participate in her famous "Walk On By." In the middle of the song, she abruptly broke off.

"I understand we have a football team in this audience. I also understand you won a game. Was this section at the game? (pointing to the left); was this section at the game? (pointing to the right) Well, let's pretend I'm the star halfback." The song resumed with full participation.

After a couple more slow, romantic numbers, she ended her act with a warm farewell and goodbye.

Webster Sets Pace

Webster House continued to set the pace for dorm accomplishment on this Homecoming weekend. By winning first prize in the float parade (dorm division) on Friday night. The theme of the float was "Safer on Saturn" and portrayed a terrier being shot out of a cannon into orbit around the planet Saturn; the float was complete with mechanical dog, real cannon, and smoke screen.

From 6-12 p.m. on Saturday evening, Webster sponsored an Open House which featured a full-course Italian dinner for only 50¢ per person. The meal included spaghetti with meat sauce, roll and butter, punch, and fresh fruit.

Both the Webster events were uniquely significant. This marks the third consecutive year that Webster has copped first place honors for its float entry, a dorm record. Also the 50¢ full-course dinner set a record for the most inexpensive meal offered anywhere in the area for last weekend. Most students took the meals directly to their own rooms, where they dined with their dates.

Members of the Webster Committee included Phil Lerner, Dick Scialabba, Dorm Pres. Chet Weinerman, Dick Schinoff, and Herb Bryan.

Lecture and Film

New Vietnam Film Footage

The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom is sponsoring a lecture and film on Vietnam: Time of the Locust.

The program, to be presented on Wed., Oct. 26 at 8 p.m. at the Unitarian Church in Amherst, will feature Jonathan Mirsky as speaker.

Mirsky, from the department of Chinese language and literature at Dartmouth Col., has given over 200 lecturer throughout the United States.

He lived in Asia from 1958-62 and returned to Southeast Asia in 1965 under the auspices of the Inter-University Committee for Debate of Foreign Policies.

With the speech will be shown the first area presentation of a controversial and shocking film on Vietnam. The film was taken from Japanese and American TV footage, including some Japanese film footage that has never before been shown.

The evening is open to all — coffee will be served.

Students who think that they might qualify for the Federal Work Study Program should apply with Mr. Siegrist in the Placement Office.

Eligibility is based upon financial need of the student's family if he is claimed as a dependent or on the student's own financial need if he is a self-supporting student.

If found to be eligible, the Placement Office will assign the student to a job either on campus or with a non-profit organization off campus.

Friday Night

The Weekend Begins

by BOB GORMAN

The Friday night dance was as unique as the other activities that night. After a failure to get the names of the float winners and a very reluctant bonfire, the dance began.

The Hot Nuts, who have a name for being gross, sang only a few off-beat songs. Even these songs were sung very softly, much to the disappointment of some people.

Besides this, the Nuts had a sound problem. Considering that the group is made up of 8 people, the sound was very poor. At one point all the amplification stopped.

Most of the songs that the group sang were of the slower beat. However, when they picked up the beat they really moved.

The Blues Project provided the other half of the entertainment. A group of 5, they sang mostly rhythm and blues.

They conveyed a feeling of doing their best for every song, though some people complained that they were prototypes of the Lovin' Spoonful.

However, the Blues Project used a good deal of their own material. One song, "Two Trains Running from My Life," was about 10 minutes long, it kept its beat all the way through.

Probably the greatest accomplishment of the night was the lighting. Though for the Hot Nuts the lighting was less obvious than it was for the Blues Project.

The changing colors literally kept pace with the Blues Project's songs. Towards the end the audience could see as well as hear the music.

Usually the lighting in the ballroom is one steady color for the night and at best any color changes are very slight. However, Friday night's lighting was the work of professionals. At least four technicans were in the control room, constantly using lights to compliment the mood created by the groups.

The big thing that the lighting technicians proved was that lighting can be used as a form of secondary art; and if you don't believe this, see one of Tennessee Williams' or Sean O'Casey's plays. Or better yet, go to a Happening.

Campus Comment

The Hanging

by Don Aliferis, Day Editor

The College of Arts and Sciences has a three year science or math requirement. By itself, this restriction is an obvious infringement of intellectual liberty, and an obstacle to growth.

Yet this is not the only imposition contained in the requirement policy. There are at least two more aggravating factors.

First, the science curriculum in the College of Arts and Sciences is limited in the range of its course offerings e.g. it lacks a basic Embryology or Meteorology course. Secondly, and more significantly, the academes who maintain the requirements strongly discriminate in their definition of science fulfilling courses. For example, physical Geography courses are not accepted as equivalents to Botany, Chemistry, Physics, Geology, etc. This is ironic if not absurd since physical Geography is considered a "sister-science of Geology." (Dr. H.T.U. Smith, Head of Geology Dept.).

The science requirement becomes, in effect, a stranglehold based on the prejudices of the academic deans of the College of Arts and Sciences. There are other more flagrant examples. Science courses in the College of Agriculture, e.g., Conservation of Natural Resources, are not accepted as science fulfillments. One can only shudder a the nasal elevation implied by such exclusion.

An academic noose is placed around the necks of students in the College of Arts and Sciences. It is pulled to its asphyxiating end by the limitations inherent in a deficient curriculum, and by the policy of discrimination practiced by the academic oligarchy.

A Dance or a Life

by Chet Weinerman, Editorial Chairman

On Saturday evening, an announcement was made at the Homecoming Dance stating an emergency need for blood at Cooley Dickinson Hospital. Any students who were over 21 or who were 18 and could secure parental permission were urged to travel to Cooley immediately.

Eleven students at the dance forgot their dates, forgot the good time they were having, and were rushed to the hospital by police escort. They may have saved the life of a patient in critical condition who needed a certain type of blood, a type whose supply had unexpectedly expired.

"You mean about those really great kids who came out when we needed them so urgently?" was the way in which the Collegian inquiry at Cooley was answered last evening. Mrs. Russell, the evening supervisor added, "Those kids showed remarkably mature judgment in coming."

This act of unselfishness and sacrifice should not go unheralded. The eleven involved students should be recognized by the University community. They are already greatly respected—particularly by the personnel at Cooley Dickinson Hospital . . . and one recovering patient. How unfortunate that the tabloids would not recognize this story as worthy of printing.

Pops The Tops

by Jack Dean, Editorial Staff

"Enthusiastic"—a rather strange description of UMass students. But this is the word used by Arthur Fiedler to sum up the reception of his Pops Concert yesterday afternoon in the Cage.

When asked how his UMass audience compared with those at other colleges, the maestro simply stated, "They're all wonderful — college students are always great. They're the same across the country."

However, a member of his personal traveling party did comment that few colleges had been so enthusiastically appreciative, and that Mr. Fiedler was very conscious of this fact and pleased because of it.

The Boston Pops was great—the audience was great. The concert was a wonderful "change of pace" from the usual diet of big weekend rock'n roll bands, even though most of them have been tops.

Perhaps yesterday was an indication that there is still hope for the now stereotyped image of an uncultured, apathetic UMie. Let's hope there is really hope.

"Holy Mackerel"

To the Editor:

Holy mackeral—where is the furniture I had in my room? What are all the books and things doing on my bed that I had on the extra chair in my room?? These are the things I and many of my constituents asked ourselves when we got back to our rooms one day last week. It seems as if members of housing and maintenance had invaded our dormitory to take out all extra furniture left from last year. Great! Thanks! Now there is more space in the rooms, but what of the inconvenience to the residents of the room?

First, please let us know when you're coming so we can get things ready for you. Let us put our belongings someplace else so they do not hinder your work and so our rooms will not be a shambles.

Second, let me congratulate those involved for your tremendous timing; the removal of extra furniture, especially beds a few days before Homecoming Weekend was just super. If it was your purpose to make guests of the student body sleep on the floor or on three to two beds, let me congratulate you for your excellent timing. But then again, maybe those involved did not know that a big weekend was coming up. I have been taught that a little bit of consideration goes a long way, that it is very much appreciated, and that it works both ways! AND YOU ?

Lewis Smith
Senator, James House

On The Wagon

To the Editor:

Finally, there is a grinder truck. We, being a few of the thousands of hungry students every night (we eat in the commons), enjoy great pleasure in eating a snack at night. Up until this week there had been no grinderman at all. Now, in front of Gorman House, on Butterfield Terr., a grinder truck is located. Contrary to last year's trucks, this truck is brand new, made of clean stainless steel. The food is premade and sealed, thus eliminating the possibility of finding worms and other insects crawling around in the sandwiches, as was the case in some instances last year.

This truck, run by Automatique, Inc., is fine except for one thing. The truck can only park on town roads, not on campus roads. Therefore, because we live in the Orchard, we starve along with hundreds of others. Granted, the University has set up some snack bars on Campus, but these are not sufficient to meet the needs of the total campus. The truck offers a variety of food different from that found in the snack bars.

We think it is very unfair that one part of the University student body should be allowed to have this food service while the others cannot. Likewise, all the students in Southwest, the Towers, and the Women's Quad go hungry. We think the University officials should consider the wants and needs of the students. The students want this food, as witnessed by the crowds surrounding the truck each night at Gorman House.

This truck is very hygienically clean. The University could not object to it on the basis of health. We think the University should give permission for a truck such as this to circulate to all the strategic points on campus, and thus service the total student body.

Food For Scandal

To the Editor:

Men on this campus are now subject to de facto curfews. We all know the real reason why, but when these curfews are challenged, the answer is: "The Administration has a right to protect its property." An excellent example of how well housing protects University property is the rec room in Thatcher.

When we, Thatcher's residents, left for our summer vacation we had a den-type rec room of which we were justly proud. It was comfortable and attractive. During the summer our residence hall was turned over to poorly supervised vandals ("poverty program students"). When we returned half the furniture and rugs in that rec room of which we were so proud were gone. We are still being punished by housing for the damage committed by these brats during the summer.

What has housing said they would do to make up for this? Their tune has not changed significantly since I saw them in August. There is a chance that housing, through its extreme generosity, might dig up, from the ruins of Plymouth Hovel, the furniture Plymouth had.

I, personally, am forced to wonder just what Boston's American would make of the extensive fine furniture and, University provided, color TV sets going into the towers in comparison with our punishment for what was done by persons for whom the housing office can now accept responsibility.

Robert La Tremouille

Yay, Zucki!

To the Editor:

I was elated to see the ad in last Friday's Collegian announcing that "Zucki is Coming". I was fortunate enough to see the great Zucki give one of his performances at Brooklyn College two summers ago. Zucki's future visit is a credit to those who are bringing him to the University.

To those concerned: Keep up the good work!!

A Bird in Hand is Worth Two in White House

Down in Alabama there is a law that a Governor cannot succeed himself. This law disturbed Alabama's champion of democracy, George Wallace, so he decided to have his wife run in his place. Imagine if this were to become a future political trend. Let's listen in to a conversation between a certain husband and wife in the nation's capital in 1972.

He: Well, Bird, Ah,ve bin doin' alot of thinkin' 'bout this and ah've finally made up mah mind. How would you like to run for President next year?

She: Oh Lynda, it's just what I've always wanted. But if ah run for President, what will you do?

He: You know, sometimes I think your're a real birdbrain, Lady. The plan is that you'll run for President but that Ah'll really be President. You know, like that Wallace fellah.

She: Oh, ah see now. That sounds like all kahnds uv fun. And it'll keep me busy. Since Lynda Bird fanully married "what's-his-name", ah've had nothing to do except tear down billboard signs and replace them with your picture, as part uv mah cuntinuin' hahway beautification program.

He: O.K. Then it's settled. Ah'll call a press conference timorah, and we'll make the announcement then.

She: Wonderful, darlin'; ah'll wear mah pink and organe dress.

He: Bird!!

She: All raht. If you don't want me to wear that dress, ah'll wear my peppermint-stick mink. But what should ah say at the press conference.

He: Just say how thrilled you are to be talkin' to such a fine group and then say how much you like poor people and negruz and then tell 'em how we really want peace in Vietnam and end it all up by mentioning John Kinnidee; that always works.

She: Hey, honeybird, just think if this plan works. Why in 1980, Pat kin be President . . . and in 1988 Georgie kin have his turn, and . . .

As an adjunct to the above article, Collegian readers may be interested by the following anti-campaign activity going on in Alabama. According to Tom Donovan, Collegian Editor-in-Chief, some of the Alabama delegates to the Associated Collegiate Press Association's annual national convention were seen sporting large GROW buttons on their lapels and sweaters. When questioned about this evidence of yet another button for button-conscious collegiates, the Alabamians explained that GROW buttons exemplify some of the enlightened feelings of college students in that southern state. The button means GET RID OF WALLACE.

'Collegian' Editors Attend Convention

Five Collegian editors and staff members attended the 42nd annual Associated Collegiate Press convention held in Philadelphia this weekend in conjunction with the National Council of College Publications Advisors.

Representing the paper were: Tom Donovan, Editor-in-Chief; Lynn Stow, Business Manager; Jim Foudy, Managing Editor; Jack Dean, Editorial Day Editor; and John Kelly, Collegian photographer.

Also taking an active part in the proceedings were Dr. Dario Politella and Alvin Oickle of the UMass Journalism Department.

Details of the convention will appear in Wednesday's Collegian.

Quiet, Please!

To the Editor:

At my understaffed high school library, it was not unusual to hear the mutterings of pranking students silenced by the stern voice of a staff member.

Why is it now the chore of a student to ask that the mutterings of pranking library staff members be silenced by the stern voice of the Collegian ?

This is certainly not my high school, but the library is just as noisy.

Univ. Parking Tickets Now Worthless?

Millions of university-issued parking tickets across the country may now be worthless. In a precedent-setting case, the prosecution of a Mississippi State University student for refusing to pay his campus tickets has been dismissed.

Leslie C. Cohen, a Canadian political science student at MSU, balked when the academic institution imposed $20 in parking fines without a hearing.

When the university threatened him with dismissal and state court action unless fines were paid, Cohen went to the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The LCDC secured a restraining order to prevent MSU officials from impeding Cohen's efforts to gain admission to a Canadian Law school. Cohen feared that the University would delay sending his records, would note the parking violations on his record or would not allow him to take a necessary summer session course at Mississippi State.

The LCDC subsequently challenged the constitutionality of the Mississippi statute under which the university justified its regulations. The statute granted to the State Board of Institutions of Higher Learning the power to create regulations which are municipal in effect, the LCDC charged.

While the case was before the U. S. District Court, the state attorney general, representing the university, conceded that the regulations and their manner of enforcement were nuil and void.

The university dropped its charges against Cohen and the Mississippi statute came under the consideration of a three-judge federal court.

Although the law was eventually ruled constitutional, LCDC chief counsel Alvin Bronstein said that this does not affect the due process precedent that had been raised over the tickets themselves.

Bronstein said he has already received requests for particulars on the case from legal departments of several universities.

Liberal Regulations Granted to Women

Colleges and universities are granting more liberal social regulations to women, though the privileges often entail exacting qualifications.

This fall, UMass abolished all women's hours, except for freshmen, and the Univ. of Ore. did likewise for its sophomores and juniors. For several years, seniors and women over 21 have had this privilege at Oregon.

All upperclassmen at the University of Utah are now eligible for keys to the dorms, but only if they achieve a 2.5 average (out of 4.0).

The University of Illinois will experiment this fall with unlimited hours and key privileges for seniors. If the system is successful, the loosened regulations will extend to juniors and women over 21.

Women at the University of Pennsylvania, tired of rushing back to their dormitories at two minutes to twelve because they forgot to sign out, have initiated a trial system of telephone signouts for lates. Formerly girls had to sign out personally for lates which could extend to 1:30 a.m. on weekdays and 2:15 on Saturdays. Now a girl may call her dormitory and request someone to sign her out for those hours. A girl does not have to sign out any time prior to midnight.

Although women must register their destination with house proctors in case of emergency, signout cards are placed in an envelop and not opened unless necessary.

Last year, the Penn administration allowed senior women to set their own weekend curfews. Seniors do not have keys, but ask a friend to wait for their return.

At the University of Rochester every class votes on its own curfews.

After a long battle to allow men in the rooms, women at Smith College can now entertain their male friends from two to five on Sunday afternoons. Doors have to be open six inches, and three feet must be on the floor.

And at the University of Georgia, administrators are just now allowing women to visit men's apartments. The university does not consider one room an apartment, however. Bathrooms don't count as a room either — but a kitchen might.

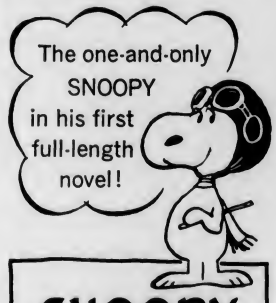
DEAR REB:

Even When She Answers, He Still Gets the Busy Signal.

DEAR REB:
Lately, every time I call my girl, she's either "not in" or "not interested." Last week I called her 23 times and couldn't even make a coffee date. The trouble started when she started dating a guy who owns a Dodge Coronet. Now she goes to parties with him, dances, football games, etc. Do you think I should call her again, or should I forget her and break her heart?

BAD CONNECTIONS

DEAR BAD CONNECTIONS:
I think your next call should be to your Dodge Dealer. Then make a date to see the '67 Coronet, the car that's breaking hearts all over America. You'll find that its good looks are pretty hard to resist. Now, before you break your girl's heart, give her another break. Ask her to go for a ride in your new Coronet. I think she'll get the signal.



Sincerely, Reb

Here's the heartbreaker . . .'67 Dodge Coronet 500. A campus favorite with its great new looks, ride, and list of extras that are standard. Like bucket seats with either a companion seat in the middle or a center console. Plush carpeting. Padded instrument panel. Padded sun visors. Seat belts, front and rear. A choice of Six or V8 models. And lots more. So get with '67 Dodge Coronet and get busy.

Visiting English Lecturer

"A Prophet of Doom"

by BARBARA PROKO

Infuriated students once "all but drove him away from Greenfield Community College on a rail", but he describes himself as a man who "wouldn't hurt a kitten".

Associated with schools throughout Europe and America, he is deeply involved with education yet feels that people cannot be taught.

"People seem to think of me as a modern Cassandra, a prophet of doom," Milton Mayer says reflectively.

"America is one of the world's best-educated countries, but it's no better off morally than a poorly-educated one like India. So what good is this education?"

A visiting English lecturer at UMass, Mayer believes that the university system does afford the "in-depth" academic education that a complex culture like America's warrants.

"Every university falls short of its pretentions, though. It aims high but never even approaches its ideal goals. The problem in life is not to know the significance of dates and definitions: the problem is to be a decent person.

"And no one can be taught that."

The nationally published author finds some negative advantages in a student's spending four years at a university.

"Chances are, a young man would be in the army if he weren't here," Mayer explains. In school at least he's not doing any overt harm to other people, and he's not being subjected to the peacetime monotony and primitivism of marching over hill, over dale.

"If a young person were working at Gimbel's, he'd probably spend his whole working life earning a slow buck," the English instructor continues. "From 5 p.m. on, he'd try to figure out ways to make a fast buck."

Little opportunity to encounter even a vision of greatness is offered by Gimbel's, in Mayer's opinion, while a university does expose students to great thoughts and ideas.

"Even if a student makes no conscious effort to take advantage of the knowledge offered, he's bound to osmose something from the atmosphere. At the very least, wandering around Goodell Library keeps kids off the streets for 4 years," Mayer says.

A major reason for a university's not fulfilling its potential, he believes, is that man has never found a way to teach other men.

"People learn, but they cannot be taught. How they learn is a mystery. The one important thing that students should be gaining in school is a resistance to the corruption that life brings. No lecture or textbook has accomplished that decently yet," Mayer maintains.

Mayer believes that "Masterpieces of Western Literature" is possibly the one indispensable course offered on this campus.

"It offers 2,000 years worth of understanding of life; no modern novel course could ever compete with that. Men like Dante and Shakespeare aren't born every day. I can't believe that any textbook writer is more intelligent than me—he'd be doing creative work if he was, instead of compiling and editing data—but I can believe that Goethe is," he says.

Mayer uses the Socratic method of teaching, explaining, "I set myself up as an interrogator —the kids do the rest. However, no really satisfactory method of causing people to learn has been found, so I'll keep experimenting.

"I don't care whether my students like me or not: I just want to make them think."

Humor Mags; Trouble Again

Things do not seem so funny for editors of college humor magazines these days.

In the latest in a series of controversies over the content of student publications, the University of Texas at El Paso has fired the Editor of "El Burro" for publishing a fictitious interview between Jesus Christ and Beatle John Lennon.

The administration has also suspended publication of the magazine for the remainder of the fall semester.

The Sept. 14 issue of "El Burro" portrayed on the cover a girl wearing bell-bottomed slacks and, in the background, a man dragging a cross away.

Following the disciplinary action against the editor, students circulated petitions backing the magazine. "El Burro" is not usually censored, but questionable material is sometimes taken to the director of student publications for approval.

Treas. Lets Students Spend Own Money

by JEANNE MERCIER

Burt Freedman sees his main duty as Student Senate treasurer "to oversee the responsibility of the students to spend their own money." He should know. Freedman, a Baker House resident majoring in government, is the man who keeps the books for the Student Senate.

As a matter of fact, Burt keeps two sets, one for the Senate itself and another for expenditures by all organizations to which the Senate appropriates funds.

Not only does he keep records of monetary transactions, but he is also the man who must see that they are carried out properly. He is the middle man, the human agent, between the requesting organization and the source of capital.

If an organization needs money it goes to Freedman. He takes the request to the Senate for approval. Once approved, RSO takes over the request. Burt must keep in contact with RSO to keep his records in order.

It's not all as simple as it sounds. For one thing, the Senate, according to Freedman, is "not too liberal". It has a complex budget which it must follow. This budget has been devised and perfected by the Student Senate and must be approved five times before it is finalized. The Senate, therefore, is extremely careful with its budget and "not lacking in responsibility".

From the student activities tax which is included in the undergraduate semester bill, the Senate treasury receives the funds which finance this wordy document. The percentage of funds for such organizations as the Collegian and Mortarboard is determined by the value that each has for the whole UMass community.

Freedman must know about such things before he can authorize formal introductions of any requests. What he doesn't know he must learn through research. For his convenience and that of all future treasurers, a records file is kept.

He is, of course, extremely pleased with the existence of these files and amazed at the competence of his predecessors who were responsible for them.

Burt, a junior from Chelsea, admits that his job is a responsible one. Aside from the figures and paper work, there is the time element. Not only does he attend Senate, executive and financial committee meetings, but he must also work with RSO, attend other organization meetings and maintain office hours.

He must make himself easily available and dedicated to his work. Despite the pressure, Burt has learned his job well. His greatest asset was his personality. Easygoing, yet concerned, he enjoys meeting people—students and administrators alike.

He is sincerely interested in the function of the Senate treasury and that of student government. For this reason, Burt Freedman finds his office "rewarding" and is able to do a creditable job.

MEDICAL SCHOOLS 'Precarious Position'

The dean of the Harvard University Faculty of Medicine warned Saturday that American medical schools are in a precarious position" and recommended five steps to bring them closer to community health planning.

Seemingly Isolated

In an address to the 77th annual meeting of the Association of American Medical Colleges, Dr. Robert H. Ebert said that today Medical Schools are "seemingly isolated from the community; drawing their majority support from biological research; unable to answer the nation's (medical) manpower needs, American medical schools are in a precarious position."

Dr. Ebert said that "medical educators must have some answers . . . some constructive ideas about the health care delivery system."

"If we fail, the alternative may be pressure (from an impatient public) to create large numbers of doctors and the modern version of the 19th Century diploma mills may reappear."

Meaningful Role

"If medical schools are to play a meaningful role in planning for health care, there must be a complete reorientation of emphasis," Dean Ebert said, adding: "We must reaxamine the present system and modify it to fit modern needs.

$5000 Grant To UMass

UMass has been granted $5000 by the New Products Division of the Gulf Research and Development Co. to support research by the department of plant and soil sciences related to the use of petroleum products in agriculture.

The funds will provide financial assistance for the study of petroleum products as binding agents to enhance the absorption efficiency of foliar applied nutrients and as a means of effectively and safely reducing moisture loss from plants. Additional studies related to the effects of some petrochemical products on the plant uptake of soil nutrients and the rate of crop maturation of some annual plants may be undertaken as well.

UMass Soph Instrumental In Volpe Campaign

by GERALD W. VIGEANT

One non-voter eagerly awaiting the results of the November eighth elections is Rick Volpe. At that time he will be able to judge the fruits of his summer's labors.

The nephew of Governor John Volpe and a sophomore at UMass, Rick was instrumental last summer in splashing the Massachusetts countryside with "Vote Volpe—He Does What He Says" signs.

Essentially a family operation, the construction of these signs is a long and tedious process. After thousands of feet of strapping and homosote and hundreds of pounds of nails and spikes were obtained, the frames were built in two sizes. Then the homosote was installed as backing for the actual poster.

When the posters themselves arrived, weeks were spent pasting them onto the frames. A complete 4' x 6' sign, Rick pointed out, weighs thirty-five pounds, while an 8' x 12' sign weighs 180 pounds.

All told, 1,950 4' x 6' signs were constructed, and 140 8' x 12' signs were completed, including those reclaimed and repaired from the last campaign.

When the signs were completed, the crew went on the road to erect them. Asked what parts of the state were stressed as key areas, Rick indicated that the Springfield area was splattered with posters because it is the door to Western Massachusetts and is also a variable district which must be carried.

Pittsfield, the biggest city in Berkshire County, was also flooded with signs. In the eastern part of the state, ordinarily Democratic strongholds which have shown tendencies in previous elections to go for Volpe; New Bedford, Taunton, Fall River, Dedham, Framingham, and the South Shore area, were pelted with posters.

Rick pointed out that no posters were erected on property unless the owner had authorized its use. Locations were determined by the Coordinator of Signs and Displays, Frances Reath, who obtained the names and addresses of Volpe's political supporters who own good locations.

The most choice spots, Rick indicated, are locations on super-highways and in the centers of cities where the most voters will see the signs. No state property, telephone poles, or city-owned trees are used.

In setting up the signs, much care is taken. Depending on the location, large signs or smaller signs are used. While they are not as strict in locating the smaller signs, since they are less expensive, the large posters are key positioned. In fact, the erection of each larger sign is a science. The observance angle as well as the location is strictly observed.

The Volpe supporters, Rick indicated, have had some trouble in former years with signs being torn down or defaced. Two years ago, 400 out of 2600 4' x 6' signs were removed or destroyed during the campaign. At Halloween time especially, Rick pointed out, all candidates take a tremendous loss in signs.

Rick feels that these signs are key factors in the campaign if they are put where they're sure to be seen by the voters.

"The only problem," Rick sighed, "is that I, the person most exposed to the "Vote Volpe" signs, won't even be able to vote!"

Free Bus to Amherst

The Retail Division of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce has announced a change in the operation of its campus-to-town Free Bus for students.

Effective immediately, Friday operation of the bus will be dropped; the service will now run on Thursdays and Saturdays, with all stops remaining the same.

Under the new schedule, occasioned by Amherst's shift to Thursday night shopping, the Free Bus will operate Thursdays between the hours of 3:45 and 7:45, and Saturdays between 11:15 in the morning and 5:15 in the afternoon.

Schedule cards posted in dormitories may simply be changed to read "Thursday" instead of "Friday."

Morin Scores in Browns' Win

Boston Patriot fans are clammering, "Bring on the Packers!" after their heroes convincingly defeated the powerful San Diego Chargers 35-17 behind Babe Parilli's passing and the bull-like thrusts of Jim Nance, whom many consider the best fullback in the game today. The win, coupled with the New York Jets' last - second 24-21 loss to the Oakland Raiders, moved the Pats to within one-half game of the division-leading Jets.

In other AFL action the fledgling Miami Dolphins stunned the Houston Oilers 20-13 for their second win and the high-powered Kansas City Chiefs took over the western division lead with a 56-10 pelting of hapless Denver.

Turning to the "other" league, Cleveland projected itself back into the title picture by trouncing Dallas 30-21. St. Louis, however, blew a chance to open up some daylight between themselves and Dallas when they were upset by Washington 26-20. Meanwhile, the New York Giants regressed to their usual inept selves while they were being bombed by a weak Philadelphia Eagle team for the second time this season 31-3.

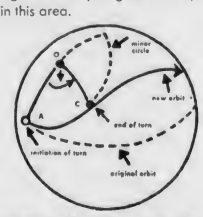
Here are 7 knotty problems facing the Air Force: can you help us solve one?

1. Repairs in space. If something goes wrong with a vehicle in orbit, how can it be fixed? Answers must be found, if large-scale space operations are to become a reality. For this and other assignments Air Force scientists and engineers will be called on to answer in the next few years, we need the best brains available.

2. Lunar landing. The exact composition of the lunar surface, as well as structural and propulsion characteristics of the space vehicle, enter into this problem. Important study remains to be done—and, as an Air Force officer, you could be the one to do it!



3. Life-support biology. The filling of metabolic needs over very extended periods of time in space is one of the most fascinating subjects that Air Force scientists are investigating. The results promise to have vital ramifications for our life on earth, as well as in outer space.

4. Space orientation. The orbital problems of a spacecraft, including its ability to maneuver over selected points on the earth, are of vital importance to the military utilization of space. There are plenty of assignments for young Air Force physicists in this area.

5. Synergetic plane changing. The ability of a spacecraft to change altitude can also be crucial to space operations. Where but in the Air Force could Sc.B.'s get the chance to work on such fascinating projects right at the start of their careers?

6. Space propulsion. As our space flights cover greater and greater distances, propulsion—more than anything else—will become the limiting factor. New fuels and new propulsion techniques must be found, if we are to keep on exploring the mysteries of space. And it may well be an Air Force scientist on his first assignment who makes the big breakthrough!

7. Pilot performance. Important tests must still be made to determine how the pilots of manned aerospacecraft will react to long periods away from the earth. Of course not every new Air Force officer becomes involved in research and development right away. But where the most exciting advances are taking place, young Air Force scientists, administrators, pilots, and engineers are on the scene.

A good way to start is through Air Force ROTC. Superior students may qualify for Air Force scholarships. Many colleges and universities also have a special 2-year Air Force ROTC program. For details, contact your nearest Air Force representative, or mail the coupon today.

Junior halfback Dick Hale was cited by Coach Larry Briggs for his outstanding defensive work against the Jumbos.

Booters Blank Jumbos With Outstanding Defense

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

The UMass soccer team handed Tufts a 4-0 loss Saturday in Medford on single goals by Gerry Cellilli, Mike Russo, Aba Ayanaba and Marty Pikul to raise its seasonal slate to 3-2-1.

The victory marked the first of the campaign for Coach Larry Briggs' boys outside of Yankee Conference competition. Prior to the Jumbo jubilee the Redmen booters had lost extra-conference battles to Amherst and Trinity while garnering victories over Yan-Con rivals UConn and Maine.

The Redmen also played to a 1-1 tie with Rhode Island in their last outing.

In the contest "the kids looked good," Briggs commented. "Our depth overpowered them and our defense was never better."

UMass' depth came to the fore in the game-play of Carl Gustafson who was minding the nets in regular goalie Larry Martin's stead. Gustafson was impressive in his debut as a starter and played all but the final three minutes.

Substitute wing Pikul, a whirling dervish from Monson Academy, accounted for the Redmen's final tally for his first counter of the season.

Also contributing substantially to the Redmen victory, according to Briggs, were center half Dick Hale who "played a very, very fine brand of defense" and forward Marty Smith.

Smith was injured in the U-Conn contest but appeared to be nearly healed from the cartilege trouble he contracted during the contest.

The Redmen entertain W.P.I. tomorrow in a 3 p.m. skirmish on Varsity Field. Briggs feels the contest should be a toss-up even though the Engineers have been bested only once in two years.

Gerry Cellilli, a junior wing from the soccer hotbed of Ludlow, scored a goal against Tufts on Saturday.

Standout Performances Pace Intramural Grid

by TOM CONUEL
Sports Staff

Statistics for intramural football point to several outstanding performances so far this year. In the fraternity league Donehue of LCA is the leading passer with a .753 completion percentage and 9 TD's. Epstein from TEP is second with .632 and 9 TD's, while Godek is third at .600 with 17 TD's. The leading receiver for the fraternities is Larson of LCA with 30 receptions. Merrill of TKE is second with 28.

In the Dorm Leagues Alyward of the Maroons is the leading passer in the East League with .582 and 11 TD's, while Polchlopek of the Bruins is second with a .550 and 12 TD's. Murphy is the leading receiver with 25 receptions. Sears of the Maroons is the leading scorer with 49 points in the East League.

In the North League the leading passer is Buckley of the Flaming A's with .635 and 12 TD's. Gedimen, also of the Flaming A's, is the leading scorer in the league with 43 points.

Pappadinas of the Trojans is the leading passer in the West League with a .622 percentage and 19 TD's. Pedro of the Hi-Los is second with .530 and 24 TD's. Sanborn of the Trojans is the league's top receiver with 42 catches.

Vyce of the Redwoods leads the Tower League in passing with .645 and 19 TD's, while Brown of the Flaming A's is second with .652 and 24 TD's. The leading receiver is Burke of the Flaming A's with 29 receptions. Larvey of the Redwoods is second with 26 receptions.

In the South League Torrey is the leading passer with .556, while Pendleton of the Limes is the top receiver with 24 passes caught.

Harriers Rout Crusaders; Seek YC Crown at URI

by TERRY CARPENTER
Sports Staff

The cross country team started off Homecoming on a winning note Saturday morning by literally running away from Holy Cross, 20-43.

The Crusaders' Quinn won individual honors but after him there were no purple jerseys in sight. Sophomore Marc Gelinas hung in with Holy Cross' star for the whole race, bowing to him over the final few hundred yards by only eight seconds.

Trailing Gelinas by 13 seconds was soph Charley Lang, and another sophomore, Paul Hoss, was fourth. Terry Carpenter, Greg Bowman, co-captain Steve St. Clair, and co-captain John Andersen finished fifth through eighth.

It was the first race held on the new UMass course, which was lengthened a half-mile to 4.9 miles. Thus Quinn's time of 26:32 established a course record. Coach Bill Footrick deserves mention for going out at 8:00 a.m. and marking the course with line flags so nobody would get lost.

The next meet sends UMass back to Rhode Island for the Yankee Conference championship on Saturday. New Hampshire, the defending champion, is favored but the upset-minded Redmen will be out for the crown.

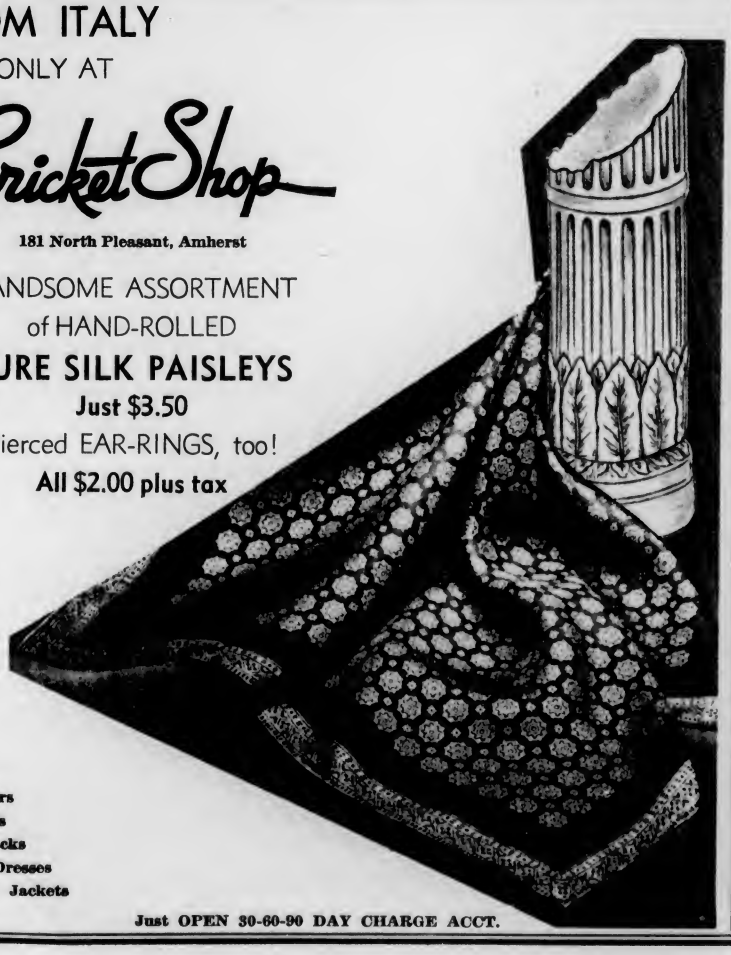
in well at the other tackle for the injured Bill Connor.

The Terriers did make things a little sticky for UMass late in the game, just as Maine, UConn and Rhody did. But instead of penalties hurting the Redmen, it was a 44-yard pass from quarterback Tom Thornton to fullback Roger Rosinski. Fusia said afterwards, "When you're playing a good football team, you can't hold them in their own territory for the whole game."

Oddly enough, Thornton, who is normally B.U.'s starting quarterback, was benched in favor of sophomore Dan Lucca. According to B.U. coach Schmakel, this was because Lucca had looked "better" in practice. Thornton, an accomplished passer, was brought in late in the game, apparently too late for B.U.



UMass Offense Improved

It was an encouraging performance for Fusia. "They know that they can play well defensively and can move the ball," he said. "Put them together and we can have a real happy weekend." It was noted that, except for a 71-yard punt return by B.U. speedster Reggie Rucker, the Redmen completely dominated the third quarter after a typically lackluster first half on offense.

It wasn't a change in Fusia's game plan known as "position" football, but was simply better execution of the plays. "This is the first game," he noted, "that we had our whole offense intact for 60 minutes." Nevertheless the third quarter was a magnificent example of ball control, with the Redmen running off 25 plays to B.U.'s three plays.

Will the Drama Never Cease?

Thrilling Redmen Slip By B. U., 12-7

Proud Defense Twice Repels Terriers at Goal

by DAVE JARNES, Sports Staff

The hand-made poster in the UMass locker room reads, "We've got guts." The record Homecoming throng of 18,700 which witnessed UMass' stirring 12-7 upset of Boston University would have to agree that this slogan best typifies Vic Fusia's 1966 aggregation.

Once again the clutch Redmen defense kept the home forces in the game during the first half as UMass' offense was virtually non-existent with only 53 yards total offense and no pass completions. The one Massachusetts "threat" came when a four yard punt gave UMass the ball on B.U.'s 39 yard line, but the Redmen could move the ball no further.

Meanwhile, the Terriers began a long drive from their own 18 to Mass' four. Quarterback Dan Lucca's first pass of the game was complete to Gerry Smith at the B.U. 43. After Smith carried to the 48, fullback Roger Rosinski burst up the middle to the Massachusetts 32. B.U. fooled the Redmen with a quick count play on a third and three situation at the 25 with Pete Dexter picking up another first down at the 15. An offside penalty and a quarterback sneak by Lucca gave the Terriers a first and goal at the four. Bruno Debiak then came through with a big play when he threw Dexter for an eight yard loss. Two running plays failed to advance the ball beyond the ten and a field goal attempt from the 18 failed.

The defense was only temporarily reprieved however, as UMass was forced to punt. A bad pass from center forced a poor kick by Nick Warnock, and B.U. took over at the UMass 45. A third down pass from Lucca to tight end Bob Nichols carried to the 27. The same Lucca to Nichols combination clicked again at the Massachusetts six. An offside penalty made it first and goal at the three. But once again that fantastic defense held, as B.U. tried four running plays that were stymied by Rod Brooks and company. Thus UMass left the field in a 0-0 tie when they could have easily trailed by 14-0.

Offense Awakens

Apparently the stalwart performance of the defense fired up the offense because the Redmen took the second half kickoff and promptly marched 64 yards in thirteen plays, all of them on the ground, for the first score of the game. The biggest gain of the drive was Landry's eleven yard carry on the first play of the half. Bob Detore, who gained 74 yards in 21 carries and was voted the game ball by his teammates, went over from the four. Bruce Cochrane's extra point attempt was blocked.

A few moments later Reggie Rucker stunned the Fusiamen by taking a partially blocked Warnock punt on his own 29 and bursting up the middle for a 71 yard touchdown jaunt, duplicating his feat in last week's Holy Cross game. Fred McNeilly's conversion put the Terriers in front 7-6.

A break such as Rucker's punt return would ruin most teams, but instead of rolling over, the Redmen came back charging. A twelve yard pass to Detore, the first completion of the day for Landry, gave UMass the ball on B.U.'s 37. The drive stalled, but a good Warnock punt put B.U. deep in the hole at their own five. The Terriers elected to punt on third down, giving the Redmen good field position at the B.U. 33. Landry connected with Bill Carty on short pass and the big tight end bulled his way to the 14. Don Durkin spun his way to the three. Don went over for the score on the next play. Landry's conversion pass was batted down as the Redmen led 12-7 with eleven minutes remaining in the game.

Defensive Ace Dave Giarla

Thrilling Finish

Boston University and UMass then began to play Alphonse and Gaston with fumbles and interceptions. Fumbles by Durkin and Landry were offset by two clutch interceptions by Dave Giarla. Redmen fans had their hearts in their throats when Tom Thornton, the regular B.U. quarterback, who was benched today, connected on a long bomb to Rosinski which covered from the B.U. 38 to the UMass 18 with a minute left. Once again the UMass defense rose to the occasion, driving the Terriers back. On successive plays B.U. was called for intentionally grounding the ball and Thornton was dumped by Dick Qualey for a huge loss. Qualey had injured his left arm in the Rhode Island game last week, so he simply picked Thornton up with the right arm and threw him to the ground. B.U. ended up with third and 28 on the UMass 42. A pass to Neil Smith was complete at the 21 but time had run out.

It is impossible to point out one star in the game because it was an entire team effort. The defense kept the Redmen in the ball game in the first half with the two goal line stands. The offense moved the ball well for two second half scores, and when the defense was again called on to stop B.U. in the last minute, it came through magnificently.

"A Little More than 100%"

by GLENN BRIERE Sports Staff

Nobody likes to be called an underdog, especially a team unaccustomed to the role. So a spunky group of UMass football players went out Saturday and proved that the so-called experts were wrong.

The case in point took place at Alumni Stadium where a Homecomink throng saw the Redmen win another thriller against a strong Boston University team. As in each of their other victories, the UMass defense was superb, the offense performed just well enough to win, and the game ended with their opponents deep in UMass territory.

"This is a team you have to admire," beamed Coach Vic Fusia after the game. "They just stay right in there. We have reason to be very proud of this group." Fusia has had nothing but praise for them, a team which has been infested with injuries from the outset. "They've got to give just a little bit more than 100%, and they are," he said.

The goal line stand seems to have become patented by the Redmen this year. Twice in the first half, they held off the Terriers inside their ten. There is something which brings out the best in the UMass defense when their backs are up against the wall. "Character," Fusia calls it, although in locker room jargon it is known as "guts."

Defensively Fusia found it difficult to single out one outstanding man. "It takes an 11-man effort," he said. He praised Dave Giarla's interceptions as being most important. It was the third week in a row that the UMass secondary has come up with key interceptions.

On offense the star of the game was Bob Detore. The hard-running halfback picked up 74 yards against a big B.U. line and caught a Greg Landry pass for 18 yards. He also scored the first UMass touchdown, scrambling in from four yards out.

" We needed this one to pick us up," said Detore, who was awarded the game ball. "The blocking was real good, and everyone was up for the game. We proved that we weren't unterback, who was on the bench, that this could be the turning point of the season.

Other standouts for the Redmen offense, which finally looked impressive on the ground, included Landry who ran for 67 yards, and Don Durkin, who gained 45 yards and the winning touchdown. Bill Carty caught a big third down pass which set up the first score.

Toner Stands Out

Ed Toner played both ways and looks as if he has lost none of his form due to his long layoff. He was used repeatedly on the offensive line in short yardage situations. Fusia noted that the Redmen came up with the crucial yardage consistently, one of the factors being co-captain Toner. Tony Bombardieri filled

UMass-Boston

GROWTH CRISIS HITS '67 CLASS CUT

Ed. note: Due to the fact that the Collegian has no newspaper representative at UMass-Boston, we are reprinting this article from the Boston Globe written by Robert L. Levey.

The Boston branch of the University of Massachusetts—still in infancy—already has outgrown its downtown home and will cut back next year's entering class due to the space squeeze.

University officials note that with only freshmen and sophomore classes enrolled, the urban campus in Park Sq. is packed to the rafters and:

- The building serving 2,100 students has only four elevators.
- Study space is grossly inadequate.
- Faculty members generally are tripled up in small offices.
- Library resources are limited.

"We will accept no more students until we get more space," Chancellor John Ryan states flatly.

One University official said it is not unusual to see students standing in corners of hallways doing their studying. Or doing school work in their cars parked near the school.

Faculty and student morale has remained relatively high in spite of the privation. There are "inside" jokes circulating at the school about claustrophobia in elevators and lateness to class because of walking 10 flights of stairs.

The problem is compounded by the fact UM-Boston will have to stay at this downtown site for several years. Originally, there was to be an immediate search for a permanent site in or around Boston.

Progress on the search has been slow. The Highland Park location in Roxbury hah highest priority but nothing seems to be moving.

The area was to have been a major site for urban renewal housing and the Boston Redevelopment Auth. has been reluctant to assign it to UM.

The delay on approval or rejection of Highland Park has irked many faculty members. This Thursday the faculty Senate will take up a recommendation endorsing Highland Park and asking some definitive action on it.

History Prof. Thomas N. Brown, chairman of the faculty Senate, says "We want to see the project get off the ground. If we can't go to Highland Park, we should eliminate it and proceed to other possible sites."

As for the current situation at UM-Boston, Brown says, "it's horrible. We're jam-packed." Several other faculty sources concur. In the fast few days, committees from the various science departments and a library committee have filed reports on anticipated needs.

The reports indicate considerable expansion is necessary in both areas next Fall if the school is to pursue reasonable levels of quality and growth.

The apparent safety valve for the problem is another building two blocks up Columbus Ave. from the present site. The Sawyer Bldg., formerly occupied by Prudential Insurance, is for rent and UMass-Boston is negotiating.

Though the negotiations are proceeding smoothly, Ryan says "I'm not willing to take things on faith anymore. If there is no additional space provided by March, my decision would be not to expand the school at all."

At present, UM-Boston will probably enroll about 600 additional students next year, even with extra space. This is 400 less than originally projected.

The office problem will be partially solved next Fall by rental of 40 extra offices in the nearby Liberty Mutual Insurance Building.

But Brown said if the projected growth rate of the branch was maintained for two years more, UM-Boston would grow beyond the combined facilities of the main building and the Sawyer Building.

The library problem is so bad the faculty committee reports "we are faced with the prospect of falling 30,000 volumes short of the minimal requirements for supporting our projected '67-'68 program.

"There are less than 31,000 volumes in the college now and only

BU Editor Explains NEWS

Keely Photo

Jim Foudy speaking with Raymond Mungo.

By JIM FOUDY,
Managing Editor

Some newspaper print the news, others make the news. The latter category describes the Boston University News and its dynamic, colorful editor Raymond Mungo.

A short, frail looking character is a corduory suit, Mungo spent last weekend traipsing about the Associated Collegiate Press Convention in Philadaiphia taking advantage of every opportunity to discuss his paper and its policies.

In discussion sessions, luncheons or informal gatherings in the lounges Mungo attracted crowds as he held forth on his doctrine that "The college press must make students and administrators think and do things about the real issues."

There are no sacred cows to Mungo who is out to "put a big hole in the pre-conceptions of students so that they will either defend themselves or die."

One of his biggest blasts this year came in the form of a four page special edition criticizing ROTC.

Mungo and crew accused ROTC of being anti-education, claimed that its recruitment program is based on the students' fears of Vietnam and advocated that it must go.

"Sure a lot of people didn't like our knocking ROTC," Mungo said, "But now things are happening with ROTC; students and faculty are beginning to think about it."

"I've made them think," Mungo exclaimed, raising his voice and banging the table to emphasize the last word, the key to his editorial policy.

The BU News is printed once a week on Thursday by a staff of about 60 students. Ten of its editors are paid by the University through a Publications Board with the editor receiving top pay of $1500 a year.

Can the Board fire Mungo?

"It can but it won't," according to the editor, who spent most of his free time the beginning of this semester lobbying and politicing to get the people he wanted on the Board.

Comment

Last week the Collegian advisor received a letter from a former staff member of the Collegian who is now working on the BU News. The following is an excerpt from her letter.

"I have joined the BU News and have just begun to get assignments. This paper, however, doesn't come close to the quality of the Collegian. The editor . . . allows his views to slant the news pages. He doesn't regard the paper as a professional thing and feels it doesn't have to be written like one. Right now there is a movement on campus to release him from his office. However, I believe it's better to be on the paper and write the way I think a journalist should than simply criticize him."

'Collegian' Delegates Attend ACP Conference in Philadelphia

by JACK DEAN
Staff Reporter

The University of Massachusetts was cited for producing "exciting, informative journalism" at the annual Associated Collegiate Press conference this past weekend in Philadelphia. The Benjamin Franklin Hotel was transformed into a journalist's goldmine as 1400 students from across the nation exchanged ideas in numerous workshops.

One of the highlights of the conference, at least from the Collegian's delegates point of view, was the election of a UMass professor as 1966-67 Vice Chairman of the National Council of College Publications Advisors at the awards banquet on Friday. Also announced were Pacemakers '66 — those schools judged to be outstanding among ACP member papers.

C. J. Leabow, a University of Minnesota professor, cited U-Mass as being among five schools in the country producing "exciting, innovative journalism" while addressing a seminar on "Trends in Student Publications." He referred to several Collegian supplements and the experimental magazine Au Present, of which 200 copies were distributed to eager Publications Advisers. Also distributed were 200 copies of the 16 page Oct. 14 Collegian.

Dr. Dario Politella of the U-Mass Journalism Department was elected NCCPA Vice Chairman for the coming year. Politella, a 1947 graduate of UMass, is a former Collegian Editor-in-Chief, an adviser to Index, and editor of the Collegiate Journalist—a national publication for Alpha Phi Gamma journalism fraternity.

During Thursday's NCCPA sessions, Dr. Politella and Alvin Oickle, Collegian technical adviser, took an active part in advisers discussions. Politella was chairman of a panel which discussed "The Publications Board—Friend or Foe?" Oickle delivered a speech during a discussion entitled "Publications Advising IS a Profession."

Senior Struck By Motorcycle At Newman Ctr.

A UMass senior was injured when he was hit by a motorcycle in front of the Newman Center last night at 6:45 p.m. Police officials did not consider his condition critical.

Robert Fox of 227 Baker was hit as he stepped from the curb. He was thrown 60 feet before he hit the pavement.

He was taken to the Infirmary by the Amherst ambulance. His condition was uncertain last night.

Neither of the two persons on the motorcycle was injured.

At the same time an employee of the Dining Commons in the High-Rise Complex was injured as she fell off the rear loading platform of the commons.

Mrs. Irene Picard apparently suffered leg and head injuries after she accidently fell. University Police took her to the Infirmary.

Book Borrowing Available In Inter-Library System

by BARBARA PROKO
Staff Reporter

To supplement its own 350,000 volumes of research material, Goodell Library has participated in an interlibrary loan system for more than 40 years.

While it is common for neighboring colleges and universities to share their resources, UMass' practice of this system is unique because its services are available to undergraduates.

Undergraduate privileges were introduced in 1945-46 by special arrangement with the Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, and Smth College libraries. Increasing emphasis on junior-senior honors programs was the reason for the extension, according to Morrison Haviland, associate librarian in administration.

Loans for Upperclassmen Only

Only upperclassmen can request inter library loans. Occasions when freshmen and sophomores need outside material are rare. Taking basic introductory courses, they seldom do the specalized work that requires extensive research.

"Using another library's materials is a student's privilege, not his right," Haviland believes. "As such, it may be denied, since it is based on the generosity of the lender."

Haviland attributes the origin and steady growth of inter-library loans to "faculty members' frequent need of rare and abstruse materials for preparing class lectures and now especially for writing, in the current age of 'publish or perish'."

However, only 25% of the borrowers are faculty members; 12% are undergraduates, and the rest, graduate students.

To obtain material from another library, a borrower must submit a request at the Reference Desk in Goodell, preferably in person. Haviland emphasizes that transactions must be arranged through the University library.

Proof of Need Required

Besides supplying complete bibliographical information, the borrower must give evidence of having fully used UMass resources.

Loans are obtained from the area colleges within two to five days. When other libraries are involved, several weeks must be allowed to locate material.

Applicants should expect to pay a $2 to $5 service charge for borrowing, Morrison Haviland says. This is often necesary in using periodicals, he explains, because photo-copies of journal articles are automatically loaned instead of the originals.

"Borrowers are responsible for the safety and condition of the

OXFORD PROGRAM

Students Urged to Apply

A summer seminar in English literature, poetry and drama for American students at Oxford University will again be sponsored by UMass in 1967, the University announced Monday.

shrdshrdshrshrd shrdshrdshrd

The fully - accredited 1967 summer seminar will run from July 4 to Aug. 15 at Hilda's College of Oxford University. Any graduate or undergraduate student in good standing at his college or university may apply, according to Dr. Ernest Hofer, associate head of the U-Mass English department and director of the seminar.

Enrollment is limited to 100, with the final deadline for application Nov. The selection committee will announce its decision by Dec. 1. The total cost of $750 includes fare, tuition, room, board and local trips. Non-residents of Massachusetts will be charged $780.

Oxford is composed of 28 separate colleges, each with its own residences, dining halls, and library. The UMass seminar will occupy St. Hilda's which has its own frontage on the river Cherwell and looks toward the famous Magdalen Tower.

Instruction will be by Oxford Dons. Undergraduate courses in Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton and modern novel will be given; graduate courses include Chaucer, Spenser, the age of Pope, and Dickens. A course on modern British and American drama will be given both graduates and undergraduates. Students may choose two courses for six hours credit.

Morning classes will leave afternoons free for study, or roaming the countryside. There will be visits to Stratford, Warwick and the Cotswolds, plus opera, ballet and theater trips to London. A once-a-week series of lectures by distinguished visitors will also be scheduled.

Information on the program may be obtained from the English department.

UMass Professor Elected To Post of the NCCPA

Elected to the post of first vice-chairman of the National Council of College Publications Advisers during its annual convention at Philadelphia, recently was Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies and consultant to student publications at the University of Massachusetts.

NCCPA was founded in 1954 to bring together student publications advisers who would share common problems and lend support in time of need in a continuing fight to preserve freedom of the student press and the academic freedom of faculty advisers.

The announcement of Dr. Politella's new position was made by Prof. K. Philip Orman, national chairman, of Texas Technological College, Lubbock.

A charter member of the 12-year-old organization, Dr. Politella had served a term as vice-chairman in 1957. He has also served as the first regional chairman for the New England States (1965-66), as chairman of NCCPA's committee on standards (1964-66), as chairman of its committee on liaison with other press groups (1963-65), as editor of its Directory of the College Student Press in America to be published this Spring, and in 1954-55 as chairman of NCCPA's northeast region.

Long a national figure in student publications activities, Dr. Politella has served as adviser to the yearbook, newspaper and magazine staffs at Kent (O.) State U., Syracuse U. and Ball State (Ind.) U. before coming to UMass in 1965.

He is founder and editor of The Collegiate Journalist, the magazine published three times a year by Alpha Phi Gamma, the national coeducational journalistic honorary that recognizes student editors. He also served in 1963-64 as freedom of the press editor of the Indiana Collegiate Press Association.

In other activities on the student press scene, Dr. Politella has been executive secretary of the Northeastern Ohio School Press Association and of the Empire State School Press Association, for which he edited a magazine called The Sixth Estate.

Dr. Politella began his association with the student press at Lawrence (Mass.) High School, where he served as editor of the student newspaper, The Lawrencian, 1938-39; and at UMass, where he was editor of the student newspaper, The Collegian, in 1947.

A graduate of the Syracuse University School of Journalism, Dr. Politella wrote his doctoral dissertation on "Patterns of Press Freedom" in American colleges and universities.

CONFERENCE . . .

1966 Pacemaker awards for outstanding college newspapers went to the following: State News, University of Michigan; Daily Tar Heel, University of North Carolina; Hulabaloo, University of Redlands, California; and Colorado Daily, University of Colorado.

The hourly discussions and workshops, the most important part of the conference, were for the most part provocative, but many appeared to be poorly organized. Collegian delegates were enthusiastic when speaking of what they had learned, but they criticized the lack of planning which was apparent on many panels. In their opinion, informal discussions proved to be more informative.

The five delegates representing the Collegian were: Thomas Donovan, Editor-in-Chief; Jim Foudy, Managing Editor; Lynn Stowe, Business Manager; Jack Dean, Editorial Day Editor; and Collegian photographer John Kelly. The workshops covered a broad range of topics related to collegiate newspapers, yearbooks, and magazines.

half have been processed and placed in the shelves. The faculty feels the library should plan to acquire 600,000 volumes over a 10-year period."

The shortcomings of the library are caused more by lack of Legislative appropriations than from lack of space.

If the choice of a permanent site is further deloyed and finding and space problems continue to plague operation, the future of UM-Boston could be bleak.

Brown said there is already a problem in attracting science professors because of inadequate space for research. He feels the faculty and administration must get support now if the school is to become a first-class urban commuting University.

Putting in 65 hours a week on the paper, Mungo still manages to carry 21 credits and pull a 3.4 cume.

Quoting everyone from Shakespeare to Tom Paxton and discussing everything from drugs to type sizes and page make up, Mungo denounced professional journalism and its "timidity which it cloaks under the name of objectivity" and plans a career as a playwright.

He sets three criteria for judging a newspaper:

- Is it being read
- Are issues discussed
- Is something being done about the issues.

According to these standards and the reports of Mungo the BU News is a success. "Everybody has to read the News to get outraged," he said with a laugh.

The function of a newspaper, according to Mungo, is to provoke people.

'A paper must be revolutionary and go against the old standards," Mungo said and added with a shake of his fist, "To hell with the 'image'."

Accused by one of the delegates of promoting "yellow journalism," the firey editor retorted, "I sensationalize only because of the merit of an important issue and because I must provoke students to think."

According to Mungo, there is no attempt to distort the facts.

"Our stories are researched very throughly," he said and used as an example the ROTC special which his staff worked on for three montrs and which he had personnally researched for three years.

Pushing the hair back off his forehead, the "Boston Dynamo", as one of his fellow journalists dubbed him, launched forth into his theory of education.

"Education and the college should exist for the student," Mungo believes but complains that "education seems to be out for the money - making."

Calling Berkeley the "greatest place in the country", the liberal editor hit out at college administrators saying that "most of them would like people to go to college and say and do nothing."

Does the BU administration oppose his policies?

"Oh, yeah," said Mungo with a shrug, "They hate us."

"I don't feel that my life is my own," Mungo stated, "People follow me, threaten me over the phone and last week the Trustees condemned me and my paper."

However, the English Literature major claims that he "will not be intimidated".

"They are afraid of me," he said, "Because I represent the proletarist. They know that if they try to fire me. I'd go to the professional press and blow the story wide open."

Mungo's advice to editors is to create a "power myth."

"Make them think that there is a student power block behind you. It only takes 50 bodies in the president's office to clog the machine," he said but added, "Use your power wisely. Don't offend people just hit out at the issues."

As far as the conference itself was concerned, Mungo considered it "worthless" but thought that the people who attended were "great — strange and wonderful people."

True to form, Mungo discussed the college press right up until the time he jumped in a cab for the airport.

With a knapsack strapped on over a trenchcoat, Ray Mungo stopped at the door of the cab, lifted his arm in what had now become a familiar jesture to most of the delegates and shouted back to the group standing by the entrance, "Wait'll you see the next issue. We're coming out with limited support of 'Black Power'. Won't that shake them up."

DRUGS ON THE CAMPUS

Who Is Responsible?

Who is responsible for dealing with drugs on the campus, city police or university authorities?

At two different campuses current incidents undeerline the problem of students being subject to both civil and university discipline for the same action.

At the University of Maryland, a student who was arrested on Oct. 7 for illegal possession of marijuana and barbiturates was immediately suspended from his dormitory and then "indefinitely suspended from the University" before a court hearing could take place.

Robert F. Sauer, 18, was suspended on the basis of several University regulations prohibiting activities outside "accepted standards of conduct." A university official said that the suspension was independent of any legal action which the courts might take, since the school had conducted its own investigation of the case.

The University of Colorado has said it will consider disciplinary action against students who have been arrested by Boulder City police after they receive a court decision.

Four people have already been arrested by Boulder city police in connection with an investigation into the use of marijuana.

As more and more college students become involved with drugs that are generally defined as illegal, administrations are being forced to define their own positions on the issue. The positions that are voiced, however, usually fall back on offenses such as "behavior unbecoming a student."

This fall, for the first time the Carleton College student handbook contained a clause about student use of "narcotics, stimulants or hallucinogens." The handbook says only that the college believes drugs to be "a threat to the health and welfare of the individual concerned as well as to the community as a whole," and that their use could bring "immediate administrative action."

According to the Carleton administration, the threat of administrative action is deliberately vague in order to allow for counseling and medical approaches as well as disciplinary moves.

Grinnell College in Iowa last spring issued a statement to students and parents clarifying the college's position on drugs, and pointing out the harmful effects of experimentation with drugs.

The statement concluded that "Grinnell College intends to regard any student found to be contributing to the problem by using drugs illegally or by contributing to others' use of drugs as having engaged in unacceptable conduct and subject to dismissal (depending on the circumstances of the student's involvement, however, the College may, at its option, deal with the matter through counseling and other resources)."

Teams Forming for Candlepin Leagues

Candlepin leagues for interdorm and I.F.C. are now being formed with all matches to be held in the Student Union Games Area. Teams wishing to enter either League should have their captains sign up in the game area. Deadline for entering either league is Nov. 12.

Entries are now being taken for the freshmen candlepin bowling tournament. Trophies will be awarded for first and second place. Entries are limited, so it is recommended to sign up early this week in the Student Union Games Area, research material they use. Goodell encountered its first problem in this respect last summer," the associate librarian reports, "when a borrowed book was lost. Fortunately, we managed to replace it with a second-hand copy."

Materials that are available for use between libraries are mainly research books and periodicals.

Much Not Included in Loan

Exactly what items can be borrowed depends on the individual library. To an extent, the range of material is curtailed by the code governing interlibrary loans. The code restricts use of current fiction and periodicals extremely rare books that might be damaged in transit; and books on demand at the home library.

The Interlibrary Loan Code which regulates transactions was adopted in 1952 by the American Library Association. An organization of professional librarians, the AMA established the code as a result of varying loan practices throughout the US and Canada.

According to the interlibrary rules, material may be borrowed once for a one-month period. The borrower must pay transportation and other expenses.

Morrison Haviland reports a steady increase in inter-library transactions both for and from Goodell. Among the materials borrowed in th elast year, one third were from Smith, Amherst, and Mt. Holyoke.

"At UMass, Agrculture . . ."

"Specialization in a variety of curircular areas is the reason," Haviland believes. "Smith, with the nation's largest college library, excels in physical education; classics are abundant at Amherst. At UMass, agriculture and engineering are strong."

Other sources provided UMass researchers wth more than 3600 items last year. Interlibrary loans are possible not only with the area colleges, but with academic and public libraries throughout ths country and Canada.

The continuing increase in interlibrary transactions is "a function of the size of the student body and faculty, getting larger every year," Haviland says.

"Accordingly, more books are bought for Goodell each year. While the University purchased only 20,000 volumes four years ago, it expects to add 90,000 in 1966.

"By increasing its own available research material, Goodell hopes to be able to accommodate UMass faculty and students without depending on other libraries' resources," Morrison Haviland explains.

Science Conference Set For November 3

A day-long "Science in Action" conference for Massachusetts secondary school science teachers and selected students will be held Thursday, Nov. 3, at the University of Massachusetts by the College of Agriculture.

A series of talks, demonstrations and tours will show the visitors how basic scientific knowledge is used and expanded at the College of Agriculture through research, teaching and extension programs. Registration, a welcome by UMass Provost Oswald Tippo and a talk on "Science in Agriculture" will open the conference.

The 10:00 a.m. talk will be given by Dr. H. B. Gunner of the UMass Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology. Dr. Arless A. Spielman, dean of the College of Agriculture, will be master of ceremonies.

At 11:00 a.m. and again at 1:30 p.m. College of Agriculture scientists will conduct 23 separate "Science in Action" sessions. Conference participants may select one in the morning and attend another in the afternoon.

The 23 sessions will cover a wide range of topics in veterinary science, plant pathology, food science and technology, forestry and wildlife management, microbiology and soil chemistry.

Campus Comment

Passtheaspirin

by LYNN STOWE, Business Manager

Suddenly we realize that that the newspaper business is becoming Big Business whether we like it or not. Suddenly we realize that this newspaper is not properly covering the campus. We realize that only fifteen or twenty people break their backs all all week long to get out a service to this community. They risk: flunking out; administrative no-no's; student politicians and most of all frustration.

Not enough money to experiment with or become bigger. No rewards but criticism for those all-night efforts. Not enough people with ideas. Tired Blood. Shall we become independent? Shall we force people to work for the paper? Shall we reevaluate our idea of a college newspaper from extracurricular fun (what fun?) to a job. Get paid? Horrors! (Many college newspaper editors in schools this size get paid.)

Shall we degenerate to twice a week? A weekly? Ring, ring..."Hello." "Where is my newspaper?" (faculty) "Where's my monthly report?" (student senate) "Where's my ad that I paid through the nose for?" (Homecoming Committee) "Where's some good controversial editorials?" (left-wing student) "Who allowed these controversial editorials to be printed?" (South College) "Hey, where's our editor?" (Collegian staff). FUN? Passtheasperin...That's what they say it's supposed to be.

There are a number of solutions that will make UMass have a good working newspaper and a good working staff. Some of these were learned at the AACP Conference in Philadelphia.

Will anyone listen or will there be the usual apathetic or conservative rejoinders? Why change? This system worked ten years ago. Hell! (Oops! I'm going to get my hand slapped for that one.) We could all quit and use the bulletin board...

Yankee, No Home!

With all eyes turned east, a problem to the south closer to our borders has been seemingly ignored. The Latin American's hatred of the "Yankee" and his desire to improve economic conditions will inevitably lead to violent revolutions in the near future. Some months before his death, President Kennedy declared: "I regard Latin America as the most critical area in the world today."

Why do the people blame the deplorable conditions on the United States? Many Latin American countries each year suffer immense deficits because of the unfavorable balance of trade mostly with the U.S. The prices of their mineral and food commodities, due to competition with Asia and Africa invariably fall; therefore, they do not get enough dollars to pay for their needed manufactured good whose prices are constantly rising.

Since exports amount to a disproportionate share of Latin America's Gross National Product, each country's budget is constantly in the red. They, therefore, must receive grants from the U.S. with "small credit fees" attached, sometimes up to 20%, as in the $50 million loan to Brazil 5 years ago.

Add to this our important of raw materials and commodities from Latin America totalling some $2.8 to $3.3 billion yearly and our exportation of our manufactured goods to Latin America totalling some $3.3 to $4.2 billion, and it is obvious that our southern "friends" have become extremely economically dependent upon the United States.

This factor prevents the Latin American countries from diversifying, which is the only lasting solution to their problems.

Nkrumah calls this neo-colonialism. Call it what you may; our economic policy combined with our uncanny knack of supporting malevolent dictatorships and oligarchies is not the way to solve the urgent needs of the people.

What should be done? Zelmar Michelini, a Uruguayan deputy for the Colorado Party, stated in an interview, "I think the Alliance for Progress is a mistake. The continent needs no charity in dollars, but stability in the price of its raw materials and fair prices for the industrialized articles we need to buy."

Enrique Escovar, a Colombian senator, stated: "Pay us good prices for our coffee or-God help us all-the masses will become one great Marxist revolutionary army that will sweep us into the sea."

Since our whole expressed objective is to help our neighbors get more dollars to cover the costs of social reforms recommended by the Alliance for Progress, a natural way would be to pay higher prices for their products.

"So a revolution is coming—a revolution which will be peaceful if we are wise enough; compassionate if we care enough; successful if we are fortunate enough—but a revolution which is coming whether we will it or not. We can affect its character; we cannot alter its inevitability." (Robert Kennedy, May 9, 1966)

And So They Died

Last Sunday marked the tenth anniversary of the beginning of the Hungarian revolt. The cause of the revolutionaries was just, and the world was well aware of it. For twelve years they had lived under Communist oppression, and they were fed up with the secret police, the social restrictions, and the rest of the Communist system. The United States and the Western European nations had previously given the revolutionists assurance that a rebellion would be given military support. The Hungarian people depended on this support, but it never came. As a result 13,000 Hungarians lost their lives, and Russia firmly placed herself in control. There is a question as to whether or not the Russians would have backed out if we had given support, but in any case we should have been there to protect our interests as well as those of the Hungarian people.

The U. S. made a similar mistake when we failed to give sufficient aid to the invading forces in the Bay of Pigs attempt to oust Fidel Castro as Premier of Cuba. Again the United States witheld the necessary military aid at a time when it was most needed, and we lost Cuba to the Russians. Now we have a hostile country ninety miles off our coast to compensate for our error.

Although the situation in Vietnam is different from those given above, it must be realized that in effect the battle is the same. We can not afford to lose another country to Communism. No matter how costly the battle may be. We must show the Communists that we are through being timid in regard to their aggressive actions, and that we are willing to accept our role as a protector of freedom.

Collegian Rots

To the Editor:

I am certainly appalled with our "fabulous" newspaper, the "Collegian." What is collegiate about it? It relays some activities on campus but it is more of a complaint column and advertising circular. It seems as if no one on this campus is contented with anything. In many respects I can not really blame them. I realize it is supposed to present student opinions and attitudes but it should be something more. It definitely isn't.

Recently I was in Boston and saw several newspapers from Boston schools. One in particular impressed me very much. It was "The Heights," published by Boston College. Their coverage of campus events was very extensive and precise. Recently they were awarded an All-American rating by the Associated Collegiate Press. Their on the spot news coverage was especially mentioned. Last year they covered a food crusade by the dorm students and several problems concerning the women's residence. Beside their well written articles they have excellent pictorial covrage, one thing which the "Collegian" definitely lacks.

Also, their sports coverage is a great deal more extensive than anything I've seen in our paper and I've read every one of them. They cover all aspects of campus sports, even minor ones, and, again, they have action pictures of all of them. Their editorials show some insight and thought on various subjects, both campus and national. They don't involve such trivia and ridiculous subjects as some of ours do.

I was really ashamed to show our paper to some of my friends at B.C. and hope that something can be done, at least in the next few years, to rectify this situation. I don't think we can win an APC award as an All-American college newspaper but at least we can try to have a paper we can be somewhat proud of.

Editor's Note:

Last year the Collegian received an All-American rating.

Contact, Sport

"Variety is the spice of life." So what has happened to variety on our campus? Take Homecoming for example. In the past (pre-1965), it was customary to have a spirited dance following the float parade and rally. Saturday evening, after the excitement of the big game was over, another dance was held—the mood of this one more relaxed, with some fast dances and some slow. Now, for the second year running, we've had the same type of dance for both nights. So now the Homecoming dances are no different from those of any normal weekend. Will this trend invade Military Ball and Winter Carnival, too? It is not that dancing fast isn't fun, but what ever happened to variety? Wouldn't you like to dance with your date . . . at least now and then?

Encore, Encore

Homecoming: a time when the University wants to be at its best; a time when thousands of guests and alumni are on our campus; a time when our most beautiful coeds are recognized; a time to show the talent of our students at constructing floats, playing football, marching in a band, and baton twirling.

Remember the 30 second performance or our twirler? I'm sure all that attended the game do. A flawless performance but only 30 seconds! Doesn't a talent as fine as the one our twirler possesses deserve more than a 30 second performance? I believe so and so do a lot or my friends....

Mr. Jenkins, how about a longer performance at the next two home games so that the students and guests of the University may enjoy a real show of baton twirling and not just a preview performance?

The New Morality:

Sex and Drugs Invade the Music World

Editorial Feature

(Editor's note: the Collegian received the following responses to solicitations of clergy and faculty opinion. The general question was: "Has the invasion of sex and dope into the world of popular music affected the morality of the younger generation?)

It's the Beat, Not the Lyrics

By Rt. Rev. Msgr. David J. Power, Catholic Chaplain

The topic assigned seems rather difficult because it is not easy to know in just what order we should list dope, sex and a certain type of present day "music." Whatever the case, I feel we have been blessed not to have been plagued by this cancer on our campus, at least not to any great degree.

Realizing that sex of itself is good since it is God given, we should try to appreciate how privileged we are to have been given it, by our proper use of it as we become co-operators with Him in due time.

We may presume, for purposes of this article, that we are concerned with the illicit sex which has become so prevalent. Statistics, which tell us of the alarming increase in the number of unmarried mothers, clearly indicate a problem. Every problem has a cause. This illicit sex, so common today, is fostered greatly by the new modes of dance which seem to be attached to modern "music."

After an evening of the constant, loud beat and the suggestive dancing, the situation certainly lends itself to illicit sex. In many cases the unsuspecting, immature victim is often a teenager who has become aroused for the first time. Tragedy follows. However, we cannot discount the effect all of this has on the more sophisticated college student since human nature is weak, whether is the high school or college student. Therefore, we must be aware that there is a real danger. This means prudence dictates that we be on guard and not allow ourselves to fall prey to something because "everyone is doing it."

At times, in order to maintain a high degree of exhilaration, there may be the temptation to resort to narcotics. This is frequently the opening wedge to drug addiction which of course brings about the ruination of life, physical and spiritual, unless proper steps are taken at an early stage.

I do not believe the words of these "songs" play much of a role in this problem because I doubt that they are listened to with much interest. Occasionally this might be the case but for the most part I feel the words are overlooked. The beat or the rhythm is the intriguing thing: However, if the words are studied, I think we shall find them decidedly suggestive and a factor that would aggravate an already serious situation.

In this consideration it seems to me the really sad note is the loss of an appreciation for the finer things in life that is being suffered by our young people. Good music is essential to the make-up of a cultured person. Today it is being neglected by a great majority during the formative years when a desire for it is being fostered.

It is easy to dismiss the whole problem by simply saying it is merely a fad. But, we should be mindful that one fad follows another and frequently as a downhill slide, as is the present case.

We need leadership to elevate our standards and bring about a greater degree of culture if we are to survive the downhill trend we have been experiencing during the past five or ten years.

From Kennedy to Leary in One Swell Foop

By Rev. David Purdy, Protestant Chaplain

It ought to be clear to anyone who has had at least a fourth grade education that there is a "new morality". But to suggest that "the invasion of dope and sex into the world of popular music has affected the morality of the younger generation" is oversimplifying the cause of such a morality.

Although artists are often the prophets in a culture, recent popular music seems to be a reflection and reinforcement of the present state rather than an insight into things to come. Put another way, the question is not "has pop music corrupted our youth?", but what is the mood of our culture which is reflected in the pop music and which creates the apparent necessity for the latest sexual and psychedelic practices?

While I think it is true to say that the "new morality" represents a form of escape from the reality of life, this is a different kind of escape from even 10 years ago—for then the beatnik was revolting against a bourgeois society preoccupied with clever gadgets and its own affluence. But today a different mood seems to prevail—rather than revolt, I sense increasingly the feeling of apathy.

I may be wrong, but in the early '60's a new spirit of optimism came into being. Students sensed not only their creativity but their power as human beings, and so they dedicated themselves to the welfare of mankind: they demonstrated for justice and civil rights, they spent vacations rebuilding burnt churches in Mississippi, they joined the Peace Corps in order to help and to learn from the emerging nations.

But in the mid-1960's something different is happening. As one magazine recently pointed out we have moved from the Kennedy generation to the Leary generation.

Things seem to be out of control again: the civil rights issue has been taken over by the bureaucrats and still hangs on, now in the form of a militant black nationalism and the resurgent white backlash; the undeclared war in Vietnam gets worse in spite of hyperbolic patriotic jargon and so-called peace efforts; the affluent economy which even the most liberal of students had begun to count on is beginning to falter. And so, if the commitment to causes for the welfare of mankind grow sour through failure and inertia, and if the answers which seemed so clear a couple of years ago get fuzzy, then it is easier to escape through pot and sex than to stand firm.

And this kind of escape, it seems to me, is a new form of individualism supported by the latest phase of financial affluence: "caring about my brother doesn't pay (you might get killed or the demonstration might fail), so I'll take care of myself."

Now we look for kicks for ourselves at the expense of our neighbor; now we use LSD to look inside ourselves instead of out at our neighbor; we call what we find on the psychedelic trip Reality instead of the problems, the hate and prejudice, the confusion that is ever present; we want experiences that are aesthetically pleasing to us at minimal risk to ourselves (hence the now so-called LSD art) in a world where it often appears impossible to live; and the optimism of the early 60's for all men seems now transformed into hope for me if I can just get out of my head for awhile.

Although I think that sex and drugs are used for escape, there is a new lu-

By Ellen Cleary, Editorial Feature Writer

"The explosion in pop culture has blasted away old taboos," says Peter Sypnowich in an article in the Toronto Star Weekly. Today's teenagers "swing to lyrics that urge them to get turned on and make out".

If you don't know what Sypnowich is talking about, you haven't been listening very carefully to the words of many of our contemporary hit records. Are songs like The Rolling Stones' Satisfaction, The Beatles' Norwegian Wood, or The Kingsmen's Louie, Louie songs that you would ever sing around the piano at a family gathering?

Music critics of magazines such as Variety, Time, and Newsweek have publicized their concern over this "new morality" of popular music. Disc jockeys must now decide how suggestive a song can be before they refuse to play it.

Recently "trip songs" have been steadily gaining in popularity, and these present another problem to self-appointed or official censors. Just what is the effect of these songs on the morality of the listening public?

Many people are not aware that these trip songs are about drugs because they are not familiar with the "junkie" terminology. In Bob Dylan's Mr. Tambourine Man for instance, the Tambourine man is the pusher, and the rest of the song decides the effects of "pot".

In another Dylan song, according to Sypnowich, Rainy Day Woman is a term used for marijuana cigarettes, and "getting stoned" means using pot. Sypnowich says that the song is not about the mental or physical "stoning" or pressure to conform because the performer is not serious enough in his delivery. "What makes Every Must Get Stoned an obvious pun is that Dylan and his backers are giggling throughout the number."

Eight Miles High, coming as it does out of the Los Angeles area of psychedelic music, concerns the effects of LSD. The Byrds said it was a song about an airplane ride. . . .

Even Puff, the Magic Dragon, the children's favorite has been said to illustrate the idea of a trip. Puff, of course is the marijuana smoke that carries Jackie to his own private world.

In their fervor, some of the song critics have become extreme in their condemnations. Herb Schoenfield of Variety said the Lovin' Spoonful got their name from the preparation of heroin injections in a spoon. The Spoonful, according to Sypnowih, pointed out that Negro mothers used to give their children a "lovin' spoonful" of sugar.

Sypnowich himself, however, asks what meaning, with a record like Satisfaction in the number one spot, can be read into Herman's Hermits' I'm Into Something Good? Time stated that Call Me was a call girl's intimation that she would be available anytime (but Chris Montez is a boy . . .).

Why do these supposedly questionable songs become so popular? Part of the reason could be that they are about "real life", involving things that are familiar to us. Lou Christie's Rhapsody in the Rain, even without the line of the original version which was withdrawn—"our love went much too far"— is certainly not a melody which is destined for popularity with parents of teenagers, Its subject, parking, however, is something of concern to many high school and college students.

The appeal of the trip songs could be the unfamiliarity of their subject. The listeners gain a kind of insulated association with drugs and their new publicity.

It seems safe, in the case of many of the objectionable songs, that the listeners can't tell what the words are, don't know what the words mean, or know and simply don't care. It's the general meaning and the beat that count; except perhaps in the case of some of the popular songs that never reach the radio.

As one student said, she didn't mind the songs because she didn't think they were going to harm anyone or lower their moral standards. "If you don't know what the words mean, you're not going to be corrupted by listening, and if you know what the words mean, you're already corrupted anyway."

There is still hope for our generation, however. If those in the past survived The House of the Rising Sun and Cocaine Bill and Morphine Sue, it seems possible that we will survive Satisfaction and Puff, the Magic Dragon, even though the moral of these isn't quite as explicit as those of the older songs.

Meanwhile, if you're not sure about that great new record you heard today, be safe—don't sing, just hum quietly.

Eight miles high and when you touch down
You'll find that it's stranger than known Signs in the street that say where you're going Are somewhere just being their own
Nowhere is there warmth to be found Among those afraid of losing their ground Rain, gray town known for its sound
In places small faces abound Round the squares
huddled in storms
Some laughing, some just shapeless forms
Sidewalk scenes and black limousines
Some living, some standing alone

"Wherein the Morality Lies"

By Dr. Leon Barron, English Department

I'm highly flattered by your request to comment on whether the "invasion of dope and sex into the world of popular music (has) affected the morality of the younger generation." Attempting to be suitably scientific, I canvassed some student-friends at Grayson House; but since students generally tend to shield faculty members from the knowledge of the painful realities of life, my poll was lamentably unsuccessful. Most residents disclaimed knowing the lyrics of the songs you listed. The one sophomore who blushingly admitted having read the words to Louie, Louie, seemed neither drug-addicted nor sexually abandoned; so I gather that the effect in his case was too slight for meaningful measurement.

A survey of my recent experience reveals only one student who might be considered a drug addict, but I'd hesitate to attribute his euphoria to music. As for music's connection with sexual promiscuity, the last woman I remember claiming to have been seduced by a song was Francesca da Rimini — and you know where Dante put her.

Turning to my past experience, I recall that during World War II, when I was stationed at an oasis in the Sahara, the longer my group was cut off from the society of women, the bawdier the songs became. Once we returned to more metropolitan centers, the preferences were for Blue Moon, Moonlight in Vermont, and other lunar absurdities. My inference was that the bawdy acted as a safety valve for desires that could not otherwise be satisfied.

My own feeling is that art makes nothing happen, but, like new laws, is a reaction to what has happened. It is, as Matthew Arnold put it, "a criticism of life." Specifically, I see the current trend in popular music as a socially acceptable protest against present social norms.

I note, for instance, that the lyrics often constitute a rebellion against grammar as well as against other forms of responsibility. While it is hardly surprising to hear a college student talking about sex, his use of double negatives in doing so is novel and, I think, significant. It's hard to imagine celebrated protestors of the past like Walt Whitman or Bertrand Russell complaining that they were not "getting no satisfaction."

The mimicry—even if occasionally tongue-in-cheek — of uneducated forms of speech indicates to me a discontent with the current emphasis on a college education, perhaps a whistleing-in-the-dark assurance that though one conforms to the appearance required, he really isn't completely taken in. The music, thus, is a defense, an armor which enables one to live in an unfriendly society without becoming completely of it.

However, even though I feel that popular music is, in some sense, history rather than pronography, I'm not discounting the existence of "The New Morality." I see this on campus not so much as a willingness to experiment with drugs as it is a coolness regarding sexual matters that would have been highly inflamatory not too many years ago.

I know, for instance, one former student who was more disturbed at the prospect of being labelled a college drop-out than she was by the fact of her illegitimate pregnancy. I admit that her case may be extreme, even sick; but like all things recognized as caricature, it points to a recognizable reality. The problem, as I see it, is to discover wherein the morality lies. And the best way to do this —if I may say so—is not to canvas faculty and clergy but students themselves.

Former Department Head Honored

A former head of the University of Massachusetts women's physical education program was honored last Saturday when her portrait was presented to the department she led for 21 years.

The portrait of Miss Ruth J. Totman, professor and head of the department of physical education for women at the University from 1943 until her retirement in 1964, was presented to the department in ceremonies at the Women's Physical Education Building during the recent UMass Homecoming weekend.

Painted by North Amherst artist Mrs. Eleanora M. Johnson, the portrait was donated to the department in recognition of Miss Totman's contributions to the University and to the department during years of rapid growth.

While Miss Totman looked on, the portrait was presented to her successor, Dr. Margaret A. Coffey, by associate professor of physical education Sally A. Ogilvie, representing the recipients friends. Miss Marjorie Smith of Wellesley, a senior physical education major, and the school's Dean, Warren P. McGuirk, assisted in the presentation.

Shown, left to right, Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education; Mrs. Eleanora M. Johnson of North Amherst, painter of the portrait; Sally A. Ogilvie, representing Miss Totman's friends; Miss Totman; Marjorie Smith of Wellesley, representing the students; and Dr. Margaret A. Coffey, successor to Miss Totman.

Born in Conway, Miss Totman is a graduate of the New Jersey College for Women and received her M.S. degree from the University of Massachusetts. She taught physical education in New York State and at East Stroudsburg (Pa.) Teachers College, and was a supervisor of elementary and high school physical education in Newcastle, Pa. She also taught at Indiana (Pa.) State Teachers College and at New Jersey College prior to her appointment as director of physical education for women at U-Mass in 1943.

Miss Totman furthered the extensive, well-balanced program in the two-year required course in physical education for women, with a strong emphasis on recreation, conditioning and the teaching of skills. Under her direction, an active intramural program was developed. In 1958, well-equipped and in a new building, Miss Totman's department launched a program enabling women to major in physical education.

At her retirement in 1964, the department had grown to a teaching staff of 14, with over 50 student majors and another 1300 in general classes.

cidity in this student generation that hasn't been present before. Not only does the student want to flee the complexities of the contemporary morass, but he is also intrigued with that complexity. He knows that it is impossible to tackle one problem without getting involved in a thousand more issues.

He sees too much to be done that he wonders where it is possible to dig in and be mose effective, or indeed, if it is possible to do anything at all. It is as though the apathy I pointed to earlier could be characterized by "floating": as though the student sees the problems, and due to their intensity and number is overwhelmed — he is afraid to chooss. So it is LSD that legitimates the floating; it is intense sexual relationships which allows a person to feel good and to hold onto something.

Although I've characterized the "new morality" largely as escape, there is another side to it which I sense on the UMass campus and which is equally important. There are those who need no artificial stimulus to give them visions and who need not to lean on their sexual prowess to give them courage.

There are those who, sensing their value as individuals, are giving their time and energy to the total UM Community as never before. I think of the URC and some of the experiments in Southwest in this connection, which whether successful or not, at least represent the decision of some to take hold of the situation and to alter unjust structures for the sake of the whole of UM, as well as to assume the responsibility for the ramifications of their actions in other areas.

Is this kind of vision and courage simply a holdover from the bygone days of the early 60's, or is it the mood which forecasts the future? I think it is the latter.

Because if you listen carefully, in the depths of the pop culture there is expressed the hope that someone will make sense out of chaos, that someone will risk transforming injustice and hate into humanness.

There is a certain kind of woman who_____

Are you that certain kind of girl who's been itching to write a Peck & Peck ad of her own?

If you are, you might win a $50 Gift Certificate.

A $50 gift certificate from Peck & Peck—that's worth an all-nighter!
Here's how easy it is: you know what Peck & Peck's advertising campaign is like. Every ad starts off, "There is a certain kind of woman who..." All you have to do is finish the sentence.

Here are a few examples of headlines that Peck & Peck has run:
There is a certain kind of woman who applies perfume so that it whispers...never shouts.
For this woman, there is a certain kind of store: Peck & Peck.

There is a certain kind of woman who can spot a T formation or a Chanel suit at 50 yards.
For this woman, there is a certain kind of store: Peck & Peck.

There is a certain kind of woman who reads Sartre, but is secretly in love with James Bond.
For this woman, there is a certain kind of store: Peck & Peck.

It's easy to think up some more. And there will be a winner from each college campus.
You might be that certain kind of girl who wins a $50 gift certificate from Peck & Peck.
But hurry, contest entries must be submitted by November 10.
Now, we'll start you off. "There is a certain kind of woman who_____."

Peck & Peck

CONTEST RULES

1. Only registered students of this college are eligible, but any one student may submit as many entries as he or she pleases. 2. All entries must be personally given to the manager of a Peck & Peck store on or before November 10, 1966. Each entry must be stamped by the store manager in order to be eligible for judging. 3. There will be one winner on each college campus who will receive a $50 gift certificate redeemable for Peck & Peck merchandise. Winning entries may be used in whole or part in Peck & Peck's advertising, at the discretion of Peck & Peck. Winner's names may be used at the discretion of Peck & Peck. 4. The judging of the contest will be done by Peck & Peck's advertising agency. Their decision will be final. Winners will be notified by December 1, 1966. 5. All entries become the property of Peck & Peck. If Peck & Peck uses any entry for advertising purposes, either in whole or part, that does not win a $50 prize, Peck & Peck will pay $10 for each such entry. Contest not valid where prohibited by law.

CE Department Appoints Two Associate Professors

Dr. Robert S. Kirk and Dr. Robert W. Lenz have been appointed associate professors in the UMass department of chemical engineering, it has been announced by Dr. John W. Eldridge, department head.

Dr. Kirk, formerly senior research engineer and group supervisor of the Chevron Research Company, La Habra, Cal., received both B.S. and M.S. degrees in chemical engineering from Illinois Institute of Technology. He later received a Ph.D. in chemical engineering from the University of Wisconsin.

As assistant professor of chemical engineering at the University of Wisconsin, Dr. Kirk conducted both lecture and laboratory classes in addition to research projects in the field of kinetics.

Dr. Lenz, who has worked with the Dow Chemical Co. and Fabric Research Laboratories, Inc., received a B.S. in chemical engineering from Lehigh University and an M.S. in textile technology from the Institute of Textile Technology. He earned a Ph.D. in polymer chemistry from the State University of New York, College of Forestry.

He has instructed evening extension courses and has contributed to many publications.

Social Revolution on Campus

College Student Seeks Answers

by DAVE FLOREEN

A good deal has been said about the so-called student "revolt" on college campuses across the nation. Revolt, the term often given student's quest for self knowledge, is a poor word to use, but it is used because it makes for good headlines in the press.

In the words of Dr. Noffsinger, head of Student Affairs, "it's not so much a revolt as an honest questioning of life around the student."

The typical college student is on his own for the first time, both physically and philosophically. He no longer has the parental ties of home, especially when it comes to the deep seated moral values that he finally begins to develop on his own.

The student doesn't want to throw out all that has been given to him by his elders, yet he does want to question them for himself, just to see if they measure up to his newly developing standards.

Growing up in this world is a rough experience for the student, as he is presented all at once with so many acts which he must digest and understand. Some he accepts and some he questions. Many of these problems arise not in the class room, but outside in the rough and tough world.

The question of personal faith is perhaps the greatest and most important of these queries. All of us need some sort of a belief in something, whether it be Christianity, atheism, materialism, or any God. This faith is needed, for as one matures, he begins to investigate further and further beyond what he can do. He is not satisfied with what is in front of him—he wants more: this is only part of so-called human nature.

Perhaps Father Quigley gave the best description when he said, "What is a campus? A campus is a place where a man realizes himself." The college campus is the place where the student tries all sorts of different things. It may be his first "unique experience," premarital sex, humor magazines or his religion.

Throughout high school his religion gave him most of the answers he needed to quiet his mind, but now very often he doubts that very religion on which he used to rely upon. Is it no wonder then, that the student is uneasy and mixed up, and as the popular song of the summer said, Searchin, Searchin. For My Love.

A protesting against the dehumanization and the institutional rituals is another of the student's deeds says Rev. John Scott, Chaplain to Protestant students.

Who is man? is the big question yesterday, today, and tomorrow. The student is always going to be asking that same question; he is searching for an identidy in today's complex society, and perhaps even more than an identidy, happiness within himself.

Thus it can be said that one has to be satisfied with himself to be a success in life, and the best way to be satisfied with oneself is to have a deep-seated religious conviction of some sort; not necessarily Christianity, for what's good for one may not be for another, but something that the student can hold on to and look—toward for guidance and the answers to his philosophical questions.

Two New Appointees in Industrial Engineering Dept.

Dr. Charles F. James, Jr., and Dr. Robert Rikkers have been appointed to the staff of UMass industrial engineering department, it was announced by Dr. Richard W. Trueswell, department head.

Dr. James, named associate professor, holds B.S. and M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Purdue University. He has designed and taught a two-year course in statistics, statistical experimental design and operations research for civilian employees of the U.S. Navy.

Dr. James' major areas of research have been in the field of applied statistics, labor economics and operations research.

Dr. Rikkers, named assistant professor, comes to the University with wide experience in private industry as well as teaching experience at Northwestern University. He received his Ph.D. from Northwestern, worked for the Esso Research and Engineering Company in its applied mathematics division, and for United Airlines as an industrial engineer.

Dr. Rikkers' major research interests are in operations research and mathematical modeling and integer and linear programming.

Mixer Planned Of New Dances

An evening of international dances and songs has been planned for the International Mixer, sponsored by the International Club, this Friday, Oct. 28, at 8 p.m. in the Womens Physical Education Building.

Foreign students on campus from different countries will present dances and songs. They will also serve as hosts to American students from the University of Massachusetts as well as Smith, Amherst, and Mt. Holyoke Colleges.

The invitation is extended to all students to come and learn the Arabic "Dabka" Dance, as well as Indian, Polish, and European dances, and to teach foreign students the latest in American dances.

"Who Cares?"

OPINION

Last week Student Senate President John Greenquist was forced to end the Senate meeting prematurely because there was no quorum. This lack of attendance on the part of old and new senators is incredible and inexcusable. It is a clear indication that many senators are not meeting their responsibility to their constituencies.

Will your senator be at the meeting this week? Is your senator fulfilling his duty as your representative? Does he make the minutes, agendas, and Senate issues easily accessible to you? Is he keeping you informed?

Is the behavior of student senators to be yet another reflection of campus apathy—possibly promote this apathy?

Should the President of the Senate have to wonder "Who cares?".

Noffsinger Offers Criticism

by MARY McNAMARA

The keynote address at SWAP 1966 held at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, Mass. was given by Dr. Mark G. Noffsinger, the Coordinator of Student Activitites for the University. Dr. Noffsinger took the occasion to discuss student attitudes and to make some thought-provoking remarks concerning the function and effectiveness of the Student Senate.

To the University Reform Committee charges recently leveled at the Senate he added, "The Senate has gone from youth to old age in a few short years. It often finds itself sidetracked . . . by items that clog its agenda and by those who are more interested in parliamentary procedures for personal victory than they are willing to comprehend and work on significant isues."

In a later interview he elaborated more on this point by saying that students don't want to waste time with trivia, that the Senate should go out to the people and it should have something to say. It should concern itself with the problem of student interest (a timely topic for debate), and encourage student activity on committees. In this period of great change in social freedom at the University it may be said that, "At no previous time has it been so favorable for students to participate in their own self-government." How many take the time? Are academic pressures great?

Dr. Noffsinger also questioned the Senate's relation to the Residential College. "Tremendous increases in student enrollment demand . . . more local and less central government units . . ." This suggests that central government is on the decline. He mentions the likelihood of governing bodies under the Senate; some to set policies and others to administer it.

With regard to finances he sees only talk of total dollars instead of how the money was used, when actually the opposite should be true. Also, some organizations such as the Collegian and the Index consume a great deal of this money, leaving little to be divided among the other campus organizations.

Dr. Noffsinger felt that freedom of the press exhibited many exciting possibilities, but that flag-waving about censorship was a mere emotional appeal with little substance on which to build. This freedom offers limitless possibilities for growth which should not be ignored.

He lamented lack of commitment on the part of both senators and students, and the fact that students don't realize their own power.

Behind the Scenes

Mental Health Guidance Available

by CAROL SCHULTZ

Slightly over six percent of all UMass students will walk one corridor this year. All will be seeking some sort of psychological guidance from the Mental Health staff.

The MHS occupies part of the Infirmary's second floor, and is partially supported by the student health fee.

The first thing the student sees when he mounts the stairs of the Infirmary is a sign informing him the MHS waiting room is next door—202.

Waiting Room Description

The waiting room is artistically decorated. A wide variety of magazines are laid out on two tables. These magazines will be handled by more than 600 students during the academic year. There are fewer students here now than there will be later in the semester, once pressures have a chance to build up.

The walls are adorned with an unusual collection of art reproductions and humorous items. Three small plants are aligned on the windowsill. A statement, by John F. Kennedy, on the door to the secretaries' office reads, "Mankind must put an end to war or war will put an end to mankind."

Many of these items are brought from home by the staff members.

"Mental Health Service," a singing alto voice says into the telephone in the secretaries' office which extends from the waiting room. The other smiling member of the secretarial staff instructs a new patient who is filling out a statistical form.

The form contains the student's name, home address, number of brothers and sisters and the reason he came to the MHS. The student is not asked to give his ID number as in most UMass record forms. This sheet will be used by the student's doctor to help identify his family relationship. It will be filed, and only the psychiatrist and four psychologists on the staff will have access to it.

Doctors Have Privacy

Each doctor has his own office. They are larger than most private offices since some of them are converted two-bed wards.

In these offices, a staff member meets privately with his patient. The problems which are discussed here include: identity problems, such as popularity, religious conflicts, and sex roles; family conflicts; interpersonal problems: man-women relationships and roommate difficulties; moral and ethical problems including guilt feelings from academic dishonesty; psychiatric problems like depression—which is frequent among students; and psychosomatic problems.

Beyond the offices, going north from the waiting room, is a conference room. The room contains a large table and a number of chairs. These chairs will be used by MHS patients participating in group therapy and by the doctors when they meet to discuss their patients.

At the end of the corridor the MHS fuses with the physiotherapy and administrative departments of the Infirmary. It isn't a long corridor but it's one of the most important.

Are you discontented enough to work for G.E.?

Does water pollution bug you? Or smog? Does it concern you that some places in the country never have enough teachers? Or nurses? And when you read about the growing pains of a developing nation, do you wish you could do something?

You can. Thousands of General Electric people are helping to solve the problems of a growing, changing world.

Generating more (and cheaper) electricity with nuclear reactors. Controlling smog in our cities and pollution in our streams. Using electronics to bring the teaching skills of an expert into many classrooms at once, the trained eyes of a nurse into many hospital rooms at once.

If you're not content with the world as it is . . . and if you have the brains, imagination and drive to help build a better one, we'd like to talk to you.

See the man from G.E. during his next campus visit. Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

UMASS TO HOST SCHOOL SAFETY CONCLAVE NOV. 1

A. Lionel Lawrence, president of the Safety Council of Western Massachusetts, announced that the 1966 High School Student Safety Conference will be held Nov. 1, at the University of Massachusetts. The one-day session will convene at 9 a.m., and adjourn at 3:30 p.m.

Defensive Driving

The conference this year will be devoted entirely to traffic safety. A 35-minute program stressing "defensive driving," has been developed and will be presented during the morning by students selected from the delegates. All delegates will be asked to present this same program at an assembly in their respective schools.

A kit containing a copy of the script, an outline of necessary visual aids and sources of aids and materials will be distributed to each delegate.

School superintendents and principals have been advised of the program and proposed assembly and have been requested to cooperate by making an assembly period available.

Inaugurated eight years ago as a Western Massachusetts project, and sponsored by the Safety Council of Western Massachusetts, the conference has expanded into a statewide program.

More than two hundred student delegates from throughout the state are expected to attend this year's conference.

Luncheon Speaker

Luncheon speaker will be James J. Stratford, Jr., executive director of Gov. Volpe's Highway Safety Committee, and a former special agent with the FBI.

Following lunch, Dwight M. McCracken, vice-president of automotive safety for Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. will present a program on skidding accidents.

PMD Rips Kappa Sig, 37-6, On Rigney's 4 TD Passes

By ROGER KIPP, Sports Staff

Phi Mu Delta made the big intramural news Monday night as they rolled over previously unbeaten Kappa Sig, 37-6. PMD started fast and got off to a 19-6 halftime lead, only to come on just as strong in the second half.

Ray Rigney was the big star, tossing four touchdown passes and running for another. His favorite targets were Mike Panchuck and Frank Guidara.

Virtual Tie

Meanwhile, Lambda Chi moved into a virtual tie for first in the "B" loop by downing ATG, 28-19. Jim Donahue, who has clicked on an amazing 73 per cent of his passes this season, threw three TD passes and ran for one. Lenny Coffin was also a hero, catching one of Donahue's TD passes and running a kickoff for a vital TD. Steve Hammond played brilliantly for the losers, pitching two TD passes and running a kickoff for another.

In other games, Mark Delsesto's TD scamper and subsequent pass to Len Nyer for the clincher led PSD by TKE, 26-19. Billy Cannata, whose running almost beat Kappa Sig a week ago, used his arm to help ASP squeeze by AEP, 14-13.

Going to the "A" loop, TEP preserved its unbeaten record, downing SAM, 28-20. Bob Epstein had a hand in all four TEP touchdowns, throwing for three and running for the other.

Maintains Pace

Beta Phi kept pace, only one game behind the leaders, by clobbering Zeta Nu, 26-0. Leading, 12-0, at the half, Jim Kane hit John Pollack twice with TD tosses to put it out of reach. Theta Chi got back on the right track, overwhelming QTV, 27-6 as Al Zito threw four TD passes, three of them to Bill Skowrya.

Dorm action saw, among others, two one-point decisions and two snow-jobs. East League action saw the Eagles score a second half TD and add the PAT to edge the Broncos, 7-6, while Ed Polchlopek's two TD passes in the second half led the Bruins by the Grants, 20-7.

The Buffaloes well-balanced offense was too much for the Barricudas, who succumbed, 27-0.

Turning to North, The Aces won their sixth without a loss, knocking off the Birches, 27-00. Dan Kausel ran for a TD in addition to chucking for three others, two to John Armstrong and one to Jim Hoover.

Shnutzer Plays Lead

Steve Shnutzer played the lead role in a squeaker, as the Leopards bested the Patriots, 20-19, while Bob Walsh's excellent running put the Comanches by the Cougars, 18-14. Elsewhere, the Colts used their Tony Lauria-to-Jim Pavio pass combination to down the Colonials, 19-6.

In the only Independent action, Harry Forman's three scoring tosses pushed the Froshites past Griffins, 19-12.

ALL-STAR GRID BALLOTS DUE

Ballots for the Intramural All-Star football teams are due in the IM office by October 28. Date for the game, bewteen the Fraternity and Dorm Al Stars is Nov. 11. Intramural basketball starts Nov. 14, with team entries due in on Nov. 7. Courts in Boyden Gym will be available to all teams who wish to practice, starting Nov. 1. Booters Rely on Clutch Defense

Lone Score by Cellilli Hangs Rare Loss on W.P.I.

By TIM MURPHY, Sports Staff

Though outshot by nearly a two-one margin and forced to play a protective defensive game for most of the afternoon, the UMass s occer squad overcame a powerful W.P.I. team, 1-0, yesterday at Varsity Field.

The defeat was only the second in 21 contests for the visitors over a three-year period.

Notched Another

Gerry Cellilli, who at left wing is the team's leading goal-getter, notched another for himself at 4:10 of the opening period, when he deftly booted a pass from center half Mike Russo past the W.P.I. goaltender for the only score of the game.

For the rest of the first period, and through most of the second, the Redmen pressed the attack in the W.P.I. defensive zone but no successful offensive materialized.

"As we were the aggressor in the first half,' 'Coach Larry Briggs noted, "they dominated the last two periods."

In the final 44 minutes, the visiting contingent poured nearly 20 shots at the UMass goal, forcing net-minder Larry Martin to come up with 15 saves, many on fine dives and tips. Martin had 25 for the game.

"In the Beginning"

Briggs lauded the effort of the entire team and attributed the squad's balance as the key to the win. "In the beginning, the boys' offensive skills paced us and near the end we had to depend on our defensive abilities to keep a good Worcster offense."

Briggs also said that W.P.I.'s "good front line" kept them in the contest and rated the Worcester team "not better than Amherst and Trinity but certainly one of the better clubs we have played this year."

Looking ahead to Saturday's battle at Vermont, which looms as a showdown for the Yankee Conference crown, Briggs expects a "good, evenly matched ball game." A year ago, the Redmen topped the Catamounts, 2-1. UMass' record now stands at 4-2-1.

Frosh Booters Rally To Tie Tufts, 2-2

By JOE DUFFY, Sports Staff

MEDFORD — Two late goals by UMass halfback John Mercury enabled the frosh booters to tie Tufts, 2-2 in a thrilling contest Friday here.

Tufts' ace forward Don Foster tallied at the nine-minute mark of the second period. The Baby Jumbos added their second and final goals in the third quarter when Dick Gardner sent a beautifully executed direct kick into the upper left hand corner of the goal, just above the outstretched hands of frosh net minder Tom Malone.

Redmen Trailed

Although the UMass defense had allowed a total of six shots in the second and third periods, the Little Redmen trailed, 2-0, going into the final period.

With only 10 minutes remaining in the contest, UMass halfback John Mercury took an excellent pass from forward Martin Mughogho and booted the ball cleanly into the strings. Six minutes later Mercury added his second goal of the day on a corner kick from Mark Joyce to knot the score at 2-2.

Cornerkicks — Friday's contest leaves the Little Redmen with an overall record of 2-2-1.

Once again the frosh led in the statistics department, outshooting Tufts, 29-15.

Coach Pete Broaca's boys close the season today when they travel to Trinity College for a 3 p.m. contest.

Detore Named Yan-Con Back Of the Week

Massachusetts halfback Bob Detore, Maine linebacker John Huard and Connecticut halbback Bill DiYeso have been selected as the Yankee Conference outstanding, back, lineman, and sophomore of the week for their performances on the gridiron last Saturday.

Spunky Halfback

Detore, a spunky 5'7' halfback, averaged four yards a carry rushing and scored Massachusetts' first touchdown as the Redmen upended Boston U. for their third straight win.

Huard, a Little All American linebacker, scored two touchdowns on defensive gems as Maine toppled Rhode Island, 21-6. The first touchdown coming when he grabbed a Rhode Island punt that he blocked and ran into the end zone and the other with a twenty-nine jaunt with an intercepted pass.

5-Yard Pass Play

DiYeso, another diminutive back, had his best day of the year in the Huskies 35-25 loss to Temple. Bill scored on a 5-yard pass play, ran 13 yards for another score, returned 3 kickoffs for 38 yards and 3 punts for 18 yards.

Other linemen cited for their play included Roy Lawrence (Connecticut), Rod Brooks (Massachusetts), George Donatello (New Hampshire), Jeeff Kuhman (Vermont), and Vin Petrarca (Rhode Island).

Backfield nominations were Paul Gruner (Connecticut), Paul Keany (Maine), Bill Estey (New Hampshire), Leo Pfeiffer (Vermont) and Larry Caswell (Rhode Island).

Sophomore standouts included Joe O'Connell (Maine), Tom Kasprazak (New Hampshire), Jack Stroker (Vermont), Brent Kaufman (Rhode Island), and Randy Robinson (Massachusetts).

Frosh Harriers Show 4-2 Mark

by TERRY CARPENTER

Having lost only to the two top ranked freshman squads in New England, the frosh cross-country team shows a fine record as it heads into the final weeks of the season.

The Little Redmen began the season successfully, winning a tri-meet at Connecticut Oct. 7 by squeezing by the Little Huskies, 32-37, and blasting Boston College, 32-62. The team met first-ranked Providence and Central Connecticut a week later and, although shut out by Providence, it managed to edge Central, 55-60.

Closest Meet

At Rhode Island on Oct. 18 the frosh had their closest meet as they nipped the Little Rams, 27-28. Last Saturday they were beaten by second ranked Holy Cross as three Crusaders tied for a first place. One of them was former Randolph High sensation Art Dulong.

Top runners for the team have been Marc Aroner, Marshall Stanton, Bob Keating, Gary Kolonovich, Dave Evans, Bob Mallon, Rich Castonguay, Ed Currier and Bob Twiss.

JOHN LISACK

FRANK STEWART

Rookie Hoop Coach Counting on Rookies

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

"We have an excellent group of kids and I'm sure we'll give a real fine account of ourselves," said UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman of the coming season.

Leaman, entering his first campaign as head coach, sees a "tremendous challenge" ahead. The Redmen are faced with one of the toughest schedules in New England, and at the same time are counting on a number of sophomores. Add to this the loss of his two highest scorers, Clarence Hill and Jim Babyak, and one can see the task before Leaman.

• "They'll Pick Up the Challenge"

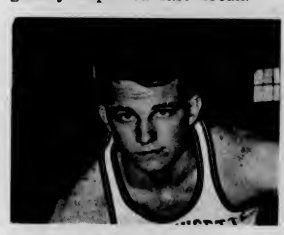
Nevertheless he has confidence in his team. "We should have pretty good size," he said, "and I'm sure they'll pick up the challenge." That challenge includes facing such teams as Boston Col., Syracuse, Providence and St. John's in addition to seeking the Yankee Conference championship and the NCAA tournament berth.



Last year, when the team had an 11-13 record, there was a noticeable lack of rebounding. That weakness should be remidied this year with the return of Tim Edwards after a year's absence. Two years ago the 6'4" senior from Duquesne, Pa., set a school record for rebounds in one season. With 6'5" junior Bill Tindall and 6'9" sophomore Pete Gayeska joining him, the front line should be outstanding.

The scoring should be well balanced this year. Although there will not be an outstanding scorer, the Redmen should play "well together." Leaman also points out that the defense will be much improved, probably because of the greater size. The other teams will not get two or three shots.

• Eight Backcourt Hopefuls

One of Leaman main worries is a possible lack of experience. When the Redmen take the court against B.C. in the opener, there will be no less than seven sophs in the top 15. "How well we do," he said, "depends on how much our sophomores help us."

Another problem that Leaman is working on is his backcourt. There are eight candidates for the two wide-open guard spots at the present time. The outside shooting will not be exceptionally strong, so the Redmen will have to rely on board strength and a greatly improved fast break.

BOB MURPHY

GARY GASPERACK

"In Edwards and Tindall we have two of the better players in New England," said Leaman. He described Edwards as "strong and smart," but pointed out that it is still a question whether he can regain his form of two years ago.

Tindall, a junior from Mt. Kisco, N.Y., is a slick runner jumper and shooter. With the improvement of the forward line, much of the pressure will be taken off him and Leaman expects him to have "a great year."

Pete Gayeska, said Leaman, has improved "200%" since the end of last year. Gayeska, a 6'9" product of Somerville, was characterized by the coach as a "fine shooter for a big man and an excellent rebounder." The tallest man ever to play for UM still needs more experience, but he should be "a tremendous asset. If he plays well during the early part of the season, we'll be a surprising team."

Capt. Frank Stewart, a 6'4" senior, will be a swing man, playing both the front and the backcourt. A hustler, Stewart has excellent speed and is a fine defensive player. Leaman feels that he will be "a tremendous leader."

One of the better defensive players is Gary Gasperack, a 6'5" junior. One of the most underrated players around, Gasperack is a good rebounder and should have a fine year at forward.

Other senior candidates for guard include John Lisack (6'4"), an excellent shooter and a fine leaper; Mike Meola (5'11"), a good ballhandler and defensive player; and Bob Murphy (6'1"), who will be given a good shot at the playmaker's position.

• Fine Nucleus of Sophs

Three improving juniors at forward are Jim Girotti (6'5"), Greg Rand (6'5"), and Rick Perkins (6'3"). Girotti was injured last week in practice, and Leaman believes that his absence is a blow to the team since he had been playing exceptionally well.

Last year's freshman team was outstanding, providing Leaman with a fine nucleus of sophs. Joe DiSarcina is an expert ball handler who should develop into a "fine backcourt man." The speedy 5'11' sophomore was a teammate of Gayeska's at Somerville.

Mike Gemei (6'3") is a good shooter with a shot at a starting position. John Shockro (6'2"), like Stewart, will play both backcourt and front. Alan Fisher, a "pleasant surprise" according to Leaman, is a strong candidate for a guard spot.

Two sophomore forwards who are improving daily are John Dreyer (6'5") and Lonnie Lehrer (6'4"). Leaman believes it is just a matter of time before they develop into top-rate players.

"THEY SAY IT AGAIN"

NO CURFEWS WITHIN TWO WEEKS

by MARSHALL NADAN, Staff Reporter

The administration has once again said that the no-curfew system should be operative in one to two weeks.

Mr. Guy Lucia, just appointed to the new post of Security Housing Officer, stated on Wednesday afternoon that in about a week there should be at least one night receptionist on duty all night long in each area of the campus. In about a week further, he stated, the full complement of fire and security guards should also be on duty.

Only in Southwest is the no-curfew system presently in full operation. There, at least the past two weeks, four night receptionists have been on duty between 3 and 7 a.m. besides the one on duty in each building until 3 a.m.

The 3-7 receptionist (one in each male residence) has opened doors for students returning late to the building he is stationed at, as well as to neargy female residences.

Also on duty in Southwest has been one security guard. One security guard has also been assigned to the police station and one other has been on duty for the rest of the campus.

According to the administration, Southwest was given priority because of the large number of students, the number of elevators and mechanical difficulties with them, and the construction work in the area.

Last week, just before Homecoming, a night receptionist also went on duty all night in Brooks. Lucia said that on Homecoming weekend no persons had to wait more than four minutes to get into his dorm once he had contacted the police station.

In addition to the four night receptionists in Southwest and the one in Brooks, four more will be on duty within a week, Lucia said. One will be stationed in a dorm on the upper hill (Van Meter area), one in the Orchard Hill area, one in the Women's Quad, and the last still undecided.

Lucia stated that the personnel are now available and it is just a matter of determining the best dorms to place them in.

He explained that a student returning after the night receptionist in his dorm has gone off (the receptionist in each dorm may determine for himself whether to go off at 2 a.m. or work longer) should go to the dorm in his area in which the 3-7 receptionist is on duty.

The receptionist will contact the police station which will dispatch a security guard to let the student in his dorm. However, for Southwest, Lucia suggested that the system would continue to work as in the past.

Publications Commission To Release 'Yahoo' Report

by KATHY WENZEL, Senate Reporter

The final report of the publications Board Commission, set up last May after the Yahoo incident, will be given next week, Sen. Gurwitz announced at Wednesday's Student Senate meeting.

The Joint Publications Commission of faculty, students, and administrators, was charged with studying all matters pertaining to the relationship between student publications and the University.

Other aspects of the meeting were acts dealing with Academic Reform, the University Reform Club's Constitution, and the passage of the Crew Club's budget.

Sen. Gaudit, Chairman of the Academic Matters Committee, reported that the pass-or-fail proposal which the Student Senate sent to the Faculty Senate last year was coming up for consideration in the Faculty Senate Thursday.

This act, if passed, would allow students to take any elective course without receiving a qualitative grade to be figured into their "cumes". The grade would simply be pass or fail.

A new recommendation to the Faculty Senate, proposed by Sen. Garjian and passed Wednesday night would give any student with an "A" average at the commencement of final exams, the option of

UMASS MAY BECOME MECCA FOR STUDENT PRESS

Actions of the National Council of College Publications Advisers in convention at Philadelphia, Oct. 20-22, may well mean that the University of Massachusetts will be the focal point of national student publications activities for the next two years.

Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies and consultant to student publications here, told the Collegian today that "much of the material on the student press area which will be receiving nationwide attention will be released with a UMass dateline."

As coordinator of the Commission on the Freedoms and Responsibilities of the College Student Press in America which NCCPA has unanimously adopted as a two-year study project, Politella is now recruiting prominent individuals to serve the Commission.

"My first job," Politella said, "is to find a 'name' to head up the Commission. And I'm hoping that extensive national publicity which will be appearing by the end of the week will bring us some applicants we can interview."

The Commission was proposed by Politella at the annual business meeting of NCCPA, Oct. 21. The group of some 140 faculty advisers who attended the session unanimously resolved to "dispel the confusions" surrounding the "state of college student publications in America" by creating a commission of "prominent" persons to make specific recommendations for

"At one time the entire student body could attend dances held in Memorial Hall's Auditorium."

by JACKLYN MUSE

In the capital Outlay program of 1967, the state legislature did not appropriate funds requested by the University for an addition to the infirmary, the Fine Arts Building and Campus Boulevards Phase II, thus delaying the beginning of construction at least another year.

The man to see on the causes and effects of such a delay is Harry S. Hugill, director of the planning and engineering department for the University administration.

UMass requested $50,000 for infirmary addition design for expansion of the outpatient facilities.

The preliminary plans called for an additional 18,000 square feet of floor space to facilitate a growing student population. Dr. Robert Gage's request was deleted by the House Ways and Means Committee and never made the floor. Hugill believes "there was a lot of pressure but no force" behind the request.

Also awaiting funds, the Fine Arts Bunlding will be built behind Memorial Hall. In the process of study and preliminary design, the project has grown extensively and now comprises a full theatre, a music hall, practice theater, art gallery and recital rooms as well as offices and practice rooms. This is the largest project in design and will cost about $12 million.

Citing the need for the Fine Arts Building, Hugill noted the music department is operating from prefabricated housing behind South College. If his predictions hold true, the department will remain there for several years. He expects construction will not even begin until September '68.

A million dollars is needed for the Campus Boulevard Phase II. Phase I is the roadway through the Southwest Complex that terminates at Sunset Avenue. Phase II will begin there and run to North Pleasant St. by way of the mall to be built around the Administration Building and proposed Fine Arts Building.

The original cost estimate of $1,500,000 was cut by modifying the plan to 1-million. Of this, $500,000 was supported by the governor.

A temporary road has been constructed across the south parking lot to help relieve the traffic problem. When Phase II is completed all one-campus streets will be closed off to eliminate traffic bottlenecks.

All three of these projects are at a standstill. The Boulevard plans are complete, while the Infirmary addition and Fine Arts Building are still in the planning stages. None of them can move any further until another appropriation period, which will probably be sometime in September '67, Hugill said. Campus Boulevards Phase II could possibly begin then but chances are the Infirmary and Fine Arts Building would not begin until a year after.

The problem with gaining the appropriations is not through any shortcomings of the legislature but simply from a lack of resources, Hugill said. The money that fills these appropriations comes from the capital outlay program for the entire state, which itself amounts to $60-65 million. The funds are not being withheld, they simply do not exist.

But when money is made available, Harry Hugill and the department will unroll the piles and piles of plans they shepherd in a small, old, wooden building behind Machmar Hall. Then they will really start functioning.

Building Progress Lags Due to Lack of Funds

by JEANE BROOKS

It's the most "collegiate" building on campus, and yet, few students go near it.

It is Memorial Hall—impressive and individual, both in structure and design, on a campus over flowing with red brick. It stands near the walking path between Bartlett Hall and the Pond, and so is passed daily by most of the campus population.

The few who enter from the back door (Mem Hall actually fronts to the east, facing the Pond) find a large, leather chaired lounge, open daily for quiet study and reading. The space inside is ample, surroundings near luxurious, Coke machines handy and "No Smoking" signs are nowhere to be seen.

It is in this room that many happy underclassmen are transformed several times a year into happy Greeks, as bids are given out here to many rushees. Special meetings, teas and fraternity smokers keep the lounge busy at night.

Off to the left of the lounge is Memorial Room, stunning with its all-white rug. This room is a "sacred place," according to Wes Honey of the Alumni Offices, housed elsewhere in the Hall.

"The room is the inner sanctum of the building," he said, "and is set aside as a memorial to those from the university who died in World War I."

The room is used for trustees' meetings and other special events. It is the only room in the building which is kept closed.

It was in memory of the alumni, faculty and students of Massachusetts Agricultural College who died in the first world war that Mem Hall was constructed. Funds came from contributions in memory of these war dead.

Beyond the lounge, which occupies approximately half the first floor, are clattering typewriters and telephones: the heart of Mem Hall. The Massachusetts Alumni Association is headquartered here.

In these offices, an active staff of nine keeps in constant contact with almost 20,000 of the 22,800 living UM alumni. Not all addresses have been found.

Wesley Honey, director of alumni affairs, indicated one of the most important functions of the Alumni Association is fund-raising.

"The alumni fund, philosophically, is one way a graduate can continue to support his alma mater," he explained.

With little publicity over the years, the fund has helped the university "in little ways" to get such propects off the ground as the Massachusetts Review, a literary magazine now quite successful, and UMass abroad in Freiburg, Germany. The association also sponsored a forerunner to DVP, the Alumni Memorial Lectures. "Our primary responsibility is to aid the university, when and where they need it. We're all looking toward the same end," said Honey.

In his office near the front of Mem Hall, a world away from the comfortable lounge outside, Honey mentioned some alumni problems.

"About 75 percent of our alumni have graduated since 1950," he explained. They're tops in loyalty, he continued, but less in contributions. Most are still raising families, and concerned with establishing themselves financially, "so they can't contribute, and don't.

As for the history of Mem Hall, Wes Honey knows it well.

"Before the Student Union was built (in 1956), this was for years the Student Center. There was a barber shop and ping pong here." The Collegian was in the office of the executive director of Associate Alumni.

In the basement of Mem Hall, Alpha Phi Omega, men's service fraternity, maintains an office, as does the Massachusetts Review.

Upstairs are a few meeting rooms and auditorium, used mostly by returning alumni at Homecoming and Commencement, and a ladies' room.

In the "old days," when Mem Hall was the campus focal point, the upstairs auditorium swung to the sounds of the Big Bands on Saturdays nights, such as the great Woody Herman.

"At one time," reminisced Alumni Director Honey, "the entire student body would attend dances in that auditorium, with big name bands playing. You can imagine what the size of the place was then, if everyone could fit in there for a big event."

So this is the building nobody knows: a quiet lounge, alumni offices and the reminiscence of a campus that used to be here.

taking or not taking the final in that course. It was voted to reconsider the University Reform Committee's constitution which had been approved at the Oct. 12 meeting.

It will go back to the Activities Committee for further study of its controversial membership, officers, and quorum clauses.

The Crew Club's budget of $4,335 was approved, with a binding clause which required a Senate Finance Sub-Committee to study the feasability of supporting the club through other means than the Student Senate, i.e., the Athletic Council.

This club, newly organized last year, produced a Junior Varsity team which ranked fourth in the nation, and a freshman team which went undefeated.

Towers Beware: Suicide Seen

WASHINGTON — A prediction was made Monday that at least 1000 college and university students will have committed suicide by the year's end, 9000 more will have attempted self-destruction and 90,000 others will have threatened it.

The reason, according to forecasters, is that phychological "pressure cooker" conditions exist on campus.

The forecast was made by the editors of Moderator, a national magazine for college and university students, who based predictions on a survey of suicide literature and campus reports.

Power Plant Keeps Us Warm and Bright

by RICHARD DANCA

Two tall stacks make the UMass power plant the easiest building to spot in the northern part of campus. The job performed in the building is one of the most important on campus, according to the plant's chief engineer Lionel G. David.

The seven boilers feeding the two stacks provide all the steam needed to heat the UMass campus and about 30 per cent of the electricity.

The plant serves a two-fold purpose, said Mr. David. Though its main job is to provide the campus with steam for heat and cooking, electricity is produced by passing the steam through generating turbines before sending it out of the power station.

When running at full steam, the plant produces about 340 thousand pounds of steam an hour. The boiler's 2200-degree temperatures consume some thirty thousand tons of West Virginia bituminous coal a year.

The coal is brought by rail to the University's Tillson farm area across East Pleasant St. from Eastman Lane and trucked onto campus as needed.

A "stripper" brings the coal up to the fourth level of the power station by a series of five belts and dumps it into one of the station two bunkers, each holding 400 tons.

One bunker feeds four boilers on the southern side of the plant, the other feeds the northern side's three smaller boilers.

Bottles, wood and pieces of mental occasionally get mixed in with the coal and workers above the bunkers have to watch the coal coming along the final belt to keep these out of the boilers.

The engineers weigh the coal as it goes into the boilers and later weigh the ash that comes out.

Water tubes surround each boiler and pressurized water — preheated to some 275 degrees Fahrenheit—runs through these coils and leave as steam to be run through the generators and sent out to the campus.

Generation of electricity is a secondary function of the plant, according to Edward R. Gilbert, assistant chief engineer, and it is only made when steam is needed for heating and cooking.

The generators are an economical complement to electricity bought from Western Mass. Electric Co., but during the summer all the generators are shut off and all electricity comes from Western Mass.

The plant has its own Western Mass. substation where high-tension electricity is fed to the campus through transformers.

Even in the summer, Mr. David said, steam is still being produced by the plant.

The steam is generated at some 200 pounds pressure and sent out in high-pressure pipes at 100 pounds and low-pressure pipes at about 15 pounds.

The loop of eight, 12 and 16-inch pipes carrying the steam "might total seven miles" according to Mr. David.

The core loop goes from the power station to the East Experiment Station near the North Dining Commons by way of a large, walkable tunnel.

The rest of the pipe, buried underground, crosses Stockbridge Rd., goes up the hill and returns to the power plant by way of the School of Business Administration Buildings, Goodell library and South College.

Fringe areas, such as the Southwest Complex and the proposed Northwest complexes, are fed by a "lateral" high-pressure line.

Some 90 to 93 percent of the steam sent out of the plant returns, according to Mr. Gilbert.

He said the loss occurs mainly in the dining commons' where the steam is used for cooking. The steam is lost purposely, said Mr. Gilbert, because " we don't want pieces of mashed potato in our lines."

Once the steam returns to the plant, it is cooled and de-oxygenated in "de-aereator heaters". Here, water under pressure is mixed with the steam in a series of stacked trays and the steam's temperature drops to about 225 degrees.

Since it is under pressure, the water remains liquid at this temperature even though its normal boiling point is 212 degrees.

The water is cooled once more in the plants fourth level, where the de-aereator heaters are, and is pumped to the basement where it is stored.

From there the water, perhaps supplemented by more town water, goes back into the boilers through the two pre-heaters.

Chemicals are added to the water to prevent scale buildup and to keep sludge from forming. A sulfide compound helps remove oxygen from the steam and a soda keeps the water soft.

Machinery operation in the power station work with either an electric motor or a turbine driven-motor.

Each operation, such as the graters which sift the ash out of the boilers has both an electric and a turbine system in case of power failure.

All controls are pneumatic, and a Westinghouse steam operated air-brake similar to those used on railroad cars is the non-electric backup unit for the electricity driven air compressor.

During the Northeast blackout last November, the power plant cut itself off from Western Mass. Electric and was able to keep generating steam and electricity, said Mr. Gilbert.

The plants generators can put out some 2050 watts without Western Mass., and with Western Mass., the load has been 5200.

Eight electric lines go out from the power station to most of the campus. The Southwest complex uses solely Western Mass. Electric Co. electricity.

In the basement of the plant, along with the electrical controls are the bottoms of the seven boilers.

Narrow guage tracks go under each and the ash is periodically empties into small carts on these tracks. The ash is weighed, then dumped into a large hopper behind the plant.

The plant, which uses everything as economically as possible, according to Mr. Gilbert, sells the ash to be made into cinder-blocks for construction work.

Also in the basement are the large blue cans of water and boxes of crackers which make the buildings fallout shelter.

According to Mr. Gilbert, the plant will expand soon, — possibly in a little more than a year — to take care of the needs of a growing campus.

He said that three more boilers will be added to the rear of the station and a new stack will be built.

Three stacks will make the power plant even more conspicuous, but when the third stack is completed, one of the older ones will be torn down.

guidelines which will be accepted universally by college student editors, educators, faculty advisers and college administrators.

The "confusions" listed in the resolution included those of "their (student pubs) relationships to their college administrations, peer groups, state governments, extra-campus communities and members of the judiciary; the confusion as to what constitutes 'freedom of student press'; as to what should be the relationships between the student press and its mentors on campus; as to what is a clear-cut statement of the legal and ethical responsibilities of student publications staffs and college administrators."

Also, to dispel the "confusion that increases with respect to the lack of a workable guide which establishes the functions and responsibilities of faculty advisers; and confusion as a result of disperate thinking on what should constitute a Code of Ethics or a Bill of Rights for student editors and advisers."

Politella said that invitations will be extended to other national organizations which are interested in the student press problems.

Among them are Sigma Delta Chi, the national professional journalism society for men; Theta Sigma Phi, the women's professional; Alpha Phi Gamma and Pi Delta Epsilon, the journalism honoraries; the Associated Collegiate Press, the United States Student Press Association, the American Council on Education, the Association for Education in Journalism and the American Association of University Professors.

Represented initially on the Commission, Politella said, will be a "prominent" adviser-member of NCCPA, journalism school administrator, citizen in public life, college president, professional editor, student editor and a member of the legal profession.

Concurrent with his search for candidates for the Commission, Politella indicated offhandedly that he is trying to raise $25,000 in pledges to support the Commission's work.

"We're going to exercise good old New England thrift on this project," he said. "Just think, the Hutchins Committee on Freedom of the Press in 1947 spent ten times as much to do a similar job for the commercial press."

What Price Professionalism?

By Lynn Stowe, Business Manager

In Wednesday's Collegian I wrote an editorial about some of the problems of the paper. Ironically enough right next to it was a letter illustrating my point. The author was obviously a freshman or he would realize that the Collegian did receive an All-American rating last year and that we are attempting to do so again this year. Can we? Not without a staff.

Why don't students want to work on their newspaper? Where are all the journalism majors? We hear the same excuse over and over. Too much—not enough time—have to study—I'm here to get good marks! What will I get out of it?

Exactly.

What does one get out of it? Intellectual stimulation? Technical training? Pride in his work? I wonder.

While everyone tells us we must work professionally and must have a professional attitude (i.e., This is a job; do it well.), we receive none of the rewards of a professional organization. To have a good newspaper you must have a staff. To get a staff you must have an incentive. It's very idealistic to say that the Collegian is an extra-curricular activity and should be fun, but it is different from a club. It is a job, with responsibility, deadlines, and headaches.

At the ACP conference this past weekend, most people were appalled to learn that no one on our staff receives payment. Other schools have different solutions. Most pay a commission for ads. Almost all schools with papers of this size pay their editors (some as high as $75 a week). Some pay for photos that are used, and some even pay their reporters a fixed price for their stories. Why not our school?

Last year a detailed "incentive report" was presented to the Student Senate. What happened to it? Has it mysteriously disappeared into the file for "Reports accepted and tabled for further consideration"? Perhaps payment as an incentive is not the complete answer on this campus, but it is a start.

Whoever authored "Collegian Rots", why don't you drop by and help make a paper we can be proud of.

Editor's note: The author of the letter titled "Collegian Rots" in Wednesday's paper was not John Klingensmith. Our sincerest apologies to Mr. Klingensmith, and our thanks to the coward who did write it.

The Bitter and the Sweet

By Jane Roland, Editorial Staff

What is it with today's youth—they seem so egocentric. They write about themselves in opulent phrases that tell of the torture of their lives and lead to the belief that the youth of today is The Greatest Youth and The Most Emotional and Most Subjected Youth ever.

"Today's youth feels the bitter and the sweet more intensely than any other age group. It feels one as deeply as the other. But it feels the bitter more often," runs an article from the Collegian feature magazine, representing the feeling of youth whining for itself.

This self-pitying attitude belies the true conditions.

It is true that we are the first generation to grow up under "The Bomb." But other generations have felt more personal hardship than we have. Most students at this school have their four years paid for them by parents who never entered college or dropped out of high school because of the pressures of the depression. Is it true that, once an adult, a person stops feeling the emotions that plagued him as a young person? Does our parents generation feel no passion ? It's a ridiculous thought, yet we say that we feel the bitter and the sweet more intensely than any other age group.

We've got our problems. But for every girl who watches her boyfriend shipped off to a deadly and useless war, a mother also sits at home and sees her son gone forever.

We're supposed to feel the bitter more often. We're the first generation to arise and make noise after the stanancy of McCarthyism stole the idealism of youth from a previous generation. So some take advantage of new freedom, and consequently new signs of a new McCarthyism creep in slowly. But meanwhile, for those who want to scream about politics, they could, and could be somewhat less bitter than those who had to force it in all their lives. Or those of our parents' age who refused to keep quiet during the pears of paranoic anti-commnuism, and found themselves in jail, still hounded today by the FBI.

Why are we so bitter? Youth today looks happy. It seems to have gotten used to the precarious position of the world; but then, this situation can never actually be gotten used to. We have problems—personal problems that can be faced only by youth.

But everyone has passed through youth, and the egocentric attitude that's been reflected in the Au Present supplement is just a reflection of prevailing ideas. Youth is great, an exciting time of life. But over-emphasis on the young leads to under-emphasis on the old; hence the present feeling that anyone over 25 is as good as dead. The older people in this country still feel "the Bitter and the Sweet," and more often feel the bitter than do youth at college who can hide from the realities of life.

Let's stop making youth a super-prized commodity and realize the advantages of each age. And with the advantages of youth comes a love of life —so let's cut down on the self-pity and realize our place as it stands in the "generational" line-up.

Thanks, Precisionettes . . .

To the Editor:

On behalf of the University of Massachusetts Army ROTC Brigade, I would like to take this opportunity to publicly congratulate the Precisionettes Drill Team for their outstanding performance at last Saturday's Homecoming football game. As is often the case with organizations that consistently display such a high degree of excellence, most people at the University have begun to take the Precisionettes fine shows for granted. Few people probably realize the amount of time and effort required of each girl to produce a performance such as they performed last Saturday.

The Army ROTC Brigade is indeed pleased with its association with the Precisionettes. Whether appearing on or off campus, the girls reflect credit on themselves, and are outstanding representatives of the University and the Brigade.

John E. Harvey
Cadet Captain,

. . . we'd like to see more of you

To the Editor:

All season the band has given its usual fine (though somewhat repetitive) performance and half time has been quite enjoyable. Just one thing was missing, which I thought would at least be provided during the homecoming game—the Precisionettes.

These girls have represented UMass at the N.Y. World's Fair, Cherry Blossom Festival and numerous parades. Yet they are rarely seen on campus or at home football games—and then only briefly. Away games are different. There they receive pre-game and half time slots and often give five minute performances.

Editor's note: The author of the editorial "Yankee, No Home" in Wednesday's Collegian was Mike Hersh of the Editorial Staff.

In Rhode Island two years ago, they received a standing ovation after an appearance in rain which forced the band to stay safely under cover. Yet UMass students are rarely allowed to see the drill team in action.

Just to set the record straight, they did appear during the B.U. game—for 3.5 minutes during pre-game. The 1:10 slot was selected to expose them to the smallest audience possible. Mr. Shinoff lamented the brevity of the twirler's performance, but at least they (there are usually two) appear at every game.

Come now, Mr. Jenkins, you run the half time program. How about adding some real variety to the future shows. Let the drill team demonstrate their skill to our student body. At least their performances will vary with each appearance.

"Ships That Pass in the Night"

To the Editor:

May I firstly thank you for the "pat on the back" given in your Friday edition under the heading of "Rumbles in the Night."

I would like to clarify just a couple of points. We have approached the College thru the official channels for permission to station our units at strategic points from 6 p.m.-Midnight. We also stated we will be willing to come under the strict surveillance and regulations by the Medical Department governing the sales of food throughout the campus.

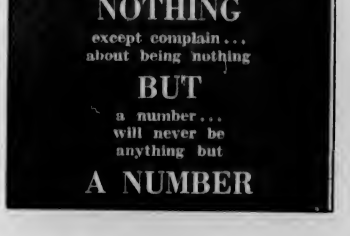
This request was made in October of last year and again this October. Being a leading Company in the field of Automatic and Manual feeding we would prefer to work in conjunction with the University officially, instead of under the cover of darkness, creeping around the outskirts like 'ships that pass in the night.'

Automatique New England, Inc.

Doesn't Anyone Care?

To the Editor:

Lately I have been bewildered by a struggle of self-realization. Perhaps this results from the transition between high school and college, or perhaps from a sudden awakening of life. In any case, certain incidents have led me to feel that I am not as well-adjusted to life as I had thought.



During some fits of depression, I have naturally tried to examine myself, and have wondered whether I am really for this adjustment, where I am a nonentity. As a well-adjusted person I should be able and willing to accept and assume the responsibilities appropriate to this period of life.

Yet I feel like just another face in the crowd; nobody really cares about me, I have lost my identity. As I walk through the Hatch, no one calls out my name, no ont looks up. Teachers are obligated to flunk a certain number of freshmen and this looms over my head. Yet my problem is universal for all UMass freshmen and introspection is typical for college students.

Why then, do I find it so difficult to study? Why must I search for incentive? Perhaps the answer lies in the fact that I am not able to say "no" to situations that may provide satisfaction, but which over a longer period, run counter to my best interests. My roommate asks me to go into Amherst with him and although I know I should stay and study, I go with him. Willpower and common sense succumb, where a well - adjusted person would have had the ability to say "no".

Perhaps I am still a kid, living in a world of daydreams and make-believe. Perhaps I cannot accept that I am in college and much is expected of me from both my parents and myself. Yet I know all is not lost, for once I have determined to achieve a single goal and am able to bring my energies together and concentrate them effectively on a single goal, I know then that I will succeed.

There's a Lot to Learn

To Mr. La Tremouille:

I remember you from last summer. Standing in Thatcher rec room you stared at our "poorly supervised vandals", making quick value judgments of them. Your obviously hostile attitude toward the Upward Bound program and these high school students is a reflection of your stereotyped value system.

The furniture and rugs that you were proud of were removed before the students arrived for the summer. The damage accomplished by these students in your rec room was merely to whittle over already well-knifed places in the woodwork. The students also organized their own student government and voluntarily paid for any damages they caused. It seems odd that "poverty brats" are responsible enough to pay for their own actions. Perhaps they have a better sense of propriety than college students.

For a college student you exhibit an amazing degree of immaturity and backwardness: using the well-worn trick of blaming those less fortunate and least able to defend themselves for their own misfortunates. If you channelled your efforts into dealing effectively with the university administration instead of haranguing the defenseless, you might be more successful in life.

The counseling staff of Upward Bound, graduates and undergraduates at college, came this summer intending to give eight weeks to help culturally disadvantaged high schoolers attain college. We left gaining as much as the students did. For, it is often the less wealthy who show enthusiasm and appreciation. They, too, know when to thank.

There is a lot to learn from intelligent high school students. Perhaps, as a bored bourgeoisie you should seek them out, not as vandals, but as students with an untapped vitality for life.

I hope that Upward Bound and similar programs may continue next summer, not only to enable a qualified high schooler to attend college, but to enrich the experiences of college students.

To the Editor:

Reference my letter published in October 24's Collegian concerning Thatcher's punishment for vandalism committed in our rec room by summer residents.

I wish to congratulate housing on its prompt (?) service. Since my submission of the letter, furniture has miraculously appeared in our rec room. That portion of our punishment must now be complete. Now all we have yet to see is replacement of our long missing rugs and repair of the many knife wounds in our natural wood panelling.

CLASSIC ITALIAN FARCE STILL FRESH, PIE-LESS

by N. C. SCANLAN

No sooner does the first reel roll of Rene Clair's THE ITALIAN STRAW HAT (1927) than do complications complicate the screen. As the third offering in the Film Study Series, this silent-screen farce presents a crew of nuptial fantastics scampering their way through a frantic wedding day.

It seems a maiden's (?) honor and straw hat have been eaten up by the horse the groom is traveling with. Both must be replaced so hubby won't know she was out with soldier boy.

Things might have been rectified but there was this wedding . . . Well, as one thing leads to another (and very effectively), everyone gets involved and cleverly manages to catch attention, building the farce with their "stock characters."

The wedding guests come complete with: one old, deaf uncle with a plugged ear-phone, a boob named Bubin hiding a glove-shy hand, a big shrew-mama with a sheepy husband whose tie must forever be straightened, and the bride's father who guides this French answer to the Keystone cops.

Adding one fiery cuckold, his wife and soldier boy, all is ready for the chasing of the groom.

Rene Clair has worked his players through a wonderfully mime-show with very few titles. At the wedding ceremony, his company chain-reacts to a long winded justice. Beneath the comedy of this farce, Clair has set his satire on these people.

To start with, all the buffoonery could have been avoided had the hat losing lady said, "I lost it, husband dear." Then this is a society in which one's hat is one's honor, a tie must always be straight, one glove's an incomplete man. These ceremonious ones are to Clair the "petty bourgeoisie."

He also places children (poor, I presume) spread over street corners for social contemplation. He blends his farce with criticism. Many of their real actions are farcical.

Photography by Desfassiaux and Roudakoff rises above mere recording only occasionally, but it is not missed. The screenplay's the thing — marvelously written and directed, building up to the comical climax.

It ends as if catching its breath with too many individual goodbyes. Any farce is easily resolved and all the chasing goes for naught: deaf uncle supplies an Italian hat as a wedding gift. He should have unplugged his ear-phone sooner.

Thanks to the groom he didn't for Rene Clair hid the hat and created a classic farce, light, fun, true 1920s. (And without using one lemon pie!)

Daumier Highlights SU Art Exhibit

The sixty Daumier lithographs now on display in the Student Union Art Corridor until November 13 present Daumier's work in the media through which it made its appearance and commented on the foibles of human nature in the press of his day.

Revolution, War, Political intrigue, a bourgeois society built on greed and hypocrisy—this was nineteenth-century France, the France of Honore Daumier. As chronicler of his time, daring social satirist, and master technician, Daumier stands foremost among nineteenth-century artists.

At the age of only twenty-four, Daumier was imprisoned for the publication of his political cartoon "Gantua." Upon his release, however, he continued his scathing cartoons reflecting the social and political events of his era.

Daumier eventually produced over 4,000 lithographs, many now considered masterpieces of the art, some 200 powerful and dramatic canvases, a few superb sculptures, and innumerable drawings.

Daumier's life was a continuous struggle against poverty and in defense of the ideals that determined the course of his life. For more than forty years he devoted himself to the republican cause, supported by an extraordinary talent and an unwavering conviction of the ordinary man.

His work survived, not only as a vivid documentation of nineteenth century France, but also as masterpieces in themselves—and as a reminder that individuality, commonsense, and courage are as sorely needed today as they were in the first half of the 19th century.

Daumier, in short, was a man of his time — and ours.

Management Students Play Life-Size Monopoly

by MARILYN SANDSTROM

"The 'management game' is being played by students with great enthusiasm," exclaimed Gordon Chen, associate professor in the management department.

"I have never seen children so excited or put in so much time with a course," he added. "Why, last year, several of my students wanted to continue the course into the next semester without credit!"

Management 341 of UMass' School of Business Administration is a simulated decision-making course, designed to give students a chance to actually play top-managerial roles. It is distinctively different from other management courses. Not only does the student make important decisions, but he must uphold them — good or bad — in achieving results.

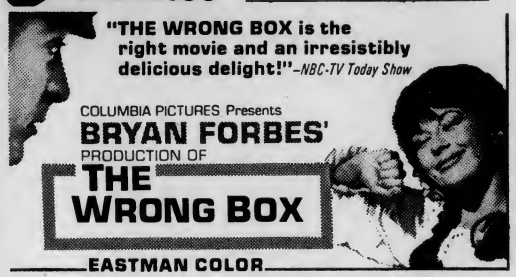
One eager student describes his class as "great." His section of 15 members is divided into three groups, each assigned a hypothetical company in an industry. Each company competes with the others for profits and market position. The "executives" apply their knowledge of business administration and economics in formulating decisions. Decisions are processed through a programmed computer which indicates whose organization is in the best market position.

The course opens with a few weeks of planning—long and short-run sales forecasting and projections, marketing and strategy, and financial planning. Then, the students run the companies using the plans and policies each group has worked out. At the end of the semester, each unit prepares a financial report of its organization and presents it at a simulated stockholders' meeting.

This course has provided opportunity for management students to get the "feel" of the methods and importance of decision-making through first-hand experience, the students believe. One semester provides about five simulated years' experience as an executive of a multi-million dollar corporation.

Each company starts with an approximate $6 million net worth and sales averaging $16 million annually. This imaginary business environment gives participants the opportunity to practice the art and science of forward planning and decision-making at the top-management level — though profits and losses are through paper transactions only.

During the past few years, several improvements and additions have been made to the course, Prof. Chen reported. Before 1964, it was non-computerized. But its introduction as a computerized game has increased the interest and vitality. Also, the addition of simulated, live institutions has linked the game more closely with reality, he said. For instance, live financial and legal institutions were added this year. When company officials must borrow money to finance operations, they apply for loans at the simulated UMass Bank. The groups are under regulation of a hypothetical Federal Trade Commission which enforces anti-trust and trade laws governing interstate commerce. Should a student file complaints, hearings are held in the business law classes —thus tying closer bonds within SBA.



The "management game," started by the American Management Association in 1956, is also played by real executives. But in the real business world, managers must pay several hundred dollars to attend conference game meetings.

"We feel that the chance to take this course should be made known to all students," emphasized Chen, "and that ours is a more complicated and ambitious program with little monetary expense to the student." The text is a 50 cent manual!

The management department encourages and urges students to consider this course as a rewarding adventure.

This is your chance, Student #7026941. Drink Sprite and be somebody.

MR. BIG

Take heart. Take a dime. Then take a bottle of Sprite from the nearest pop machine.

Suddenly it's in your hand. Cold. Biting. Tart and tingling. You cackle fiendishly and rub your hands together. (You should; they're probably chilled to the bone by now.)

You tear off to a corner, alone, but within earshot of your fellows.

And then? And then? And then you unleash it. SPRITE! It fizzes! It roars! It bubbles with good cheer!

Heads turn. Whisperings. "Who's that strangely fascinating student with the arch smile. And what's in that curious green bottle that's making such a racket?"

And you've arrived! The distinctive taste and ebullient character of Sprite has set you apart.

You're somebody, uh...uh, whoever-you-are.

Operetta Guild To Present Carnival

On April 13, 1961, Broadway opend its doors to present the David Merrick Production of "Carnival" starring Anna Maria Alberghetti and Jerry Ohrbach. It met with great success and was voted the best musical of the year by the New York critics' circle.

On November 11, 1966, Bowker Auditorium will open its doors to present the Operetta Guild's Production of "Carnival."

Heddy Zirin, a sophomore at Smith will star in Lili, The Lonely Waif who seeks the magic and splendor of the carnival. Co-starring will be Bob Emerson, a senior here at the University, in the role of Paul Berthalet, The Lame Puppeteer who falls in love with Lili. The supporting cast will include Steven Schnetzer, as The Marco The Magnificent; Peter Schofield, as Jacquot, The Puppeteer's Assistant: Karen Connolly, as The Incomparable Rosalie: and John Stavros as Schlegel, The owner of the Carnival.

A cast of dancers and chorus will provide much added color and vigor to th eshow which promises to be one of the best yet.

NAIADS Will CONVENTION At UM

The Association of Synchronized Swimming for College Women will hold its annual conference this year at the University on Nov. 11 and 12.

NAIADS are hostesses for this conference which is under the direction of Andrea Snell, student president, and Miss Esther M. Wallace, faculty advisor. On campus that weekend will be approximately 225 students and 45 faculty members from the eastern United States and Canada.

These delegates will need to be housed in women's residence halls for both Friday evening Nov. 11 and Saturday evening No. 12. NAIADS hope to house all delegates in the women's quad near the Women's Physical Education building.

A NAIAD has been assigned to each dorm in the quad. If you live in the women's quad, are planning to be away from campus Nov. 11 and 12 and would be willing to let an ASSCW delegate use your bed; please contact one of the following NAIADS:

URI HOSTS STUDENT UNIONS' Conference

Representatives from University of Massachusetts will attend the regional conference of the Association of College Unions-International to be held at University of Rhode Island on October 28-30. They will attend seminars and workshops to discuss the cultural, social, recreational and educational programs provided by college unions.

Colleges and universities from the New England states and eastern Canada will be represented. Of major interest at the conference will be the keynote address by Dr. John F. Quinn, University of Rhode Island Vice President for Student Affairs, a special workshop devoted to career opportunities in the Union field, and seminars on creativity, communication, and the role of the Union in the academic community.

The Association, founded in 1914, is officially represented on over 650 campuses throughout the world.

The purpose of the Association is to provide an opportunity for unions to join in studying and improving their services, and to assist in the development of new college unions. The college union on each campus is regarded as an integral part of the total educational program of the institution.

Representing University of Massachusetts will be:

Discussion leaders — Susan Dietch, Martha Preston, Kenneth Butler, Richard Volpe, Phyllis McAteer.

Others attending — Susan L. Fairfield, Susan Ostrander, Judy Mosumeci, Richard B. Schinoff, Marjorie Zich.

Staff attending — Mr. Harold Watts, Mr. Richard Davies, Mrs. Lois Frey, Miss Sheila McRevey.

Not Enough Good Food

Dining Commons to Be Investigated

The Senate Services Committee held two meetings last week. The most outstanding problems discussed concerned Housing and the Commons.

A Housing sub-committee was formed including Larry Marcus, Chairman; Pat Sullivan, and Joe Duffy. The committee is now investigating such matters as dorm refunds, inadequate vending machines, and complaints from individual dorms concerning poor intercom systems, lack of pencil sharpeners and mirrors, and the failure to remove excess beds from rooms in the Quad.

Dining Commons sub-committee was also formed. Serving on the committee will be not only services committee members but hopefully members of the administration such as Dean Field, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Grady.

Dean Field appeared in favor of such a committee, which will investigate such questions as the lack of second helpings, the quality of the food, and the possibility of purchasing meal tickets for only one or two meals a day.

Another important issue before the Services Committee is that of setting up an absentee ballot procedure for students on campus who would like to vote in the upcoming elections.

Information concerning absentee voting will be published in the Collegian and hopefully, campus Notary Publics will be on hand to aid students in voting.

Of interest to many students, will be the Services Committee's investigation of the University pay check schedule. Efforts are being made to see if students working on campus can receive their checks every two weeks instead of every month.

Tryouts Open on Monday For 2nd U. T. Production

Tryouts for the next University Theatre production, A Thurber Carnival, will be held next Mon- (Oct. 31, Nov. 1, 2) at 7:30 p.m. (Oct. 31, Nov. 1, 2) at :30 p.m. in Bartlett, room 119.

The University Theatre draws its talent from the student body at large and anyone who thinks that he might enjoy finding himself in one of James Thurber's hilarious situations is welcome.

A Thurber Carnival, which will appear Dec. 7-10, is a dramatized revue of some of the humorist's funniest stories. They include the "Night the Bed Fell," "The Unicorn in the Garden," "The Macbeth Murder Mystery," and "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty."

Live music, played by a small jazz combo, is one of the major elements of this fun-filled presentation and should provide any student interested in guitar, bass, drums, or sax, with a good opportunity to share in a stimulating theatre experience.

Approximately 30 graduate and undergraduate students in the Electrical Engineering Department at UMass will attend the annual meeting of the Northeast Electronics Research and Engineering Meeting sponsored by the Boston Section of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, Inc. The meeting is being held at the Sheraton Boston Hotel and the War Memorial Auditorium in Boston on November 2, 3, and 4, 1966.

One of the objectives of NEREM is to support student activities in the northeast area. As a consequence, the student program has been expanded this year. A student competition for award papers is being carried out and students are attending NEREM free of charge. In addition, NEREM is providing free transportation for the IEEE students in the northeast area to NEREM-66.

A major portion of the technical program this year is related to the area of semiconductor technology. Classical areas of microwaves, communications, antennas, and digital techniques are present as usual. However, for the first time this year the NEREM program encompasses the subject of Oceanography.

Campus Publication Makes Debut

by MARSHALL NADAN

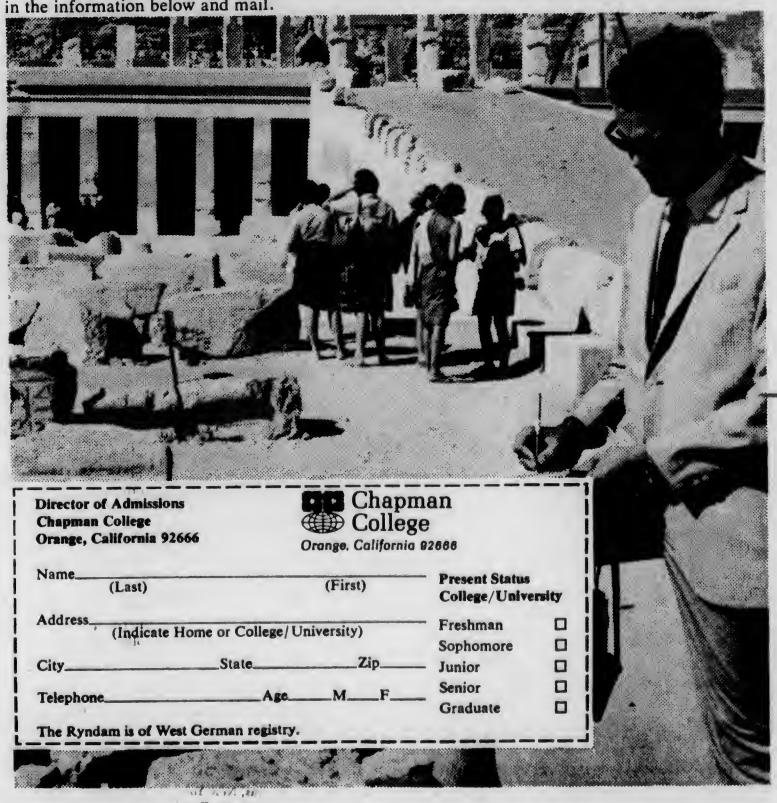
The Spirit of '76 is with us again. This time The Spirit of '76 is a new publication on campus put out by the local chapter of the Association of Federal, State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), AFL-CIO. The U-Mass local number happens to be 1776, thus the name of the newsletter.

Editor of the new publication is Guy Lucia, a long time University employee who was also just recently appointed Security Housing Officer. The newsletter scheduled to be published monthly will accept articles from students.

The AFSCME is the union of non-professional employees on campus. Lucia pointed out that just last year the Commonwealth passed a law which gives all state and municipal employees the right to bargain collectively and to negotiate a contract.

The AFSCME would like to be the exclusive bargaining agent on campus for non - professional staff, Lucia stated. This would mean that at some time the Labor Relations Board would have to hold a referendum to determine if such was the wish of the non-professional employees.

This is Russ Kennedy of Balboa Island, California, on an in-port field trip as a student aboard Chapman College's floating campus.



The note he paused to make as fellow students went ahead to inspect Hatshepsut's Tomb in the Valley of the Kings near Luxor, he used to complete an assignment for his Comparative World Cultures professor.

Russ transferred the 12 units earned during the study-travel semester at sea to his record at the University of California at Irvine where he continues studies toward a teaching career in life sciences.

As you read this, 450 other students have begun the fall semester voyage of discovery with Chapman aboard the s.s. RYNDAM, for which Holland-America Line acts as General Passenger Agents.

In February still another 450 will embark from Los Angeles for the spring 1967 semester, this time bound for the Panama Canal, Venezuela, Brazil, Argentina, Nigeria, Senegal, Morocco, Spain, Portugal, The Netherlands, Denmark, Great Britain and New York.

PSD Upsets Lambda Chi; Kappa Sig Downed Again

By ROGER KIPP, Sports Staff

Five dorm league titles and two independent leagues were wrapped up this week but Tuesday's and Wednesday's games necessitated playoffs in the tight fraternity races.

In Fraternity "B" loop action, clutch play by AEP allowed them to hand Kappa Sig their second straight loss, 14-13. The upset would have allowed Lambda Chi a chance to gain at least a tie for the title by winning, but they were upset by fired-up PSD, 25-20.

PMD Rolls

Meanwhile, Phi Mu Delta, victors over KS by 37-6 on Monday night, continued to roll, knocking off ATG, 34-20. The other B League game, although involving no title aspirants, was a great one, ASP edging TKE, 27-26. Kappa Sig is now 5-2 and will play the winner of Thursday's LCA-PMD encounter (both 4-2) for the championship.

In the "A" League, SPE won the battle of the unbeatens, downing TEP, 26-14. Beta Phi, idle Wednesday, can throw it into a three-way tie by beating SPE. If BKP is the winner TEP, BKP, and SPE would all have 5-1 records. Elsewhere, TC beat Zeta SAM, 21-13.

Dorm-wise, five of the league titles are wrapped up. In the East, the Chadbourne Maroons won the title in convincing fashion, swamping the Eagles, 43-7, Wednesday while the Bruins closed their season by clobbering the Buffaloes 31-6.

Chestnuts Win Title

In the South, while the Limes bumped the Senators, 24-6, the Chestnuts wrapped up the title, besting the previously unbeaten Lemons, 26-14.

In the South-West, nobody caught the Colts (6-1) who are kingpins there by virtue of a 35-6 victory over the Commanches (5-2). The Jaguars finished up by whitewashing the Leopards, 12-0, and the Patriots nipped the Colonials, 26-25.

It would be interesting if the Hi-Los (West) and the Aces (North) were to meet in the playoffs. The Aces, one of the finest teams anywhere, beat the Flaming A's, 35-0, to complete their title quest and undefeated season. Remarkably, they allowed only six points for the entire season.

The Hi-Los, on the other hand, are the highest scoring of any dorm team, with 32 points per game. They beat the arch-rival Oaks, 27-7, for the title.

Up in the Air

Only the Tower League remains up in the air. The Flaming A's, victors over the Redwoods, 25-12, are 6-0 and would have had to beat the Smashers (5-1) in Thursday's game to wrap it up. The Smashers actually tied the Hemlocks, 12-12, but lost the game, 13-12, because they allowed more first downs. Other scores: Spartans 20, Seagrams 7 (Tower); Hoovers 13, Elm 0 (West); and Hawks 34, Rams 6 (North).

Hampshire, which beat the Chem Club, 14-6, won the American League of the Independent circuit, while the Froshites took the National title by triumphing over the Bombers, 18-0.

In the International League, last year's campus champion Courtesy Taxi is in a three-way tie for the league top spot.

Gould Glitters

A dramatic goal-line stand with less than a minute left gave the Foundry a 14-13 victory over the Numerals. The losers' Mike Gould-to-Ken-Kurker pass combination, which accounted for 150 yards during the contest, clicked on a long bomb to put the ball on the Foundry's three-yard line with 30 seconds to go, but the Foundrymen's defense prevailed.

Numeral standout Gerry Brown suffered a broken collarbone as he threw a crushing block to set up the Numerals' second TD.

Booters at Vt.: Another Yankee Title on Line?

HOWARD

The UMass soccer team travels to play the University of Vermont tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. at Burlington in a game that could decide the Yankee Conference champion.

Coach Larry Brigg's Redmen stand 2-0-1 in Conference play and 4-2-1 overall. Vermont is 3-0 in the Yan-Con and 4-1 overall. Last fall Vermont, Connecticut and UMass finished in a three-way tie for the first official Yan-Con soccer crown. Rhode Island still remains in contention for the title with a Conference record of 2-1-1.

UMass posted two non-league shutouts during the past week over Tufts, 4-0, and Worcester Tech, 1-0. It was only Worcester Tech's second loss in their last 20 games.

Senior All-Conference goalie Larry Martin turned in a top netminding effort in the tight win over WPI, salvaging 25 shots.

Briggs has announced a probable starting lineup of Martin, juniors Frank Howard and Dave Jekanowski at fullback, Captain Mike Russo and juniors Bill Allan and Dick Hale at the halfback spots, senior Gary Gibbons and junior Gerry Cellilli at the wings, and on the front line senior Aba Ayanaba and juniors Dick Rosoff and Marty Smith.

Last year the Redmen edged the Cantamounts, 2-1, in double overtime to earn a share of the tri-championship.

Redmen Must Contain Vermont's Mitchell and Three Quarterbacks

By GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

Two years ago Vermont had a 6-0 record until a visiting UMass football team crushed its Beanpot hopes with a decisive 28-7 victory.

Under similar circumstances, the 1966 Redmen travel to Burlington, Vt. tomorrow to meet the Catamounts in what should decide the Yankee Conference championship. Both teams have 3-0 records in conference play, and UVM is unbeaten in five contests.

UMass Coach Vic Fusia said, "Our best effort is necessary. There just aren't many minuses on the Vermont squad this year." The Cats have one of the most prolific offenses in New England, led by sensational halfback Bob Mitchell and a fine passing attack.

Defense vs. Offense

It shapes up essentially as a battle between the UMass defense and the UVM offense, although the Cats also have a strong defense. Their offensive unit, amazingly enough, has only one senior.

In the weekly injury department for UMass, tackle Bill Connor definitely will not play Saturday, and defensive back Bob Ellis is an uncertain starter. In addition, reserve center John Jerszyk is hurt and will be out for the season.

Vermont should be up psychologically since they haven't beaten UM since 1954 and now have a shot at the Beanpot. Without a doubt they are the best UVM team that the Redmen have ever faced.

Fantastic Year

Vermont coach Bob Clifford's offense centers around junior Mitchell who has been having a fantastic year. In five games he has carried 171 times for 800 yards and eight touchdowns. A powerful runner, he has excellent moves and good speed. According to Fusia, he has the rare ability to sense a hole in the line.

Backing him up is a capable fullback Jim Culhane. Yet it would be a mistake for the Redmen to concentrate on Vermont's running attack. The Catamounts, when not handing off to Mitchell, are most effective with the pass.

Three quarterbacks have been used successfully this year, a position which was supposed to be one of their weaknesses. Dave Shumate, a junior, has hit on 19 of 49 attempts for 314 yards and four TDs. Sophomore Dick Simpson also has pitched four TD passes while compiling a 53 percent average and 203 yards.

Sophomore Surprise

The surprise of the team has been soph Jack Stroker who has thrown for three touchdowns. In all, the trio has combined for 45 out of 99 completions for 734 yards, 11 touchdowns and just five interceptions.

Jack Schweberger, a senior split end with fine moves, is UVM's long threat, while junior tight end Jeff Kuhman, with 15 receptions and 242 yards, is an excellent clutch receiver. At wingback is Pete Clifford, the coach's son, who excels at both pass-catching and reverses.

Fusia is encouraged by the improvement of his offense in the last two games. He said that his major problem has been trying to put together reasonably healthy offensive and defensive units.

As for tomorrow's game, Fusia has a good deal of respect for the Catamounts. "They've been an amazing team," he said, "but so have we."

Fusia: "They've been An Amazing Team – But So Have We."

LACROSSEMEN TO SCRIMMAGE

The UMass varsity lacrosse team will end five weeks of practice tomorrow at 1:30 on the field opposite University Blvd. with its annual fall scrimmage. There will be no admission charge.

Coach Dick Garber will divide his forces into two squads of approximately 25 players each. The contest will be played under normal game conditions and should provide valuable experience for the numerous sophomores vieing for starting berths.

Frosh Gridmen Invade Rhody For Third Tilt

Coach Burley Crowe's freshmen football team seeks its second win of the season this afternoon at 3 o'clock against the Rhode Island frosh at Kingston, R. I.

The Little Redmen have lost to the Army Plebes, 13-8, and own a 12-6 win over the Boston University Pups. Rhode Island tied New Hampshire and shutout Connecticut, 9-0, for a 1-0-1 record.

Coach Crowe has announced that the probable starting lineup would find a backfield consisting of quarterback Tom Adams, left halfback Steve Parnell, right halfback Gerry Grasso, and fullback Larry Fortunoff. In the line will be tight end Jim Nangle, right tackle Bob Goc, right guard Marty Parlon, center John Dubzinski, left guard Bruce Fulton, left tackle Dan Callahan, and split end Dennis Gray.

The frosh will play their last two games at home against Connecticut, Nov. 4 at 2 p.m., and New Hampshire, Nov. 11 at 1:30 p.m.

Cross-Country Runners Compete in Y-C Meet

The University of New Hampshire will be favored to retain its Yankee Conference cross country championship tomorrow at the conference meet at 1 p.m. at Kingston, R. I.

The Wildcats, who won their initial conference title in 1965, sport a 5-1 record this fall. Although last year's individual winner, George Estabrook, has graduated, his brother Bob is still around. The younger Estabrook placed sixth in 1965 and is captain of the Wildcat contingent.

Soph Standout

Two sophomore standouts for UNH have been Ev Dunkles with three firsts and two seconds, and Bob Vanier.

UMass and Rhode Island appear to be the top contenders to dethrone New Hampshire. The Redmen, 5-3 this fall, had the individual winner for five straight years between 1960 and 1964. Terry Carpenter, now a senior, won the title for the Redmen as a sophomore in 1964. UMass would like to see him return to that form.

However, the Redmen are a sophomore team. Top runners are sophs Paul Hoss, Marc Gelinas and Charles Lang.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE ANNOUNCES MAJOR GROWTH PROPOSALS

Editor's Note: This is the first half of a two-part article on Hampshire College to be concluded Wednesday.

Hampshire College, the new liberal arts institution recently founded in Western Massachusetts with the encouragement of Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Smith, and the University of Massachusetts, announced Thursday a comprehensive program for educational and physical development involving major departures from conventional academic practice.

Among these departures are the replacement of the customary graduation requirements—usually defined in terms of credits, courses and hours—with a system of major examinations and independent study projects, making it possible for students to proceed on their own schedules and to graduate in less or more than four years; the establishment of a new academic division of linguistic studies; organization along School rather than academic departmental lines; heavy emphasis on student independence in planning and carrying out academic work; the use of information transfer devices; a strong emphasis on inter-institutional cooperation; and a number of arrangements to insure that the College will continue to be "experimenting rather than experimental."

In a 500-page document adopted by the Hampshire Board of Trustees, the College has outlined what President Franklin Patterson calls "a first approximation" of the academic program, physical plan, financial structure, and other aspects of the life of the new college. This approximation calls for a coeducational college of 1440 students, a faculty of 90, and an academic and financial program under which the College can operate principally on income from tuition. The new institution is seeking outside support for capital development, but it expects to be able to sustain operating expenses without additional income from endowment.

Scheduled to open in 1969, Hampshire was started with a pledge of $6 million from Harold F. Johnson, the retired attorney who heads the Hampshire Board of Trustees, and with the encouragement and support of four neighboring institutions—Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges and the University of Massachusetts—all of them less than six miles from the 450-acre Hampshire campus. In its program, Hampshire commits itself to helping strengthen cooperation among these institutions and urges the creation of a new Center for Cooperative Development in Education in the Connecticut Valley. Hampshire will be an autonomous and independent institution with its own faculty and facilities, entering into cooperative arrangements with its sister institutions as an equal.

Central to the new program is what President Patterson calls a "hospitality to contemporary life" involving the education of men and women "who see the possibilities as well as the problems surrounding them, and who understand not only the means of converting problems to possibilities, but who are endowed with the moral imperative to act."

In an abstract of the longer report, Hampshire commits itself to "reconstruct the human purposes of education, so that young men and women can find acceptable meaning in a technological social order and acceptable order in subjective cultural freedom."

To carry out these objectives, the College will encourage students to engage in work beyond the campus, instituting a midwinter term of four weeks in which undergraduates will be able to carry out independent or collaborative studies, or to participate in social service

UMASS SUMMER

Unique in Many Ways

by PAT PETOW

UMass summer school 1966 was unique at the Amherst campus and elsewhere in a number of ways.

For those UMies who spent part of their vacation in Western Massachusetts, the initials SSEC came to mean something like representation, participation, involvement.

The summer of 1966 saw a student government, the Summer Student Executive Council, constituted for the first time for summer students.

How did SSEC come into being and what it did are questions requiring extensive answers. But those questions would not be framed unless, as was the case, these students truly establish a government for themselves.

The 25 Councilors at the close of 12 intensive weeks, with two vacancies, were divided among classes as follows: 20 swing-shift freshmen; two sophomores '69; and three seniors '67.

By the end of June the first Council meeting had been held. A procedure for filling six constituencies with out representatives after the June 28 election was agreed upon, and procedure for the election of Council officers was established.

Guiding the Council from its initial stages was Lew Gurwitz '68, a member of the Student Senate last Spring. Representing Married Students, Gurwitz took on the responsibility of advising the Council and organized their first elections. With the selection of officers, the Senator relinquished his protem chairmanship and was named Parliamentarian of the body.

Presiding over the SSEC from its second meeting was President Paul Schlosberg '70. Other officers included John "Mike" Lannon '67, Vice-President; Ann "Mac" McGunigle '69 UMass Boston, Treasurer; and Caryn Goldberg '70, unanimously elected Secretary.

Sanction of Summer Men's Judiciary, another 1966 first along with women's judicial boards, and establishment of a Student Services Committee came early in the history of the government.

Throughout the summer the structure of women's judiciary and resolution of grievances called for heated and earnest debate.

Topics of interest during the sessions and major accomplishments listed by the members themselves in 47 question Summer Collegian poll were "extended curfew, extended libe, extended pool."

Another Councilor called this activity "accomplishments of Dave O'Connor's committee" (Student Services). O'Connor '69, incidentally, was voted the "best Councilor" in that same poll.

The curfew was changed to 12 midnight on Sundays, effective the last Sunday of July.

As a letter to the editor put it: "This achievement is in all of its modesty a major one. The students have been, for the first time, represented in summer school. Nice, isn't it." (Summer Collegian)

Weekday curfews were also extended, for all classes, to 11:30 p.m. with the accomplishment of longer library hours.

Reserve desk service at Goodell continued two hours after the closing at 9 p.m. of "5th level use. From August 7, a two week period of experiment was stretched to include finals and the session end.

Other summer government business included the set-up of an intramural program of softball and basketball teams and a successful social event, Las Vegas Nite.

One problem the SSEC took on late in its proceedings was support of a petition circulated at the eleventh-hour by swing shifters. "The petition... was originally started in a move to gain admittance to football games... The intent, if not its wording, is to allow swing-shifters to pay an equivalent athletic and activities fee... and receive an 'I.D.' The card hoped for would admit the holder to all free-with- I.D. UMass events.

Unfortunately Council effort for the petition came too late for its realization. But recourse to student government had obviously been valued by new UMass students.

Back to that poll again, "Fifteen of the summer government members felt that the future existence of the Council was not an issue and that 1966 has set a precedent that will be followed."

Twenty to one, a good ratio for any SSEC question, the members recorded themselves

Trustee Accused Of "Interest Conflict"

Naming of a state AFL-CIO official who is a trustee of the University of Massachusetts on a sub-committee to pick a bargaining unit of non-academic University employees was termed "ridiculous" here Thursday by the Massachusetts State Employees Association.

The contest to choose a bargaining unit is between the MSEA and the AFL-CIO union.

On the sub-committee of the trustees are Hugh Thompson, New England representative of the AFL-CIO; Joseph P. Healey of Arlington; and George L. Pumphret of Boston.

Statement from an unidentified source at the University that "there is no conflict in his (Thompson's) status as a union official and service on the committee" was termed "ridiculous" by Joseph E. Deschenes, president of MSEA at the University, and William P. Gurski, MSEA institutional representative.

"Of course his (Thompson's) recommendations will favor the AFL-CIO," they said. "Of course, there is a clear cut conflict of interest. If Hugh Thompson had any sense of propriety, he would disqualify himself..."

They called on the trustees to name some other member to the sub-committee.

Students Refuse to Offer Draft Advice

A massive wave of indifference among the nation's college students is hampering the efforts of the President's advisory commission on the draft.

The National Advisory Comm. on Selective Service, appointed by Pres. Johnson July 2 and now racing to meet its mid-December deadline for recommendations, has found students unwilling to offer any advice on changing the draft.

Hundreds of other students interviewed by Commission investigators have taken their stand on the status quo favored by Draft Director Lewis B. Hershey: They want no change in the present system of student deferments and are uninterested in the volunteer "national service" concept proposed by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara May 18.

Commission Chairman Burke Marshall, a former deputy attorney general and now general counsel for IBM has written to 107 national organizations of student, labor, veteran, civic, women's and religious groups seeking their opinion on "the long view" of the nation's military manpower requirements.

Marshall has also written the nation's governors, who now nominate the 16,000 local draft board officials, seeking their viewpoint on the draft's future. Marshall has asked that opinions look beyond the "short-range military requirements" i.e., the Vietnam war.

Answers have yet to arrive here as the Commission heads into the policy-making phase of its existence.

The Commission, appointed by the President in the midst of Congressional hearings and a nationwide uproar on alleged inequities in the draft, has had three meetings in the past four months. Its staff was appointed in early September.

Students across the nation have been interviewed by a nine-man team. Their findings indicate that students in prestigious ivy-covered colleges differ radically from those in junior colleges and large urban or state universities.

The upper-class students in higher-priced colleges expressed more concern with inequities in the draft but the middle-class students, most of whom feel they will eventually face the draft, expressed less anxiety over a "poor man's war." Most students in upper-class colleges plan to go on to several years of grad school and then marry, a circumstance which they acknowledge exempts them from the draft.

Growth On The Go

Campus Changes Impress Alma Mater

Students amble to class across make-shift bridge. Some southwest occupants have dubbed the temporary walkways as "University pre-nostalgia."

by AUDREY WYKE

Homecoming '66 and thousands of University of Massachusetts alumni visit their alma mater. For some, it is the first pilgrimage in years. These grads are amazed at the construction since they were last here, much of it in the past six years.

BARTLETT HALL . . . MORRILL SCIENCE CENTER . . . SCHOOL OF EDUCATION . . . NEWMAN CENTER . . . BOYDEN . . . THE SOUTHWEST COMPLEX . . .

What will it be like when the Classes of '67, '68, '69, and '70 come back for Homecoming?

For the teachers who shared an office with two others — A 10 story addition to Machmer. Bids are expected to be advertised during December for this addition, which will include three auditoriums and offices. The auditoriums will have a combined seating capacity of 770. To make room for the addition, Farley Lodge will be moved.

* * * *

For those who like to smoke while doing reserve reading — a new library designed by Edward D. Stone, an architect who is famous for the New York Plaza and is designing the J. F. Kennedy Library in Boston. A total of $600,000 has been appropriated to plan the building which will include many lounges and a mall for the 28-story building. The $12-million library will be located near Old Chapel.

For grad students — a high-rise laboratory. The final plans for the $20 million Graduate Research Center are expected to be resubmitted for further review by Jan. 1 and the contract for clearance of Adams Hall will be advertised soon after.

"It takes years to plan a building but with good reason," according to Mr. Hayden of the physical plant department. A state authority must first select the architect with the advice of University administration. The architect then draws ideas in cooperation with the physical plant director. The faculty comments on the plans and they go back to the designer. He must plan every detail, including door frames, plumbing and electrical wiring.

Bartlett East has been in the planning stage since March, 1963. Construction is expected to begin Dec. 22 on the parking lot near the School of Business Administration. The East building, joined to Bartlett by an underground tunnel, will contain mainly classrooms and language labs.

For alumni who had trouble finding a seat in the Hatch — an addition to the Student Union. The construction is financed under the Building Authority in the same way as dorms: a non-tax bond issue. The addition, to be called the Continuous Education Center, will include more kitchens, dining rooms and classrooms.

These classrooms will be reserved for people who are back for refresher courses and special seminars. The Continuous Education Center will cost $10 million and is expected to pay for itself. Work on the addition is expected to start next April.

For the deans — a move across campus, in March, to the new Administration Building. The new building is four times bigger than South College — it will have 104,000 sq. ft. of usable space. The deans two floors at Machmer will be returned to classrooms. In contrast to the much more expensive projects of the '60's, this one is costing only $3 million.

* * * *

For all these new buildings — an addition to the existing power plant. The present plant heats almost every building on campus but it will reach capacity by 1969.

For alumni who like to drive a car on campus—No Parking! With all the construction planned, there will be fewer centrally located parking lots. It is expected that eventually busses will be used to transport students to all areas of campus.

Sex Issue Rides High On U. S. College Campuses

In the spring a young man's fancy allegedly turns to love; in the fall on some college campuses it seems to turn to sex.

While controversies over handing out contraceptives divide many administrations and doctors continue to speak on the subject—welcome or not—some students have taken their own initiative in the area.

Students at Amherst College wanted to deal with the matter a bit more straight-forwardly. The student newspaper at the all-male school distributed questionnaires at nearby women's colleges, Smith and Mt. Holyoke. The survey focused on dispersion of birth control devices and information.

At both women's colleges the questionnaires were confiscated by the administration, ostensibly because they had not been cleared by the school before distribution. The Smith College newspaper editors took up the idea and wrote their own poll. They await administration approval.

At Mt. Holyoke, however, reaction was more negative. A student editorial blamed the Amherst men for constructing a poor survey and for failing to use the proper chanels in its distribution. The editors said that the survey should have noted that Massachusetts law allows dissemination of birth control information only to married couples.

The survey should have been focused, they said, on the morality of the law rather than a policy determined by that law. The editors, however, did not proceed to question the Massachusetts law. Instead, they dealt with the problem of confiscation of polls and meekly suggested that students initially screen any polls given to Mt. Holyoke women, for the administration's final approval.

The Amherst editor accused the Mt. Holyoke girls of avoiding open discussion of sex and morality.

A male reporter at Whittier College, Whittier, Calif., had fewer problems when questioning women on birth control. He personally interviewed women on his coed campus and found that pills are used by a minority, but that their use among underclassmen is increasing.

Several coeds were rather noncommittal about birth control, but did have something to say. "I mean, you just don't go around talking about that," one replied to the reporter.

In Salem, Oregon, a Willamette College senior bought a motel, offered special student rates, and renamed it the No-Tell Motel. And it's on the level. Student-owner Robert Ladum started out collecting coins for a merit badge in the Boy Scouts. He eventually open a mail-order coin company and bought the No-Tell with the profits.

At Knox College in Galesburg, Ill., students work through SENSU, Students for an Era of New Sexual Understanding. It was formed three years ago after students given a sample test showed a serious lack of basic biological knowledge.

SENSU has recently expanded its programs and will write articles for the college paper and sponsor speakers to "stimulate interest and discussion about sex and to deal creatively with biological, psychological, ethical, or social problems concerning sex," according to SENSU chairman John Bodwell.

Not everyone is so open to discussions on the subject. In West Virginia, a Republican candidate for the House of Delegates, Miss Blanche Horan, called recent speakers at West Virginia University the "ultimate in lewdness."

Miss Horan attacked the research of Dr. William Masters and Mrs. Virginia Johnson, authors of a medical survey on the physiology of human sexual response, as "far worse than silly. It is things such as this which are leading us down the road to ruin."

When asked if she had a solutoin to what she feared was the world-wide spread of immorality, Miss Horan said, "Every individual should go back to God!"

Engraver Adds His Skills To Touch Up Southwest

by GEORGE ZEBROWSKI

Nino (Jack) Zapponi is proud that he chiseled off John F. Kennedy. He also boasts that in the last month he has chiseled off eight others.

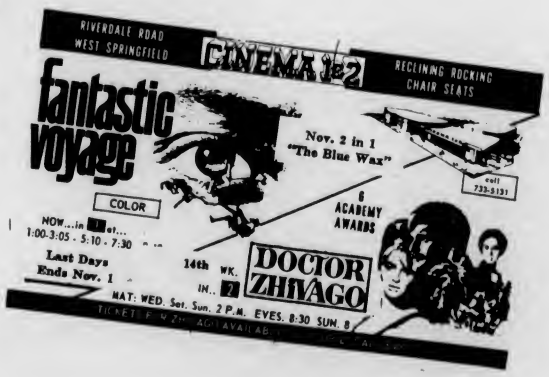
How could a man state this so proudly? It's easy for Jack Zapponi, a professional chiseler whose work is on display at the Southwest Dorms. Gone are the ugly cardboard signs with the dorms' names on them. They have been replaced by engraved names on the sides of the buildings. They are work of Jack Zapponi.

Zapponi, a resident of Cambridge, became interested in engraving when he was very young because his father was an engraver. He attended the Massachusetts College of Art, where he had classes under Cyrus Dallin, a famous American sculptor. He then went to Proctor, Vt., for his apprenticeship. After 30 years in the monument business, he gave it up last year to specialize in engraving.

He describes himself as a man who has a "passion for cutting stone."

The works that the fifty-ish-year old man is most proud of include: an engraving on the Harvard Medical School, the World War II Memorial at MIT and the Slosberg Music Center at Brandeis University.

It took Zapponi a little more than a month to complete the engravings for all Southwest Dorms. He said that engravers must take their time because errors are costly in time and material. He had the most trouble with the UMass towers because he had to work outdoors and contend with the weather. It wasn't all bad though — he worked on the stone slabs for the low rise dorms inside.



Zapponi, who said he enjoyed his work at the University, looks forward to returning. He said he might come back next year to do an engraving on the dining commons as well as the other low rise Southwest Dorms scheduled to be completed in September. He explains: "Engraving is in my blood."

Class Presidents— Social or Otherwise

Opinion

by PETE WARD

O.K. gang, it's quiz time.

Can you identify the four gentlemen in the above picture? How about just one? After all, one of these men belongs to you. He is your class president.

Now, can you tell me what anyone of them does? Take your time, it's not an easy question.

There was a time when the Class President was little more than an exalted Social Chairman and the Class Governments were mainly involved in making UMass a fun campus (which, of course, we hope it still is.) But times are changing, and the Class Governments are too.

In the past few years, a debate has begun. Is the Class President a Social Chairman or a REAL Student Leader?

Now, of course, the debate is still going on, BUT not in the same way.

The question today is not Student Leader—yes or no? It is Student Leader—in what way?

The fact is that the Class Presidents have already become REAL student leaders. They have done this without a fanfare of publicity and words, for the basis for this statement lies in some revolutionary actions that have been taken by the Class presidents and their executive councils in the last few years.

For example, last year the first campus organization to give large scale financial support to the Free Press Committee was the Class of 1968 and the others were close behind. (Except 1966).

Last year, when the Crew Club could not get funds from the Athletic Dept., it was the Class Governments of 1967 and 1969 who saved the club financially.

This year, for the first time, the Campus Chest drive is being headed by a class government, 1969, with a goal at least six times greater than ever before.

This year the Class of 1967 will sponsor an Urban Symposium and will establish their Endowment Fund to help UMass in future years.

Even at this early date, the newly elected President of 1970 expresses his hopes to see his class work in a similar vein.

Of course, there is still dispute as to how the Class Governments should exercise these responsibilities, but the fact remains that The Class Governments as responsible and effective Student Governments are here to stay.

If you don't believe me, ask any one of the four men above.

From the left Wayne Thomas —1969, John Mullin—1967, Dick Wood—1968, Rick McInerney—1970. In fact, call your Class President sometime. Ask HIM a few questions.

He might be surprised, but he'll also be pleased. After all, he is YOUR student leader.

DRAFT . . .

Yale Pres. Kingman Brewster, Jr., one of the most active members of the Commission, denounced the draft system in June for allowing students to hide in "the endless catacombs of formal education."

But in the same week, Harvard Pres. Nathan Pusey, denounced McNamara's proposal as "a colossal waste of time."

The indecision among educators has been reflected in the attitude of students, although one Gallup Poll showed that 82% of the students think they should continue to be deferred.

Disgusted?— See Critique

Disgusted with mediocre Critiques that average out pro and con student opinion at a flat zero? Here's your opportunity to register complaint or praise for a course, and see it printed in the next issue of Critique.

Just write the name of the course, the professor, and the section number, along with your name, address, and class, on a piece of paper, and drop it into the Critique "ballot box" which will be in the Student Union lobby all this week. (Any suggestions concerning Critique are welcome, and may also be placed in this box.)

Critique would like to talk to you about the course, and see if you're interested in writing a short subjective essay on it. What would you tell a friend planning to take the course? Tell it to us— we may print it (anonymously, of course).

This new subjective approach to critiquing will be balanced by reprinted data obtained from student and professor questionnaires.

Yet the next Critique won't just tell you that each block of three credits is like any other. It will describe to you the differences inherent in one course and in one professor's method of teaching — differences which distinguish it, for better or for worse, from any other course.

Students and faculty have criticized Critique for its wishy-washy uncommitedness. Perhaps this was true in the past, but not any longer. We're ready to take a stand—will you help us print the truth?

Saltonstall Here Friday

On November 4 the Political Science Association will present a guest lecture by Senator Leverett Saltonstall. Senator Saltonstall received an A.B. from Harvard in 1914 and in 1917 an L.L.B. from the same as well as numerous honorary degrees.

He served as Assistant District Atty. in Middlesex County, Mass., a member of the Board of Aldermen in Newton, Mass., a member of the Massachusetts House 1923-36, Governor of Massachusetts 1939-1944, and a member of the United States Senate since 1944 serving on the Appropriations Committee.

The Senator will speak in the Student Union Ballroom at 3:30. The public is invited.

in favor of a guidebook on UM for students enrolled in other colleges and for summer freshmen.

At the same time, eleven members of the summer experiment admitted interest in running for the Student Senate in the future.

This account is somewhat of how summer student government happened. What it felt like is hard to convey; but on one occasion I wrote: "So I say for what it is worth that student government is necessary and useful. Further, Student government has hardly scratched the surface of its potential."

May the scratching go on and may the "class of the summer of 1966" be among the scratchers!

Hampshire's main intellectual focus, according to the report, "will be on process rather than data, on self-education rather than ingestion, on discovery rather than memorization. It will be concerned with techniques and methods of inquiry rather than with coverage, and will seek to discover and develop those intellectual tools that appear most useful, universal and durable for the work of conceptual inquiry, for solving problems in particular disciplines, and for work across disciplinary lines."

VOTE "NO"

by Don Aliferis, Day Editor

Massachusetts voters have the opportunity to reject the recently enacted sales tax. Referendum No. 5 on the November 8 election ballot presents the issue in a "Yes" or "No" question form.

The sales tax was effected under the initiation of Gov. Volpe and the Republicans, and with the essential aid of name-only Democrats. It also had the support of such groups as the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation Inc.

The sales tax is regressive: it takes equally from the poor and the rich — from those who cannot afford to pay and from those to whom payment is scarcely noticed.

As is usual with regressive taxes, the proponents represent upper-income groups. They are people who make above average salaries and who own property. They seek to avoid higher personal payments through a raise in the income tax on by the possible graduation of the existing income tax structure.

The sales tax is an excellent method for the "better-off" elements to compensate or retaliate for the increased government expenditure which they generally oppose. It spreads the cost around.

The arguments, or propaganda if you will, of sales tax supporters assert that additional revenue is needed to meet the costs of increased state expenditures in education, welfare, etc. It is argued that the sales tax will keep away the "big taxes", i.e. a 50% increase in the state income tax, or a rise in property taxes.

The reasons used for the sales tax are deliberately misleading, if not bordering on the concept of the-bigger-the-lie-the-more-it-is-believed.

First of all, although it is true that the state needs more revenue, the actual amount required is far less than one would imagine from the hysterical assertions of sales tax proponents. In fact, the state will end the year several million dollars in the black (even though receipts from the sales tax are far below the expected returns).

Secondly, the "big tax" threat is merely a device to frighten the public. In actuality a 50% raise in the income tax would amount to approximately 50 cents for every $100 earn per week. The average-incomed worker will spend at least twice that amount through the sales tax.

The voters of the Commonwealth should reject the sales tax. They should reject the deceptions of the well-organized, higher income interest groups. They should vote "No" on referendum No. 5.

Manila Fallacy

by Mike Hersh, Editorial Staff

The Manila Conference is over, and a communique has emerged as a product from Pres. Johnson's Asian sojourn. It is now time to evaluate the significance of the events that occurred the past 17 days. Will it have any impact on the Vietnam War ?

The essence of the communique was in the statement on the withdrawal of allied forces:

"They shall be withdrawn after close consultation, as the other side withdraws its forces to the North, ceases infiltration, and the level of violence thus subsides. These forces will be withdrawn as soon as possible and not later than six months after the above conditions have been fulfilled."

But, if Hanoi should refuse to consider this offer, the allies are determined "to stay and fight as long as necessary to wear down enemy resistance." (N.Y. Times, Oct. 30)

In effect, therefore, the statement demanded total surrender by the rebels and their allies from North Vietnam before the withdrawal of our troops.

The U.S. must certainly not expect Hanoi to concur with such a statement. "The first move toward peace can logically come from the side that is infinitely stronger." (N.Y. Times, Oct. 30)

Also, two "concessions which much of the world and many Americans favor, a halt in the bombing of North Vietnam and agreement to include the principal enemy, the Viet Cong, in peace negotiations, were disregarded." (Worc. Telegram, Oct. 30)

Thus, the conference, which had as its purpose a peaceful settlement of the war, merely turned into a tribunal for future military actions. "The logical conclusion, therefore, is that the Vietnam war will be intensified, beginning next month." (David Lawrence, Oct. 28.

What Are the Doers Doing?

By Paul Robert Hallock, Editorial Staff

Apathy.

You've seen the dirty word plastered all over the place, practiced by professional apathetics, propounded by non - participants in anti - everything, everywhere.

Scream apathy. It's an excuse, a miserable "justification" for something to yell about.

When you accuse flocks of someones of being apathetic, how do you prove that you're assuming correctly ? Can you ?

There are a lot of could haves. The fellow's cat could have been rushed to the infirmary. He could have dropped his favorite vase out of the 22nd floor of the towers. He could be concerned about far sillier things than rushing to do things, like, say, shooting for a 4.1. He could have decided to forfeit his interests in Volpe, Vietnam, and/or vitriolic vindications until he is well enough versed in the issues to voice his opinions — or join.

Ask the doers: "How can anyone not be interested ? !"

Someone interrupts, "What are the doers doing ?"

Screaming apathy.

A Little Yelling Please . . .

To the Editor:

Every once in a while, something will really bother me. The something this time was the rally for the homecoming game, for the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the student body was absolutely disgusting. The girls on my corridor can make more noise than was heard that night. I don't know what the problem is. Maybe we think we're too sophisticated to yell savagely for our school team.

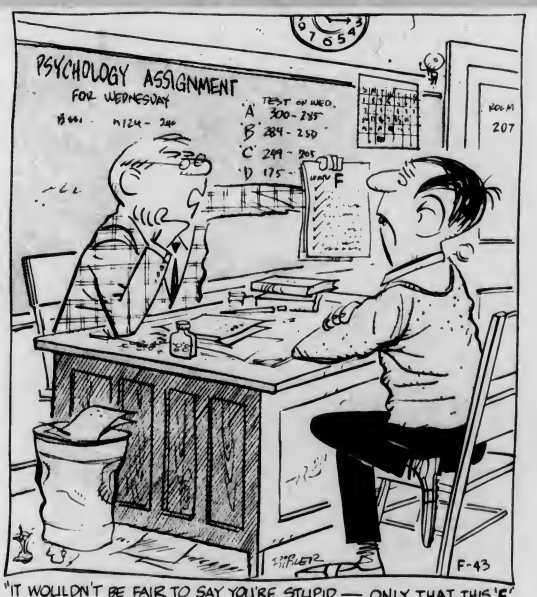
At any rate, I'm afraid my dear mother is right when she tells me, "You'll never get laryngitis at a game or rally." Oh, yes—I didn't do much cheering either. I wasn't going to make a fool of myself. Why not? You tell me.

Ruth Pazsit

. . . and a Little Traveling Music!

To the Editor:

I would like to pose a fundamental question as to the purpose of our marching band: Is it intended to provide support for our football team, or is it an instrument with which to lobby for the greatness of John Jenkins' Band?



As a loyal follower of UM football fortunes (my wife and I have not missed any game in the last two years) I have rationalized the absence of our band at certain road games: "We must have a set budget for such trips—too bad—the band gives the team and the UM backers a boost, but c'est la vie."

Whether it be a lack of funds or of initiative, I was able to live with this noticeable absence until this weekend. Having made the four-hour trek to Burlington for the Yankee Conference title game, I was appalled to discover that the band was not present. (It was nice to see the Precisionettes perform at halftime, but they can not substitute for the fervor of the band during the game.) At once I recalled the Collegian article: UM Band to appear at Sunday's Boston Patriots game at Fenway Park.

In and of itself I would commend such an exposure of our excellent, well-drilled band, but not at the expense of the support of our football team. First consideration should have been given to the interests of the University, of which the band is supposed to be an integral part.

Perhaps no one (judging from the poor UM showing in the UVM stands) is aware of what our 1966 football team is running on: sheer guts. Not enough to be plagued by injuries such as we have never suffered, we are now under the added handicap of being without the rallying effect the band provides during the time - outs. Which brings up back to the initial question: On this particular weekend was our band's responsibility to our team and our fans, or to a professional team and a TV audience? If a choice was inevitable, should it not have been obvious where the responsibility lay?

UMass "Image Builder" Discusses Campus Coverage

by RITA GOTOWALA

The man who helps build the UMass image across the commonwealth believes that metropolitan newspapers and TV stations are becoming more interested in this campus.

Originating feature stories is News Editor Daniel Melley's biggest job. Melley believes the University's "a lot better than people think we are." To prove it, he is kept on his toes obtaining research material, photographs and angles for his stories.

Melley is pleased with the number of UMass feature stories that the Boston Sunday Globe has published. "UMass has received more feature space in the Globe than any other school, with the possible exception of B.U.," he said.

"If we sent a story out to the Greenfield Recorder-Gazette or to the Springfield Union we are pretty sure that it will be printed. But our chances are not so good with the Boston papers, mainly because of their lack of available space," he explained.

"The Boston TV stations claim that it would cost them approximately $10,000 to move their equipment out here for one day. . .you know, it involves the same kind of costs as when someone rings in a false alarm."

But, gains are being made. Gene Pell, newsman, Boston's WBZ-TV last week devoted five news spotlights to the University.

At the beginning of the school year, one Boston TV station took three minutes of its news broadcast to show film clips of new and returning students in Bay State universities. Melley proudly declared: "A minute and a half of these clips was spent on UMass."

According to Melley, "We get more publicity in journals than people seem to realize."

Though Dan Melley is constantly on the go, he regrets there are areas of communication that he has had to neglect.

"I've only had time to do one news commentary," he admitted.

Nevertheless, the News Editor believes that the University's image is steadily on the rise.

Peace Corps Training Moves from Universities to Slums, Forests and Farms

Peace Corps Volunteers work on a school construction project in French-speaking Gabon, West Africa.

(Editor's Note: The following article originally appeared in the August 24, 1966 edition of The Wall Street Journal and is reprinted with its permission. The author, a senior at Oberlin College in Ohio, was a summer intern and staff writer for The Journal.)

by RICHARD L. BERKMAN

Peace Corps trainees are getting out of the classrooms and, despite the grumblings of some old-time pedagogues, are training in the big-city slums, Puerto Rican rain forests, Indian reservations and Israeli kibbutzim (cooperative farms).

While the Peace Corps still trains its Volunteers in partnership with colleges and universities, the emphasis now is on practice instead of book-learning.

At campus training centers, teachers are increasingly being succeeded by returned Volunteers with first-hand experiences. Discussion groups have replaced lectures, and trainees can now opt to undertake a variety of activities instead of doing calisthentics.

In 1961 a fledgling Peace Corps, determined to help speed the economic and social development of Africa, Asia and Latin America, turned to higher education for assistance in training its first crop of recruits. The professors, the Corps believed, would have the intellectual resources necessary to produce competent Volunteers.

Professors Out Of Touch

But, as Peace Corps officials explain it now, many of the academicians proved lamentably out of touch with the realities of the overseas situation, and their teaching methods, while fine for producing scholars, didn't prepare the Volunteers adequately for what they would meet in the field.

David Sherwood, a training officer for Africa, remarks that "being a Volunteer overseas meant great emotional involvement, which university classroom situations didn't take account of."

While instructors admit they can't simulate the overseas situation, they can, says Alex Shakow, deputy training director, "confront the trainee with values he's not used to, and at least raise the questions."

Plight Of Early Volunteers

Early Volunteers trained from 6 a.m. to midnight six days a week; sat in lectures for up to 15 hours a day; underwent grueling physical fitness activities which often wound up with the infamous four-day Putrto Rican trek (trainees were driven 30 miles from camp, handed maps and compasses and told to find their way home through the rugged Puerto Rican back country).

Now the Peace Corps has de-emphasized physical conditioning. The Volunteer overseas faces "a mental test, not a physical one," says Mr. Shakow.

Friction With Universities

As training methods have changed radically, friction between Peace Corps personnel and some university academicians has appeared.

Many Peace Corps officials report that scholars often didn't have up-to-date knowledge about their special countries. 'Some hadn't been there for 10 years," says one official.

One professor, speaking harshly of the program in which he taught world affairs and communism to Volunteers, recalls that "the lectures were pretty ridiculous. They couldn't be of any help to students who had studied the topics at all previously." He adds that a visiting lecturer from the State Department who spoke on the Cold War was "hopeless. He was so careful he didn't say anything."

By contrast, Mr. Shakow says, "the returnees know what is going one. They know the important elements that make a Volunteer do well and can transmit these to the trainees."

From Campus To Campsite

An increasing number of training programs offer a compromise between campus and campsite: Train the Volunteers at the university, then send them away for extended field training. At the Univ. of N. Mex., Volunteers training for work in Latin America spend several weeks in Spanish-speaking villages in the Sierras. The Columbia Univ. School of Social Work sends trainees into Spanish Harlem. Dartmouth Volunteers, in training for work in French-speaking Africa, live in Quebec with French-Canadian families and teach in a local school.

Some programs bring the foreign culture to the campus. At the Univ. of Mo., trainees set up a Nepali house replete with Nepali food, utensils, furniture and traditions—for instance, spreading cow dung on the floor (mixed with water it makes a good plaster) according to the Nepalese practice.

Even with the changes in training techniques, some Peace Corps personnel contend that their major problem is lack of time. A project director says, "We have five hours a day of language training and also have to teach the Volunteers how to raise and kill chickens, grow vegetables, teach physics and math, administer first aid, and even build privies. All these things are crammed into 12 weeks."

UMass Graduate Evaluates Peruvian P. C. Problems

Warren A. Weed believes in flexibility, the necessary ingredient for his success as a Peace Corps Volunteer.

Weed, a recent student at the University of Montana and a graduate of the University of Massachusetts, is supervisor of a five-acre eucalyptus nursery for the Peruvian Forestry and Wildlife Service in Huancayo. With local foresters he conducts growth studies, constructs volume tables, directs planting and trains apprentices.

It was not an easy adjustment.

"I've experienced cultural clashes in accustoming myself to too many national holidays Peru has 22), the old Spanish tradition of a two-and-a-half hour lunch break and innumerable lost man hours," Weed reports.

"Lack of cooperation and dedication among the local people becomes discouraging at times. But what really annoys me is the knowledge that my projects may never weather the first year after I leave."

Barring the difficulties, Weed feels the Peace Corps has offered him an "enriching experience"—learning a second language, working elbow to elbow with different ethnic groups, understanding their thoughts circumscribed by their culture, traveling and meeting people.

P. C. PROFILE EMERGES FROM NAT'L SURVEY

Who is the Peace Corps Volunteer? Or, at least, who thinks about becoming a Volunteer?

Among more than 1,200 college seniors quizzed last spring on 58 campuses in a Louis Harris survey of student attitudes toward the Peace Corps, this composite answer emerged:

Compared with the total sample, BEJ seniors who already had applied to and been accepted by the Peace Corps tended:

—to come more from schools and homes in the East and West;

—to come from state (thus larger) schools;

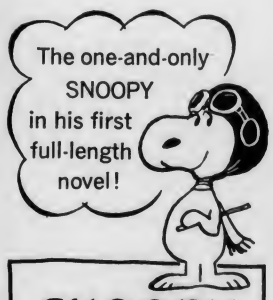
—to major in liberal arts;

—to be active on campus in areas other than student government;

—to be more often women (although about 60 per cent of all Volunteers are men);

—to have younger, better educated parents;

—to have fathers who are more often professional or executives;



—to come from higher income families.

The University of Massachusetts is the nation's 72nd ranking contributor of Peace Corps Volunteers, according to figures recently released by the agency.

As of September 19, 85 former students (including 36 now overseas) had served in one of the more than 50 countries which have hosted Volunteers in the past five years.

The Peace Corps set a new record in 1966 by placing 10,500 men and women in training during the program year which ended August 31. The figure marked a more than 20 per cent increase over 1965.

More than 25,000 Volunteers (including 15,000 now overseas) have served in 56 countries since the Peace Corps' inception in 1961.

Yale Knocks Harvard On Admission Policy

Yale accused Harvard Saturday of unsportsmanlike conduct in its admission policy and unveiled a counterattack to capture some of the superior high school students who have been opting for its oldest rival.

Using the politest of critical language for "our friends at Harvard," Pres. Kingman Brewster, Jr., said that Yale's discomfort had resulted from Harvard's refusal two years ago to go along with Yale and Princeton in dropping an "unfair" system of giving "advance ratings to students in selected (high) schools."

According to Brewster and other Yale officials, the system worked this way:

Far in advance of the regular day in April on which the three colleges sent out acceptance and rejection notices, students "in selected schools" would receive advance ratings from the colleges to give them "firm notice" of what action was going to be taken on their applications.

There were three ratings—A, B and C. An "A" while not a guarantee of admission, was "pretty close to it." "B" was "maybe," and "C" meant virtual rejection.

Yale officials say that now that Harvard is the only one of the three using the advance ratings, many students who have been receiving "A" ratings from Harvard have been dropping all thoughts of going to either Yale or Princeton, even though they might find themselves accepted by one or both when the regular notices were sent out.

UMass Parachuters Enjoy "The Civilized Sport"

by D. F. GIERAS
Pres. UMass Parachute Club

Like the professor said in class, "The human body enjoys acceleration." And if you admit the point (for all that fear roller coasters) acceleration can be exhilerating. Exhileration might be termed one of the three main factors of, Why parachute?

If a couple of weeks ago you took the time to travel up to the Turners Falls Airport, you would have met a few of your fellow students there.

They were there to experience something unique.

They were there to make their first sport parachute jump under the auspices of the UMass Sport Parachute Club, and the Pioneer Valley Sport Parachute center.

Were they there to be exhilerated?

Perhaps a few were there for the sheer "experience" of it all, but others were there to find out if they could overcome that strange fear of heights or altitude.

The student parachutist feels only a few seconds of actual free-fall, but in that few seconds he must learn to control his body-position and maintain a "stable" form. Otherwise, he is not allowed to progress toward that actual first free-fall when it's only him—the plane, and the earth below.

Now, let's return to Turners Falls a few weeks ago.

The first lift of the day has just spewed a few student parachutists into the sky. The canopies settle slowly to the earth with the student answering steering signals from the controller at the Public Address microphone.

Until he becomes more proficient in canopy handling (steerable canopies are one of the technological factors that gave sport parachuting its impetus)) he will be controlled by voice from the ground during his parachute descent.

A hundred feet above the "drop-zone" the parachutist turns into the wind and as he settles to the ground completes a Parachute Landing Fall (a body movement designed to absorb the slight shock of landing).

If you look close enough you'll see grins of various descriptions on the faces of those who have just completed their first parachute jump.

If you move closer you might hear, "It was great!" or "Where do I join?" or maybe, "Bad exit but I'll do better next time." That brings us to another aspect of parachuting—fun.

These students are the same guys and girls who sit next to you in History 101, or "Rocks" 102, or "Ed. Psych."

Surprisingly, they don't look very daring, as they go about in the daily student routine. How about that?

Then why do they do it?

You'll probably get a lot of answers, but one will always creep up— it's fun!

Safe fun at that, the injury rate for 1965 was less than 3/10ths of 1% and that included scratches, bruises, and pulled muscles. Not bad for the 1.6 million parachute jumps made in 1965.

So now you've got the three main factors of Why? And already—deep down inside—you know that guy or girl sitting next to you isn't as daring and reckless as all that. Right?

UMASS GRAD. . . .

"The tremendous satisfaction in Peace Corps life is limited only to individual imaginaiveness," Weed points out.

"The true challenge of the Peace Corps is in forming a compatible relationship with people and gaining their friendship, respect and trust. Only this creates a broader understanding of Americans and makes technical assistance possible.

Harriers Cop Yan-Con Title With Strong Team-Showing

by TERRY CARPENTER
Sports Staff

KINGSTON, R.I.—The fired-up UMass cross country team taught the rest of the Yankee Conference a lesson in TEAM running Saturday as they won handily with an exceptionally low score of 31.

Paul Hoss, Marc Gelinas, Charley Lang, and Terry Carpenter ran together for almost the whole race and finished third, fourth, sixth and seventh, respectively. Greg Bowman, fifth man in the Redman contingent, finished eleventh. Co-captains Steve St. Clair and John Andersen finished fifteenth and twenty-first to round out the squad.

Defending champion New Hampshire, favored to repeat, never had a chance with Hoss and Gelinas finishing right behind their first man and Lang and Carpenter putting on a stretch drive that carried them past UNH's third man.

The Wildcats' first three men were favored to finish before ANY Massachusetts harriers. The fact that Bowman, St. Clair and Andersen all beat New Hampshire's fourth man was significant in making the victory margin even wider. It was simply a remarkable display of team depth seldom seen in cross country.

The final team score was UMass 31, UNH 69, UConn 76, URI 83, Maine 88, and Vermont 172.

The next meet for the team is Wednesday against powerful Springfield at home. The Maroons will bring one of their strongest teams ever to Amherst to face the Redmen. The meet will get underway at 4:00 behind the Women's Phys. Ed. Building.

Smashers Nip A's Twice for Title

by TOM CONUEL
Sports Staff

The Smashers from Adams House highlighted Thursday night's intramural action with two victories in the same night over the previously unbeaten Flaming A's. The first Smasher victory brought them a tie with the A's for the league lead. The second game was a playoff to decide the league champion.

The Smashers won the first game 31-27 as Al Craig threw for five TD's. Steve Brown of the Flaming A's was almost equally brilliant throwing for four TD's.

The second game for the league championship was a real thriller which the Smashers won 21-20. With little more than 18 seconds remaining in the game and the A's down 21-14 Steve Brown threw a TD pass which made the score 21-20. On the next play, the attempt for the PAT, Whalen of the Smashers picked off the pass and assured the Smashers of the victory. Besides his clutch interception Whalen caught two TD passes and two PAT's to spark the Smasher offense.

In other Dorm Action the powerful Hi-Lo's overwhelmed the Chestnuts 28-13. Joe Pedro provided the offensive punch for the Hi-Lo's with four TD passes. Equally important was the great defensive play of Dave Armstrong who intercepted three passes. The Hi - Lo's will now meet the Smashers in the first round of the playoffs on Monday night at 7:30.

In the only fraternity action of the night LCA topped PMD 32-19 as the great LCA passing combination of Donehue to Larson proved almost unstoppable. Donehue had a fantastic night as he connected on 16 of 18 passes. Larson was just as spectacular with nine receptions for the night, three of them for scores. LCA will play KS Monday night for the Fraternity League B championship, the winner to play SPE on Wednesday.

The Independent League had two games played on Thursday night. In the first game Hampshire advanced into the playoffs by edging the Froshites 7-0 in a great defensive battle. The second game saw Courtesy downing Westview 23-6. The Courtesy offense was sparked by the passing of Klaes who completed 23 out of 28 passes.

Vermont Edges Booters To Take Y-C Crown

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

BURLINGTON,VT. — It was 11 a.m. The picturesque Burlington campus was a veritable hotbed of optimistic activity. Parents, brothers, sisters and friends of the 4600 undergraduates were jammed onto the fairly spread campus overlooking Lake Chaplain taking part in the University's Parents Day.

The talk of the masses was sports: Catamounts athletic teams were on the verge of the Yankee Conference championships.

At 4 p.m. a somewhat rhapsodical mood prevailed. A rattlesnake quick UMass football team had poised and thrust with blinding speed in the first quarter and held sway for the remainder of the contest to move closer to the conference grid crown while jinxing Vermont chances with a 27-21 win.

Several hours earlier, however, on a field a mile-and-a-half from Centennial Field, Vermont's soccer squad, undefeated in three conference tilts and author of a 5-1 overall record, entertained another Massachusetts contingent in a battle which would directly determine the Yan-Con soccer champion. The Redmen's conference slate read 2-0-1.

From the opening faceoff the contest shaped up as a battle of the defenses. Repeated U-Mass and Vermont attacks were thwarted by hustling, hard-hitting backliners and skilled goalies.

Catamount netminder John Hilton and UMass tender Larry Martin time after time came up with timely saves as the game was generally a replay of last year's tilt. This time, however, the Redmen failed to repeat the 2-1 victory which propelled them to a piece of the crown in 1965.

At 11:40 of the third quarter, a Catamount wing found the range. Outside right Gary Smith took a cross-goal pass from substitute Therron Webster and toed the ball into the Redmen nets behind beaten goalie Martin.

The marker was all Vermont needed to pry the Bean pot from the ambitious Redmen. Neither club could negotiate a score in the fourth quarter as Coach Harold Greig's forces claimed the 'Pot for the second time since the loop's inception in 1965. UMass, Vermont and UConn all tasted the beans a year ago, finishing with identical 4-1 marks.

Saturday's loss leaves Coach Larry Briggs' brigade with a 2-2-1 conference record, 4-3-1 overall. The Redmen travel to New London Saturday to battle Coast Guard in an 11 a.m. contest. A year ago UMass topped the Guardians, 2-0.

UMass' final soccer game of the season will be played a week from Saturday at 10:30 a.m. on Varsity Field.

managed to kill five and a half minutes until UMass gave up the ball on the Vermont 29. With the Vermont fans roaring, Mitchell ran it out of bounds to stop the clock with 2:20 left. But two plays later on third and five, Stroker's pass was picked off by Dave Giarla at midfield and the Catamount fans, who had been waiting for this one all season, had to wait another year.

Early Surge Gives Redmen Big 27-21 Win

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Astonished at finding themselves 20 points ahead in the first quarter, the Redmen fought off a die-hard Vermont football team for a crucial 27-21 win here Saturday.

An overflow crowd of 10,000 at chilled, wind-swept Centennial Field saw UMass safety Dave Giarla put on a spectacular show, including a 75 - yard punt return and two critical interceptions. The win almost assured the return of the Beanpot to UMass, and gave the Redmen at least a tie for the Yankee Conference championship. It was Vermont's first loss.

The UMass offense finally exploded, scoring three touchdowns in the first quarter. But a fired-up Catamount team, led by nonpareil halfback Bob Mitchell, refused to play dead for the Redmen and staged a comeback which cut the margin of victory to the usual size—small.

Junior halfback Don Durkin starred on offense for the Redmen, scoring two touchdowns in the game, a feat previously unequaled by a UMass player. His second touchdown proved to be the winning score, a fine example of extra effort.

Almost the entire first quarter was played in Vermont territory. On Vermont's first play from scrimmage, UMass defensive end Randy Robinson snagged a Dave Shumate pass and ran it to the UVM 28. A third down pass from Greg Landry to Bill Carty set the Redmen up on the 18.

On fourth down from the nine, Landry sneaked for the first down. Four plays later it was fourth and goal at the four, and Don Durkin bounced in off right tackle for the score. Bruce Cochrane's kick made it 7-0 for Massachusetts.

Vermont's game plan became evident when the Cats handed off to Mitchell three times. But he was unable to move against Dick Qualey and Company and they were forced to punt.

The snap from center sailed over Art Brown's head and he picked it up and ran. Out of desperation he passed to an ineligible receiver and the Redmen took over on the Catamounts' 31.

This time the UMass drive went via ground, with a 13-yard sweep around left end by Durkin putting them on Vermont's four. On third down Landry sneaked in from the one for the tally with 3:24 to go in the first quarter. Cochrane's kick was wide, leaving the Redmen with a 13-0 lead.

Again the Cats were unable to move the ball, and Brown punted from his own 31. It was a good boot, coming down to Giarla at the UMass 25. It looked like he would not go far as a horde of Catamounts converged. But the twisting and turning Giarla slipped through, broke several would-be tackles, and got into the clear at midfield. The touchdown jaunt covered 75 yards, and the kick made it 20-0 with 1:16 left in the first quarter as the Vermont fans looked on in disbelief.

It looked like a humiliation was in the making. UVM Coach Bob Clifford, however, sent in a sophomore quarterback named Jack Stroker who promptly fired up the Cats. On third down from the Vermont 26, pass interference was called which gave the Cats a chance from their own 40.

A 10 yard pass from Stroker to Kuhman and a 35 yard toss to Jack Schweverger put Vermont on the UMass four. The Redmen defense held Mitchell for three plays but the powerful back finally made it in with just 3:39 to go in the half. UMass still held a relatively comfortable 20-7 edge.

In the second half, the Cats did not take long to get back in the game. A Warnock punt deep in UMass territory put UVM on the Redmen 36. Bob Mitchell then went to work. He broke through the line for a 28-yard gain which left Vermont on the three. On third down Stroker fooled the UMass defense and passed to Kuhman in the end zone for the score. The kick put Vermont just six points behind with most of the half to go.

Both teams failed to capitalize on golden opportunities in the third quarter, and the Catamounts took over deep in their own territory with the last quarter underway. Unable to move, they punted, giving the Redmen excellent field position.

On a big third and six play, Landry rolled around left end to give UMass a first down on the Vermont 25. Don Durkin then took a handoff and went off left tackle where he was met by a UVM lineman. He spun off this tackle, evaded several others, and romped into the end zone unmolested. Joe DiVincenzo's kick gave the Redmen a decisive 27-14 lead with twelve minutes to go.

Knowing the power of Vermont's offense, no one was about to leave yet. Bob Mitchell led a Catamount drive down to the UMass 39, and then proceeded to wind his way through the defense to the two yard line. On the next play, he dove into the end zone to put the Cats right back in the ball game, 27-21, with 8:10 left.

Redmen Eye Beanpot; Team Effort Nips UVM

by MIKE CURRAN, Sports Staff

BURLINGTON, Vt. — The UMass Redmen, by stopping the previously unbeaten Vermont Catamounts, 27-21, Saturday, have only to beat New Hampshire to gain their third Yankee Conference Beanpot in four years.

The Burlington triumph was another example of UMass teamwork. First the offense exploded for 20 quick points, and then the defense put down an inspired Catamount rally to preserve the victory and a 5-1 record.

If one had to point to individual stars he could single out Greg Landry, Don Durkin, Dave Giarla, and Dick Qualey for honors. Landry came up with the clutch call again and again while showing the Vermonters some fancy footwork. Don Durkin's second effort paid off especially in his last touchdown run.

On defense, Dave Giarla came up with two key interceptions and the fine 75 yard punt return TD, while Dick Qualey led the defensive charge which pressured the Catamount quarterbacks into numerous mistakes.

After the game Dave Giarla praised the UMass offense, noting that it won the game. On the subject of his punt return touchdown, he said, "I was just lucky. The hole popped open, and here I was." And there he went, 75 yards.

Don Durkin, had praise for the team effort exerted by the Redmen, and said that his rushing total of 78 yards for a 5.6 average was helped by the outstanding blocking of the UMass line.

Number 31 for Vermont is Bob Mitchell, a junior halfback. In his green and gold uniform it's hard to believe he really isn't Jim Taylor. Mitchell had gained 800 yards on 171 carries going into the game, but Redmen football players have to see to believe, and they saw and believed. As Coach Fusia put it after the game, "He's by far the best runner we've faced this year." Mitchell finished with 128 yards on 28 attempts for a solid 5.3 yards per carry.

Massachusetts obtained the ball six times in Vermont territory. Three times Landry directed the Redmen to a TD. Twice they were pushed back by penalties and forced to punt, and the last time they ran out the clock at the end of the contest. This points out the fact that the UMass offense can score when it has good field position.

Although it was the UMass offense that starred this time instead of the defense, Fusia called them the "same gutty group." He said he admired them, but had "equal admiration for the UVM team." He now owns a five-game winning streak over the Catamounts.

Remarkably enough, the Redmen escaped injury in this game. Fullback Bruce Cochrane was shaken up and was carried off on a stretcher, but he will be all right. Bob Ellis was back in at defensive halfback after being sidelined for two games.

Little Centennial Field was jammed by 10,000 enthusiastic fans despite the bitter weather. Gusts up to 30 MPH and intermittent light rain didn't dampen the crowd's spirited support for their team.

Next year's rematch should be a good one since both teams retain 16 of their 22 players who started on Saturday.

PUBLICATION COMMISSION 'S REPORT

Student and Faculty Senates to View Pub. Board

by JIM FOUDY, Managing Editor

Editor's note: See editorial on page 4.

The fruit of five months' work by the UMass Publications Commission will be presented this week to the Faculty and Student Senates in the form of a proposed advisory board for the student communications media.

The suggested Student Communications Board, which must be approved by the Student Senate, Faculty Senate and President Lederle, has as its goals the promotion and defense of freedom of the press.

The proposed constitution is encompassed in a 60-page report which explains the work of the Publications Commission and details the reasoning which led to the recommendation of a communications board.

Stressing on one hand the tri-partisan nature of the University community and on the other the necessity for communications between faculty, students and administrators, the report lists two chief aims of a communications board as:

- Improvement of student communications media with regards to their educational goals.
- Establishment of a forum for discussion of the problems of the various media.

Tossing out the extremes of either censorship or a complete break with the University, the report noted both the legal and moral obligations the University has towards student publications.

Since UMass is in reality the publisher of student publications it becomes legally responsible for all printed matter.

However, because education is the primary goal of a University, UM also becomes responsible in assuring that the educational functions of a student publication are being fulfilled.

Afte long discussion over the problems and the needs of publications on campus, the Commission has recommended a board to "consider, review and provide advice on matters pertaining to the organization, operation, budgets and standards of quality and performance of student communications organizations."

The Board would consist of 12 members with three students representing the media, three appointed from the Student Senate, five appointed from the Faculty Senate and the RSO Business Manager.

The report specifies that from among the Faculty Senate appointees three areas of proficiency be shown: technical skill, business and legal experience.

A few of the stated duties of the proposed Board are:

- To provide advice on policies and operations of student communications media.
- To receive and mediate complaints pertaining to the performance of student communications organizations.
- To provide advice as to the qualifications of nominees for the positions of chief officer, business manager, and faculty advisor on student publications.

Advising System Changes Discussed In the College of Arts and Sciences

Students representing the four classes met last Thursday with Dean Hunsberger, Associate Dean Wagner and the Assistant Deans to discuss possible changes in the academic advising system in the College of Arts and Sciences.

The students expressed at a lunch meeting their support for most aspects of the proposal which is based in part on the systems now used at the Universities of Wisconsin, Michigan and Washington.

The most significant of the proposed changes are:

a) Freshmen and Sophomores would not be required to declare a specific major.

b) No faculty member would be required to sign a student's program of courses, and each student would have full responsibility for making certain that he has fulfilled the requirements for his degree.

c) Advising of Freshmen and Sophomores would be handled through a College of Arts and Sciences Academic Advising Center (CASAAC) so that the majority of the faculty would have more time to counsel upper-class majors.

The CASAAC would be staffed by the Assistant Deans plus 20-30 faculty counselors and a staff assistant. Each counselor would be "on duty" in the center for about 3 hours per week. The center would be open from 9-12 and 1-5 daily to explain college rules and practices to the students, to help students plan programs to meet College and University requirements, and to expedite various other procedures.

Each student would be given total responsibility for his academic affairs. As a freshman, he would not necessarily choose a major, but he might be asked to indicate an area of interest such as: Fine Arts, Language and Literature, History and Philosophy, Biological Science, Physical Science, Mathematics, Social and Behavioral Science.

Anytime before completing 60 credits each student would choose a specific major; at this time he would be assigned an advisor for that major. The student would still be responsible for his program, and the major department would still certify that the student has satisfied the requirements of that major. Even after choosing his major, the student would be free to consult with CASAAC concerning his status relative to College and University requirements and regulations.

Under the proposed new system the faculty in general would formally advise students only on matters dealing with the student's major, although the students would be encouraged to seek advice from any and all of their teachers. It would still be important for each upper-class student to have an advisor who could, by appointment, provide answers to specific questions about his major.

No major modifications in the summer testing-placement-counseling program for entering freshmen are contemplated as part of this proposal. However, CASAAC would cooperate with and participate in this summer program.

These innovations have been considered in meetings of department heads and of the faculty. In those meetings, too, there has been agreement on the essential features of the plan. Faculty and students have suggested modifications and have pointed to some problems to be met in putting the proposals into effect.

The Deans of Arts and Sciences need now to hear reactions from the students who are concerned about the present and proposed advising systems. They expect to make decisions early enough to have the Advising Center established for the 1967-1968 academic year.

UMASS OFFICIALS DENY CHARGES IN LIBRARY SUIT

Two University of Massachusetts officials denied allegations contained in a suit filed against them by UMass librarian Hugh Montgomery in Hampshire County Superior Court Monday.

UMass Provost Oswald Tippo and acting director of libraries David M. Clay declared in a demurrer and answer to the charges that neither has legal authority to separate Montgomery from his title and position as claimed in a request for a show cause hearing earlier this month. "Such authority is lodged by statute and is a matter of record with the university trustees," they claimed.

Montgomery claims he was dismissed as UMass librarian through oral and written notice, despite his tenure status, and has petitioned Judge David M. Macaulay to overturn the action. A show cause hearing on the matter was postponed Oct. 18 to give Tippo and Clay an opportunity to file answers to the charges.

In their filing Monday, the university officials said the Superior Court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of Montgomery's suit; that Montgomery's petition fails to set forth the existence of an actual controversy between Tippo, Clay and Montgomery; that the relief sought in the courts by Montgomery will not terminate the alleged controversy; and that the court lacks the power to grant such relief.

Denying that Montgomery had been asked to "step down" from his position, Tippo and Clay claim a new position was created—director of university libraries—and the position of the university librarian was "redefined" in a public statement earlier this month. The University said Montgomery will remain as UMass librarian with his title and pay continuing as they have for the past 10 years. At a trustees meeting Oct. 22 Clay was appointed acting director of university libraries.

STAFF MEETING

The Collegian has scheduled a staff meeting for Sunday evening at 5:30.

At this time the Collegian constitution will be discussed and approved and any suggested changes will be considered.

It is essential that all staffers pick up copies of the constitution at the office prior to Sunday's meeting.

Because of the nature of the meeting, attendance is mandatory. Anyone not attending will be dropped from the staff.

Coffee and sandwiches will be served.

MAJOR PROPOSALS ANNOUNCED FOR HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE

Editor's note: This is the conclusion of a two part article on Hampshire College.

Among the highlights of the program:

1. The organization of the various academic fields into four Schools —the humanities, the social studies, the natural sciences and the new area of language studies. The latter School will concentrate on problems and possibilities in human communication through studies involving analytic philosophy, psycholinguistics, structural linguistics, mathematics, the language of computers, and other subjects. In addition, this School will include offerings in foreign languages.
2. The arrangement of the student's academic program into three divisions—not into courses, credits or years of study: the division of basic studies, the division of disciplinary studies and the division of advanced studies. Each of these divisions will be concerned with the basic objectives of the liberal arts program—concentration, distribution, integration—and each can be completed not through a defined period of residence or specified courses, but by passing field and integrative examinations.
3. Strong emphasis on self-education, and on developing increasing student independence. The first part of the Division of Basic Studies will rely heavily on tutorials and small seminars to prepare undergraduates for later independent work. Subsequent divisions will combine small seminars, some of them led by students, with large lectures, with independent study, and with instruction where appropriate by modern information-transfer devices, including TV.
4. The encouragement of creative work in the arts and humanities as part of the academic program. The independent projects that comprise a major portion of the Division of Advanced Studies will include creative or interpretive work in music, drama and the arts, as well as research and scholarship in the social sciences and the natural sciences.
5. A faculty including a substantial number of young men and women who have just completed graduate work and are beginning their academic careers, and who are expected to bring to the campus fresh ideas and enthusiasm. There will also be a number of senior professors on the faculty. The smallest group within the faculty will be composed of people in the middle ranks. Salaries, according to the Hampshire program, will be commensurate with those offered at the neighboring institutions; the College also expects to institute a liberal sabbatical program, offering one semester's sabbatical every three years.
6. The development of an integrated campus and physical plant organized into village clusters and an academic center that includes the library, laboratories and offices. The village clusters (which Hampshire calls Houses) are to include student and faculty residences as well as faculty offices and class and seminar rooms. The entire campus will be planned for flexibility in use and for future development.
7. The institution of academic and administrative devices to encourage experimentation and change. Among them will be a standing Committee for Educational Development composed of students, faculty and administrators concerned with the evaluation and recommendation of new programs, and the appointment of a Director of Institutional Research who will be concerned with gathering and assessing data on a performance and with recommending institutional change.
8. Experimentation with a scholarship program under which Hampshire will try to identify able but disadvantaged boys and girls in the elementary grades with the intention of promising them full

Faculty Senate to View "Pass-Fail"

A bill allowing students to take certain courses on a pass or fail basis will be considered by the Faculty Senate this Thursday.

The Student Senate passed the proposal late last semester. The Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate has studied it and delivered a recommendation to the main body.

If enacted, the bill would allow students to take one course a semester, not in their major, and receive no specific mark. Instead, only a "pass" or a "fail" will be indicated on the student's record. Full graduation credits will be awarded if the student does complete the course successfully.

WITHDRAWALS

Nov. 4 is the last day for first semester freshman and entering transfers to withdraw from Courses with a W.

'Wrong Box' Needs New Name

by N. C. SCANLAN

It will need another name—not 'Black Comedy'. This implies a villain from the word go. And in The Wrong Box, a recent movie at Amherst Cinema, black comedy reaches its blackest and funniest depths.

It echoed The Great Race of last year combined with Carnaby Street or Morgan influences and Peter Sellers, who knows no boundaries.

Sellers plays Dr. Pratt, which rhymes with catt which surround his Abortionist's office. He uses his cats as ink blotters and towels.

Like many others including Tony Hancock, Sellers runs in and out of the plot as fast as he can say, "you know, I wasn't always like this."

Michael Caine, with his soft-spoken stereo-type doesn't fit the loud morbid happenings. He holds up well in a slow motion love scene with Nanette Newman. They are both Finsburys. Everybody else in the story is, and this is our plot.

The two oldest Finsbury boys are the last of a twenty man "Trontine" that agreed long, long ago that the last survivor be awarded a trust fund. The other Finsburys become involved and everyone (including the audience) is waiting for one of the old boys to die. Two Finsburys are so anxious that they have his death certificate ready for old Joseph.

A mistaken identity (a must for weak comedies) displays the first reference of the title. Uncle Joseph is believed dead and carted to London in a wine barrel. Little do the coniving cousins know that the man who died in Uncle's coat is the famous Boormouth strangler.

The second wrong box is the Trontine which is mistaken for an innocent widow's husband. The strong box is 3' 6" but the undertakers (the real black comedians) decide to bury him half the man he was.

Some Finsburys have other ideas and exchange boxes. Now the flackest funnies: a hearse chase, a confused minister begins reading the marriage ceremony to a widow, and Uncle Joseph falls into a grave, and as the lights come on this black comedy fades with Finsburys running all over the sanctified cemetery chasing the money from the wrong box.

Aside from the black question, The Wrong Box is another good mod movie. And what an ending! An exceptionally good Wilfred Lawson (Peacock) admits a murder. And all the Finsburys cry: "the butler did it!"

U. S. Foreign Policy Viewed By Indian College Students

by Dr. GERARD BRAUNTHAL, Dept. of Gov't.

What do college students—the future leaders of their country—in India think about United States foreign policy? Do they approve of our policy in Vietnam? These are some of the questions to which I sought answers while serving for the academic year 1965-1966 as a Fulbright lecturer at Visva-Bharati University in West Bengal, India.

The opportunity to visit several Indian universities came as a result of invitations to participate in educational and cultural programs dealing with the American scene organized by the U. S. Information Service.

Their questions on American foreign policy showed that some students had a good deal of sophistication and knowledge of the dilemmas or problems facing our decision-makers, while other students evidenced a profound lack of understanding or misinformation.

Of greatest interest to all was the United States policy toward India, and of only secondary interest naturally enough, was the United States policy toward Vietnam. Most of the students were quite critical of our policy during the then recently concluded Kashmir hostilities between Pakistan and India.

It must be recalled that the United States had maintained a neutral attitude during the brief but dangerous encounter between the two hostile nations. The students felt that the United States should fully support India since Pakistan was deemed to have been the aggressor.

There was much resentment about our arms shipments to Pakistan prior to the hostilities. Typical of the questions on this issue were: "Why did the U.S. not take any serious action when Pakistan used American arms against India?"; or, "Since India could get American assistance during the Chinese agression (1962 invasion of northern border area of India), why could she not during Pakistan's aggression on Kashmir?"

There were other arguments. Since Pakistan had made a reapproachment with Communist China, why did the United States continue to pour military aid to Pakistan when that aid was designed to be used against Communism, and certainly not against India?

I attempted to answer these questions by first giving the official position of the government, then speculating on some of the real reasons for our neutrality (we did not want to drive Pakistan completely into the hands of China), and finally asserting that I felt President Johnson at least should have officially denounced Pakistan's use of American tanks and jets against India.

Incidentally, as is well known, the United States has stopped arms shipments to both Pakistan and India since the Kashmir war of September 1965.

Many students also were concerned about the United States not siding with India during the Kashmir war since both are democracies. "Why does the USA which is the greatest democracy in the world and which upholds democracy, secularism, and racial equality at home not do so by helping India which is also a great supporter of these principles?"

Needless to say these critical opinions were voiced only weeks and months after hostilities had been stopped, and were understandable given the circumstances of Patton tanks manned by Pakistan troops inflicting casualties on Indian soldiers.

On Vietnam, there was less consensus about the United States policy among students and professors. A minority of those who spoke up supported the United States on the ground that Communism had to be stopped in Asia, and that Vietnam was an important testing ground in this conflict.

In this view they were primarily motivated by the fear of a Communist victory in Vietnam which would strengthen China, now one of the two primary enemies of India. However, the majority opposed United States policy in Vietnam because it represented an outside interference in the internal affairs of the country.

Another argument: "American policy in Vietnam does not seem convincing. If you want to fight Communism, you must try to establish a better socio-economic foundation. The government in South Vietnam seems to be simply a puppet of the United States."

Others advocated an immediate end to the bombing of North Vietnam and a reconvening of the Geneva Conference.

Concern also was voiced about the United States' opposition to the seating of Communist China in the United Nations. Said one student: "How is this going to help the United States in checking Communist expansion?"

Said another: "How does the United States government explain its persistent refusal to have China in the United Nations—which would be the only way of bringing her out of dogmatic isolation?"

While most questions concerning foreign affairs represented a critical attitude toward official United States policy in Asia, partially explained by a political radicalism among many college students, and partially by a widespread consensus on foreign policy issues among all strata of the population, they should not be regarded as an expression of hostility toward Americans.

Furthermore, the sizable shipments of wheat to avert a famine during this period were of course welcomed, and strengthened the reservoir of good will toward the United States which does exist among large segments of the Indian academic and non-academic communities.

scholarship assistance if they complete their secondary education satisfactorily. By this means Hampshire hopes to provide early incentives to serious preparation for college. Most Hampshire students will pay full tuition, board, and fees (estimated at $3,300 for 1969-70). Those aided by the College's experimental program will receive full scholarships. It is the College's belief that most partial scholarships—and many are available from outside sources—operate to help middle-income families balance their budgets rather than to aid children of the poor who could not otherwise go to a private college.

Hampshire is now engaged in the detailed planning of its campus, located in Amherst and Hadley, and in the early processes of recruiting faculty leadership. The College has engaged the firm of Hugh Stubbins and Associates to design the basic buildings; Sasaki, Dawson, DeMay Associates, Inc., to design the campus and do site studies; and have retained Pietro Belluschi as an architectural consultant.

PUB. BOARD . . .

• To assist member organizations, when appropriate, in recruiting qualified staff and contributors.

Throughout the Commission's deliberations over the past five months the point was constantly made that the success of the Board will depend on the quality of the people appointed to it and the attitude with which they approach the problems that the Board will face.

The proposed Pub Board meets its first set of hurdles at tonight's student Senate meeting and tomorrow in the Faculty Senate.

If approved, the Pub Board would then head for a second set of hurdles—the degree to which faculty, students and administrators wish to cooperate and contribute to a Student Communications Board.

Lost Wax Process Used For Casting Sculpture

by JACQUELINE FINLAY

The lost wax process, the oldest method known to man for casting sculpture in metal, is being practiced at the University of Massachusetts in the Conservation Building.

In this process, the artist's original work in an impermanent medium, such as clay, is used to make a mold from which he casts a wax copy. The copy is encased in a second mold, melted out ("lost") and replaced by molten bronze or another metal.

Inside the Conservation Building is a giant beehive-like structure, the kiln, which melts the wax out of the mold. From the nearby furnace a crane as tall as the ceiling lifts molten bronze in buckets to a pit where hot metal is poured into the mold to replace the now lost wax.

Students pass an example of this art every day and probably never notice it, except when some local "artist" has decorated it with toilet paper or green paint. The Metawampe statue is a result of lost wax.

There are other, more obscure effects of this process roaming around the campus. Gold teeth are cast by this technique, as are many pieces of jewelry.

Works such as the welded sculpture in front of Bartlett Hall are more prevalent today than cast sculpture, of which Metawampe is an example. According to an article in Craft Horizons, "The lost wax process has been superseded by other techniques of precision casting in foundries working for industry rather than sculptors. The high cost of casting in the few commercial art foundries in this country has encouraged sculptors to employ modern industrial direct metal techniques, such as welding."

"Soft Lecture"

Art Club Opens Season

As my old friend Luigi Boccherini would always ask, "whats za happening here." It would be hard to explain to Luigi or anyone else for that matter just what will be HAPPENING tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowditch Hall (Small white building behind Machmer).

Charles Close, a member of the UMASS art department, will be giving, or directing, or staging, or producing, or instructing this first event of the Art Club's 1966-67 program.

It has been rumored that Mr. Close has been seen carrying a varied assortment of props into Bowditch for his (officially called) "Soft Lecture."

These props have consisted of varied audio visual equipment, including 2 Todd-A-O cameras, a six piece live rock and roll band, two go go girls formally with Jack Dempseys Go-Go Palace of New York City, the last six reels of Bogart's famous "I was a Bagel for the F.B.I.," the plans for the new Fine Arts Building, and, last but I'm sure not least, an "I like gym" poster.

Mr. Close's "Soft Lecture" is only a form of the art of "The Happening." The Happening first originated by Alan Kaprow in the late eighteen hundreds has since that time taken many forms.

First conceived as an enviormental art form, it eventually branched out into two world wars and minor border police actions.

Although first put on for the children of the streets, the Happening is pretty much restricted now to University's and Institutions of higher learning where it can receive the kind of intellect it demands.

Mr. Close, an instructor in the Art Department came to the University from Europe two years ago where he had been studying on a Fullbright Grant.

Concerning Europe Mr. Close has said "There was much happening." Mr. Close is also a

Newsmen Hit LBJ Administration With Censorship and Secrecy Charges

A committee of newsmen said Monday "an atmosphere of censorship and secrecy" has characterized the Johnson administration policies, particularly a t the White House and Pentagon.

The criticism was made in the annual report of the freedom of information committee of Sigma Delta Chi, a professional journalistic society.

The group found the most significant new factor in the continuing battle for freedom of information is the open records law President Johnson signed July 4.

The report chalked up some gains and some losses on the administration scoreboard.

It said President Johnson apparently has ended the regular, open, live television press conferences, and has replaced them with informal, short-notice meetings with a minority of Washington reporters.

The report quoted one unnamed White House reporter: "President Johnson seems increasingly reluctant to meet the legitimate needs of the press, and his staff seems increasingly reluctant to press these legitimate needs on him."

The committee said the Pentagon is perhaps the greatest problem for newsmen concerned with the quality of the news.

Still in force there, it said, is a 1962 directive by Arthur Sylvester, assistant secretary, requiring all Pentagon personnel to report to Sylvester's office all conversations with reporters.

The Defense Department, it added, has "initiated further steps that it seemed certain would mean greater barriers to information on military matters."

Panel Discusses Vietnam '66 Thursday

The University of Massachusetts department of government and Center of Asian Studies will sponsor a panel discussion on the recent Manila Conference this Thursday, Nov. 3, at 8 p.m. in the Nantucket Room of the S.U.

Entitled "Vietnam 66: Politics and the Manila Conference," the discussion will consider a number of pertinent factors arising from the recent conference attended by Pres. Johnson and representatives from several Southeast Asian and Southern Pacific nations. The panel discussion will be open to the public without charge.

Participants in the discussion will be: Dr. Luther Allen, who will discuss the current status of Vietnam; Dr. Glen Gordon, who will talk on the impact of the conference on the U.S. elections; Dr. John M. Maki, chairman of the UMass program of Asian studies, who will discuss international politics; and Dr. Loren Beth, who will act as moderator of the panel discussion.

THE AIR FORCE OFFICER TRAINING SCHOOL SELECTION TEAM will be in the Student Union Nov. 2 & 3 applications from men and women interested. Acceptance is being made primarily for Jan., Feb., and March '67 graduation. June graduates may also apply.

Constructive Assistance

by Jim Foudy, Managing Editor

Last Spring a Joint Study Committee of the Student and Faculty Senates propose that a student publications board be established. At that time the cries of censorship were deafening.

Tonight the Student Senate will consider another proposal for a communications board and already the grumbling has started. This is fine. It is necessary that the senators question, criticize and debate the proposal in order for them to understand it.

We only ask one favor—don't stereotype the proposal as a censorship board and enter the meeting with a preconceived notion that it is intrinsically bad. Read it carefully before you debate and consider a few of these points.

First of all, the report states very explicitly that the Board will assist and advise, nothing more. It is being established as a place where the media can sit down with students, faculty and administrators to pick up ideas, listen to complaints and criticisms and air their own gripes.

Now if you don't think that the media on campus need this sort of board look around and listen to the complaints of your constituents with the publications and the complaints of the publications with everybody and everything. There is need for a forum.

Unlike the publications boards at a majority of land grant colleges and contrary to the wishes of some people within the state and the University, this board will assume no control over editorial or business policies. This is an advisory board—that's all.

The question is raised why faculty and administrators on a student publications board?

From a logical, objective point of view, the University is a tri-partisan community. The campus media exist for the entire campus. The University community has as its primary goal education. Now, since campus publications serve the entire campus and also serve an educational function, all members of the campus community have an interest in their welfare.

From a simple, subjective stand point, faculty and administrative criticism is valuable and helpful and right now a lot of publications could use some help.

Finally, the underlying theory of this report is important to understanding the proposed Pub. Board.

The Commission realized full well that the success of an advisory board rests with the quality of the people appointed and the attitude with which they approach their task. This is why the cries of censorship are presumtuous. They are based on the false assumption that the people appointed will assume censorship powers, the failure to realize that the effect of the Board will be negated if the members fail to cooperate.

The operations of publications on this campus are becoming big business. The necessity for a board staffed not only with editors but interested faculty, administrators and technically competent advisors keeps coming to light as the mistakes—technical and ethical—become more obvious. The proposed Student Communications Board is a step in the direction of constructive assistance instead of destructive criticism. It deserves a chance to prove itself.

Sound Off, 1 . . .

To the editors,

In reply to the letter concerning the band and its not appearing in Burlington; there are, I think, certain facts that the outraged gentleman ought to know.

First, the question of Mr. Jenkins' ambitions needs answering. In his four years as band director he has achieved a near miracle of efficiency and competence. The band, before his arrival, could not have inspired a team of hungry chimpanzees to eat bananas. They were just plain bad. He has supplied the leadership and drive that has elevated the band to the position of being one of the best in the east. This has been done in a state with no tradition of good high school bands from which to draw qualified marching-musicians. If in this time he has developed some pride in his accomplishment, that is surely justfiable.

Second, the band works very hard—as hard or harder than the football team—to prepare for the games and to maintain their level of proficiency. They labor far harder than their one credit allowance would justify. One of the reasons they do is that the individual members feel a sense of pride in belonging to the best band in New England; but, like any group they need to have their morale boosted from time to time. The trip to the Patriot's game was intended as a pat on the back to the band members for their loyalty and effort. As an added dividend it supplied terrific national and state-wide publicity for the school. The band responded by bringing the house down with the best job they've ever done.

Mr. Jenkins has done a remarkable job in moulding and maintaining a great band at the University. He neither needs nor deserves a lot of uninformed carping from people who wouldn't know an alto horn from a bass drum.

I am not a member of the band but I have over twenty year's experience as a marching member and instructor of bands and drum corps and I know the job that Mr. Jenkins has done. The only reason they didn't go to Burlington is that they judged the Holy Cross game to be the more important one. They were able to accept the Patriot's game because the Pats paid the band to appear; meals and transportation. So let's all shape up before w esound off.

Dear disappointed alumna:

Unless you are a little confused, which it seems you are from your letter, the Precisionettes did appear at the Homecoming game against Boston University; and if you were unfortunate enough to miss them, you have our heartfelt sympathy. We hope you didn't miss the UM marching band's pre-game show, though. That was something to behold!

Don't get us wrong, the Precisionettes do cut a trim shape on the field; however, the art of the metriculous marching band must take precedence.

Mr. Jenkins deserves more credit than you give him. He prepares months in advance for the shows he uses during halftime and to squeeze a five minute Precisionette drill along with a six minute band routine into the seven and one half minutes of half-time that are allotted to us is to do him an injustice.

Please, Miss Alumna, in the future save your remarks until you have sufficient knowledge to substantiate those unfounded claims.

To the Editor:

Yes, Massachusetts voters do have the opportunity to reject the recently enacted sales tax. The move for rejection originates largely with the Democrats, who hate to see the Republicans get credit for a progressive measure. Their tactics are convincing: "A sales tax takes equally from the poor and the rich—from those who cannot afford to pay and from those to whom payment is scarcely noticed." This argument is deliberately misleading.

First, the so-called "rich people" are actually paying more, as they are the ones who can afford to splurge on non-essentials. The "poor people" are taxed only on non-essentials and are given the opportunity for a rebate at the end of the year.

Secondly, the tax reaches Massachusetts teenagers, who ordinarily pay no income or property taxes and yet pour out millions of dollars each year for hair spray, cosmetics, and records.

Third, the tax reaches the thousands of tourists who flock to our state each summer to vacation on Cape Cod or at recreation centers farther north. These people pay no Massachusetts income or property taxes, yet spend millions in our stores.

The sales tax is meant to draw from a broader base, from those who ordinarily pay no tax when they can well afford to, as well as those who spend extra on jewelry, furniture, and "luxury items." The tax is not unreasonable. If you can pay a hundred dollars for a new carpet you can certainly afford a three dollar tax.

Take a look at the good the tax has already done, at the numerous cities and towns in which property taxes have been lowered. If the sales tax is rejected, we'll be right back where we started from, and hardest hit will be the middle class—small property owners who will see their taxes go right up again. Let's stop fighting party politics and be sensible. We need a "Yes" vote on the sales tax.

To the editor:

I am outraged by the fact that at a state-supported university, classes are held on Saturdays, the sabbath for the Jewish faith. Classes are not held on Sundays so that Christians can observe their sabbath religiously. Why then, should classes be held on Saturdays? Is it expected that Jewish students forego their religion for the sake of education? Is it fair for classes to be held on one religious day and not on the other? I say NO!

To the Editor:

In reference to your editorial of October 31, 1966 entitled "Vote 'No' ", the facts here seem not to be expanded to a point where truth of the matter would become evident. The limited sales tax is regressive only in theory, not in practice. The only sales tax which is proven to be regressive is the general sales tax under which all items are taxed.

Here in Massachusetts, that which is basic to life—food, medicine, clothing—is non-taxable. The people who reap the benefits of such a tax are those in the low and lower - middle income groups, where each income is under $4,000 or so, depending on the source used. (The President's Economic Council puts the ceiling of the impoverished group's income at $4,000.) Let us say that a man's income is $5,000, the majority of which is used for the buying of necessities, or shall we say $4,500. That leaves $500 to be taxed, as it is spent on taxable items. The tax on this comes to only $15. Since most states, including our own, allot him $4 credit for each dependent, that means that for a wife and two children $12 is returned to him at the end of the year, and he only pays out $3 to the state in sales tax.

As the amount of income increases, the amount spent for luxuries naturally increases proportionally, and we find that the real group paying out the most money is the higher income group which can well afford to spend a bit more extra money.

As an alternative, we are presented an increase in either the income tax or the property tax. Since the property tax was not discussed in the editorial, I shall present this aspect, a dismal one, to be sure. A rise in property tax would be devastating, because as ours stands now, it is one of the highest property taxes in the U.S. Take for instance the fact that the Prudential Building in Boston was nearly not built because of the high property tax rate. If an increase in property tax becomes a reality owing to the voters of Massachusetts giving a negative reply to referendum No. 5, construction of new buildings, either for private or business use, will seriously be cut,

Therefore, let me repeat, that the limited sales tax is not regressive in practice, but rather progressive. Vote "Yes!" on referendum No. 5!

To the Editor:

Although I think most complaints registered against the University police are invalid because the officers are carrying out an assigned task, an event occurred Monday night which made me wonder where the job ends and personalities enter the picture.

A student pulled into the S.U. lot and accidentally enough parked in the visitor section, a campus police car right behind. They had followed because the vehicle had one tail light out. They looked at the registration and license and issued a defective equipment warning. All well and good...but then they hand the driver a ticket saying he's in a visitor space and added insult to injury by saying, "If you had read your student handbook you would have known better." This is at 10 p.m. with plenty of other spaces.

I believe it would have been kinder, more in the way of duty instead of in the way of over-efficiency, and less spiteful (sic.) for them to simply remind the driver of the regulation and allow him to move.

Is this worth being disturbed over or is it just another little event that should be forgotten? I don't know; but I would be interested to hear what people think.

Sexplosion Creates "Neutral" Morality

(Editor's note: This article is an overall impression of the new sexual awareness developing in today's young generation, extracted from discussion and interviews with many UMass co-eds, and from research done in the current medical and psychological journals.)

by LORRAINE BALCH
Feature Staff

It used to be politely ignored, hastily camouflaged by dusty Puritan ethics. Today it is not only mentioned; it is freely expounded and widely dissected. The archaic attitude toward sex has been whiplashed by awareness. Life is no longer a string of whimpering subtleties; it is a raucous surge of realism.

Awareness has devouted the stigma attached to sex. The once-obscure parlor discussions, the Victorian taboos are today's naked truths. Seething indulgence has detonated the "Sexplosion."

Beyond this sphere of abstractions, the Sexplosion throbs with reality.

This "new freedom" represents a conflict between the heathen outlook—indulgence according to sexual appetite—and the celibate view—self-denial and retreat from sexual associations. Accordingly, there has been a marked transition from guilt, shame, and hypocrisy to honesty, self-indulgence, and permissiveness. The new morality implies examination, expression, and enjoyment.

The promotion of hedonism is a means of life. Yearly, millions of dollars support the publication of various pornographic materials.

Sexual orientation has been emphasized in the learning process. Erotic, compulsive patterns have been imposed on adolescents. To the over-zealous mother, her padded, powdered pre-teen is the epitome of sexual attractiveness. Cinderella is a frugging, gyrating neophyte.

Beyond universal applications, the sexual revolution has made its impact upon individual attitudes and values.

Despite all censure of modern college youth, one of its outstanding characteristics is its endeavor to correlate belief with action. Sex is a natural expression of affection. Sexual relations reveal an intensity of endearment not communicable through words. Sexual enjoyment has become an outlet for inadequacy, frustrations, and feelings of anxiety. It is a way of life, a means of attaining emotional stability.

Sexual freedom has evolved as the impetus for self-identification. In this matrix of depersonalization, self-identity is the strongest assurance that a human being has his own existence.

To the individual, sex has become an aesthetic matter. Sexual practices are regarded proper or improper according to the particular relationship in question. Thus, the sexual drive has evolved into a neutral affair as far as morality is concerned. Essentially, individual values, philosophies, and ideas are the sole determinants of sexual experimentation.

In sexual love there is no law. Some are possessors, others the possesssed; some are the placid, others the passionate. Some, enthralled by the spirit alone, thirst for adoration, security, and peace; while, others must be taken with fervor and can be destroyed only by unwanted pity. All is just if love is right.

Social pressure has inspired the re-evaluation of individual ideas. Sex is "in." Bacchanalian revelry and feverish orgies are the pulsating fantasies of rebellion. Here there is no black and white stencil; virtue is greyness. The "straight world" is a void of nothingness; the gaudy carnival is spasmodic reality.

Parties propagate sex; sex propagates parties. Games are played and favors are distributed. A students room is a bedroom with no furniture conducive to comfortable sitting or conversing. The nondescript cubical, the sophisticated playpen, exudes the pungence of aromatic draft. Such is the conveyance.

The attitude has also been updated. A pill has etherized morality. Chastity resting on the fear that relations could entail pregnancy has been undermined. Purity no longer embodies excuse.

It deviates to conform. It exists to live. It seeks reality in fantasy. It believes, experiments, enjoys. Life does not like cliches.

Hillel will sponsor a lecture by Dr. Donald Junkins, UMass graduate and noted, on Thursday, November 3, at 8 p.m.

UMass Poet-Alumnus To Speak on Peers

"They were terrible, but Dr. Varley was very kind," says Dr. Donald Junkins about the first group of poems he wrote as a senior in a creative writing class at UMass thirteen years ago. Today, Dr. Junkins is a visiting lecturer at his alma mater and, what is more interesting, a published poet.

When a poet plans to speak about the works of two other Americans noted in his field, we obtain the twofold reward of gaining insights into both the lecturer and his subject matter. In a talk sponsored by Hillel, Dr. Junkins will read from and speak about the poetry of Karl Shapiro and Maxine Kumin on Thursday, Nov. 3 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union.

Shapiro, who has been a leading poet for the past twenty-five years, uses the material of his life as a Jew in a collection entitled Poems of a Jew, where the poetry is imbued with the artist's deliberate self-consciousness about his heritage.

Maxine Kumin, on the other hand, does not write as a Jew in as direct a way as Shapiro. Many of her poems in the volume The Privilege reveal her Jewish origins because she naturally writes about herself and the world around her, but she is not seeking a specifically Jewish identification.

Instead of Shapiro's exploration of the artist as Jew, Mrs. Kumin investigates the universal human problem of achieving an identity.

Dr. Junkins, who studied under Robert Lowell with several other young poets—Anne Sexton, Sylvia Plath and George Starbuck, has had works published in the Sewanee Review, New Yorker, Massachusetts Review, Poetry (Chicago), and Minnesota Review.

His first book of poetry, the sunfish and the partridge, which is available at the University store, appeared in 1965 with a cover designed by another member of the UMass faculty, Jack Coughlin.

In addition to teaching at the University, Dr. Junkins is working on a second volume of poetry and will have fourteen of his new pieces in the second "Signature Series" of the Massachusetts Review.

Why don't you take advantage of this rare opportunity to examine the works of two contemporary poets through the eyes of a fellow artist?

Indian Graduate Student Compares UMass to Home

by JOHN J. TEMPLETON

Contrast the University of Massachusetts and its students with their counterparts in Asia and Europe. Mohammed Yusua of India, who has been doing graduate work here for the last year, has some ideas on the subject.

Mr. Yusua did undergraduate studies at Allghubad University in India, then worked for a while in India's Banaras University. He studied and traveled in Europe before coming to the University of Massachusetts.

"The main difference between the students here and those in India and Europe," said Mr. Yusua, "is that the students here seem to gain a more general knowledge of their subjects. In India and Europe the students concentrate on acquiring more detailed knowledge of their subjects."

Mr. Yusua commented on teaching methods saying, "the courses here are easier to pass due to the fact that here only the students are tested. In India and Europe the instructor who teaches the course generally doesn't give the final exam. It is given by someone who has a good knowledge of the subject but is not involved in the teaching of that particular course. This manner of testing not only tests the student but is also a test of the instructor's teaching ability."

"People in general," said Mr. Yusua, "have been straight-forward and have made me feel comfortable here. You can approach professors regardless of what department they are in and they will attempt to help you."

"In my country and in Europe," he said, "there is not the concern for gaining post-graduate degrees that you have here. There, a man can have only his undergraduate degree and still get a top job in his field. The emphasis there is more on experience rather than on the possession of several degrees."

Speaking about the pace of American life, Mr. Yusua said, "here sometimes you will see friends pass each other and exchange greetings without stopping. In India and Europe friends will usually stop and chat for a while when meeting.

"I have noticed that students here are preoccupied with themselves. The males usually tie up with a girlfriend and forget about their other friends. In India a person without a date is encouraged to join in with those that have dates."

"The girls here," said Mr. Yusua," are more beautiful than the girls in Europe. They are also less conservative. It is much easier to become friendly with a girl here, but the great freedom that they have makes it difficult to develop depth in the relationship. If you date a girl in India or Europe, she will see only you. The girl you are dating here might be seeing five other fellows."

When asked to comment on what he thought the most interesting aspect of the University of Massachusetts campus, Mr. Yusua replied, "At the university that I attended in India, we had only a small cafeteria and you could only stay there long enough to eat.

"Then you had to leave in order to make room for the people who were waiting for seats. Here at the University you have the 'Hatch' where students can meet and talk for hours. It gives students a place to meet with old friends and develop new ones."

The International Students Association meets once a week at the Student Union. University students interested in meeting students from foreign countries can do so by stopping by the Union any Wednesday evening.

When it comes to politics, is big business a Mugwump?

Some sharp tongues define "mugwump" as a political animal with his "mug" on one side of the fence, his "wump" on the other. Clearer heads claim it a stamp of independence. The definition and corporate stance Western Electric takes is strictly nonpartisan.

But nonpartisan as WE must be, we recognize that, to be an effective citizen, the individual must become a political partisan. And it means being more active than just showing up at the polls. So we do our best to encourage our 170,000 people to express their political leanings – in whatever direction.

We do it by sponsoring a "Democracy in Action" program that takes no sides, but explores all angles. WE people – white collar, blue collar – lead it. Long before elections, courses are given at WE locations. Background subjects include such Soc. and Eco. considerations as – The Persistent Problem of Unemployment... The Negro's Long Struggle ... America's Balance of Payments. Booklets are handed out that answer questions like: "How can I get started in politics? How can I use my talents to serve my party?"

Before elections, Back Your Party rallies are held. Bunting and posters hung. Politicians from both national parties are invited to speak. A dialogue develops.

Thousands of WE people participate. It stirs up their political juices. Helps make them better informed, ergo: better citizens.

As a national company, in the Bell System to make ever-better communications equipment, we believe such basic communications are vital. It's also fun!

Behind the Scenes

Retired Prof Active in Theatre

by NANCY E. CLARK

As a retired Smith College art historian, Oliver Larkin's hobbies range from opera to art to Pulitzer Prizes. Larkin dabbles in the arts of design, painting, writing and history and excels in whatever he undertakes.

Larkin designed the set and costumes for the Amherst Community Opera's October production of "Bartered Bride." As a member of the AMCOP players, he has combined his musical interest with set designing in past performances of "Carmen" and "Figaro."

Now his efforts are turned toward another favorite pastime—marionettes and puppets. A marionette production of "Don Quixote" is in the making. Not only does the pipe-smoking Larkin design the scenery for his marionettes' performances but he also designs, constructs and costumes the figures.

Art has been a way of life for Mr. Larkin since his high school days, when he did "all the scenery work" for school plays. At Harvard Univ., he studied design and painting. After graduation, he taught art at his alma mater for several years and later specialized in American art history. In 1949 Larkin received the Pulitzer Prize in history for his book, Art and Life in America. Material for the Pulitzer winner was collected by Larkin from reading old manuscripts and letters and from visits to the actual paintings and sculptures which are representative of this nation's art since its beginnings in the 1600s. Larkin's latest book on art, Daumier, Man of His Time, was published in the past year.

As an art historian, Larkin taught at Smith College for 40 years until his retirement several years ago. He also taught art history in Salzburg, Austria, for two summers. His other European voyages were made "purely for painting and sketching pleasure," the gray-haired artist said casually.

Last summer, Mr. Larkin hit the UMass campus and lectured to a group of history teachers on the place of art in American history.

In addition to art history, set designing, marionettes and writing, he enjoys sketching in pencil and painting in watercolor landscapes in the Connecticut Valley.

Home is Northampton, where his cats, Baby and Pokey, sleep on top of the refrigerator.

Life to Oliver Larkin is full of art—scenery and sets, puppets and painting, marionettes and American art, sketching and writing, costuming and even cats. His talents seem unlimited.

Authority to Speak on "Dead Sea Scrolls"

Dr. Krister Standahl, Frothingham Professor of Biblical Studies at Harvard University Divinity School, Cambridge, Mass., will speak Sunday evening, Nov. 6, on "The Dead Sea Scrolls — A Threat To Christianity?"

Dr. Stendahl's address will take place in Immanuel Lutheral Church on Pleasant St. in Amherst, directly adjacent to the UMass School of Education. The time will be 7:00 p.m.

Ordained in 1944, Prof. Stendahl became a priest of the Church of Sweden, serving from 1948-50 as Chaplain at Uppsala Univ. He was President of the Student Christian Movement in Sweden in 1954, and was chairman of the inter-European consultation on youth work at the World Council of Churches Institute in Bossey, Switzerland.

An authority on the Dead Sea Scolls, Prof. Stendahl is the editor and co-author of The Scrolls and the New Testament, (1957) and the author of The School of St. Matthew and Its Use of the Old Testament, (1954). He is also the author of numerous articles and essays in scholarly journals and encyclopedias, He is editor of the Harvard Theological Review.

DR. KRISTER STENDAHL

Prof. Stendahl came to the U.S. in 1954. He assumed his first teaching assignment at Harvard in 1954, becoming Frothingham Professor of Biblical Studies in 1963.

Prof. Stendahl holds the Th.D. degree from the University of Uppsala in Sweden.

Dr. Stendahl's lecture on the Dead Sea Scrolls is offered to students of the Four College area by the Student Congregation of the Lutheran Church in Amherst as part of its 1966-67 program.

According to Donald Meeker. UM '67, president of the Lutheran Student Congregation, the group seeks to bring the best Christian scholarship available to the Amherst area to discuss theological and religious topics of current interest. Previous speakers include Dr. Paul Holmer of Yale Univ. Divinity School who spoke on the problem of religious language.

2000 A.D. is just around the corner. Where do you figure you'll be then?

Come the year 2000, you'll be about to retire, for one thing. Will you look back on your career with satisfaction? Or with second thoughts? It'll depend a lot on how you begin your career. And where.

At G.E. you get off to a fast start. Big responsibilities come early.

You may find yourself at Cape Kennedy, checking out the Apollo moon shot. In India, installing a nuclear power plant. Or in a laboratory, looking for applications for a new silicone membrane that lets a submerged man breathe oxygen directly from the water around him.

This is a worldwide company that's helping to change the world. And that's changing with it. Well over half of the 250,000 products General Electric makes today didn't exist ten years ago!

New Graduate Program Offered In Polymer Science and Engineering

The University of Massachusetts has used the scientific resources of its School of Engineering and Polymer Research Institute to establish a new graduate program in polymer science and engineering, it has been announced by Dr. Edward C. Moore, Dean of the Graduate School.

A program, beginning this term, will offer interdisciplinary doctorate and master's degrees in polymer science and engineering. The program is unique in that it "attempts to combine rigorous training in the pure sciences with a study of the engineering aspects and the applications of principles," according to Dr. Richard S. Stein, Commonwealth Professor of Chemistry and Director of the Polymer Research Institute.

The Polymer Research Institute was established at UM in 1961 to develop methods for studying plastic films, fibers, and other polymer systems. Using such methods as x-ray diffraction, low and wide angle light scattering, and phase and electron microscopy, studies are made of the brittleness, strength, flexibility, elasticity and other qualities of polymers. The Institute has gained an international reputation for its pioneering research in rheo-optics, the use of optical methods to study polymer properties.

The graduate polymer science and engineering program is open to students with undergraduate degrees in either chemistry, physics or engineering. A thesis is required for the Ph.D. program; two M.S. programs, with or without thesis, may be selected.

Sufficient flexibility is allowed in the first year's curriculum for entering students to take work outside their undergraduate major. There will be a basic core of courses within the program with electives to provide for options, one for students with a chemistry-physics emphasis and another for those with an engineering emphasis.

Newman Center

Fr. Quigley Leads Discussion

In Newman Center this Thursday evening at 8:30 p.m., Father Quigley will continue the weekly discussion of "The Art of Being Human." Father Quigley himself will lead the discussion on "The Problems of the Desirable."

His main objective is to acquaint men and women with situations which they either have already encountered or will encounter in college or in life.

He will discuss the blind date, fraternity parties, batchelor entertainment, cocktail parties, dating non-Catholics, love-making, entertaining media, dormitory life, pinning, going steady, and marriage in college.

Everyone is invited to attend. Bring any ideas or questions which you may have in your mind about any of Father Quigley's topics.

"The Art of Being Human" was devised as an informal discussion to help men and women know more about life.

Labor Education Center

To Gain Understanding of Worker, Scholar

by DONNA LEE UMANA

"Organized labor is an undeniable part of the society in which the university exists."

These words of George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, at the Charters Day Conference in April, 1963, provided the impetus to the founding of the Labor Relations and Research Center at UMass.

The center, which officially opened in September, 1965, was established to provide a whole range of services and research activities in labor education. Earlier, at a conference sponsored by the center in May, 1965, Massachusetts State Sen. Mario Umana described the new role of contemporary labor!

"The new leadership of labor and the leadership yet to come needs education much more than the old leadership which built organized labor in the first 60 years of the century. The pioneers of labor got their education in the school of hard knocks and the crucible of on-the-job training."

As John Sessions, an educational specialist of the AFL-CIO, noted at the conference, the center is part of the continuing effort to bring the image of the worker out of the realms of the "dumb-ox" and the college professor out of the realms of the "Tower of Babel builders."

It is striving towards a reapproachment of the goals of the scholar and the worker, an assimilation of the facilities of the university and the problems of the union. Sen. Umana noted that the center wants to make sure that "the leaders (of labor) are trained in the conflict and in tolerance, the newcomers are ready for positions of leadership. In collective bargaining, the center is assuring that labor has the skills and knowledge related to economics, wage profits and the needs of industry."

The program of the center is trifold: extension services, academic work and research. The services of the center include advising, speaking and consultation on the broad spectrum of problems affecting the labor community. This extension service attempts to cover every aspect of interest to the unions.

There is also a graduate program in which interested unions cooperate by providing internships for students who benefit academically from such an experience.

The academic phase which in June had an enrollment of 2,333 students ranging in age from 21-33, is subdivided into the undergraduate, graduate and labor extension programs.

Within the undergraduate program, a student who is interested in labor relations may select a major field offered in one of the University's academic departments and then concentrate in labor relations by taking additional required and elective courses after consulting his major adviser.

The graduate program, which is interdepartmental, leads to a master of science degree in labor studies. It prepares students for academic work, labor union employment and government service. Business or industrial relations training are not dealt with by the center but left within the realm of the School of Business Administration.

The labor extension program includes academic short-courses, workshops, seminars and conferences. Current research of the center deals with any of the problems confronting labor in Massachusetts.

Assistant Director Harvey Friedman says that the center "acts as a clearing house and contact agency for government and private industry." For example, Friedman noted, the center is "developing a program to educate the members of trade unions in the problems of the youthful offender —to get reactions and feelings and hopefully run demonstration programs where the union will be the battering ram." With aid from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, this "youthful offender" research program has its own staff and a principal investigator, who is Dr. Robert Stanfield of the Sociology Department. Additional research has also produced a consumer education program under the direction of the UMass Department of Home Economics for the Academy Homes of Boston.

For the general public, there is an even more dramatic possible result of all this effort. According to Pres. John W. McConnell of the University of New Hampshire: "Labor has recognized its importance as one of the power centers in a pluralistic economy that can influence major decisions of this nation determining our future development."

Review Due of College Boards

The College Entrance Examination Board will conduct a thorough review of all college guidance and admission tests with the aim of giving lower income groups a better chance of qualifying.

The board, which conducts most tests for college guidance and admission, is a nonprofit organization representing 707 public and private colleges and universities, 232 secondary schools and 88 associations.

The review, to start this fall, will include a re-evaluation of the foundations upon which the tests have been based for the last 30 years. There has been criticism the tests were geared toward the middle classes and the culturally deprived were not given sufficient consideration.

The board adopted a resolution that bars from new membership any institution that practices racial segregation. Eugene Wilson, dean of admissions of Amherst College, called the resolution "narrow and lopsided" because it did not include religious discrimination and did not include present members.

German Expert Views UM

Dr. E. A. Muller, left, of the Max Planck Institute in Dortmund, Germany, an internationally known expert in work physiology, was a recent guest of Dr. Benjamin A. Ricci, right, professor of physical education at the University of Massachusetts, for a tour of the extensive work physiology research facilities located in the University's Boyden Physical Education Building. After touring Dr. Ricci's laboratory, Dr. Muller addressed graduate and undergraduate classes in work physiology, where he reported that he was "very much impressed" with the UMass facilities.

DON DURKIN

Giarla, Durkin Honored

Dave Giarla, outstanding U-Mass safetyman, was selected Monday as Yankee Conference back of the week following his outstanding gridiron performance Saturday at Vermont.

Giarla rose to several occasions as he helped the Redmen take another step toward bringing the Yan-Con beans to Amherst by ending the Catamounts' six game winning streak while taking over first place in the Yankee Conference standings with a 4-0 record.

In addition to intercepting two passes to thwart Catamount drives, Giarla left mouths agape in a spectacular swivel-hipping 74-yard punt return for a first period touchdown.

Besides Giarla, Joe Soldano, an All-Conference pick a year ago, was named lineman of the week for his superlative defensive effort for the Catamounts.

Honored as sophomore of the week was Charles Yanush, Maine halfback, for his three-touchdown performance against Colby. He also returned two kickoffs for 84 yards.

Linemen cited for their efforts were Rod Brooks (U-Mass), Don Loranger (Maine), Roy Lawrence (UConn), Bill Vasilios (New Hampshire), and Henry Walker (Rhode Island).

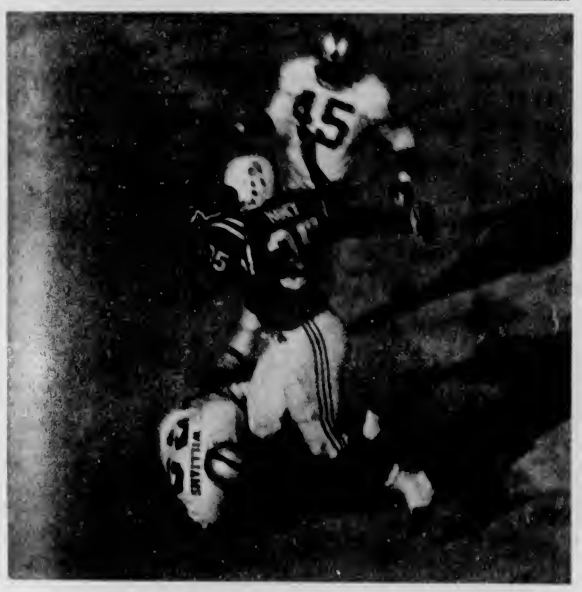
Sophomore standouts were Randy Robinson (UMass), John Krot (UConn), Kurt Vollherbst (New Hampshire), and Brent Kaufman (Rhode Island).

Halfback Don Durkin of U-Mass, who scored two touchdowns Saturday against Vermont at Burlington, was named Monday to the weekly Division I All-East team of the Eastern College Athletic Conference.

Durkin, a junior, scored off right tackle in the opening moments of the first period for the Redmen's first tally.

Later, with a little more than twelve minutes to go in the contest, UMass had rolled to a first down on the Catamount 25. Durkin then scored what proved to be the winning touchdown when he took a handoff from quarterback Greg Landry, went off left tackle, and spun away from a Vermont lineman to scamper into the end zone. The final score was 27-21.

Also named to the division team were Peter Larson of Cornell and Lee Jones of Buffalo, backs who scored three touchdowns apiece; ends Henry Walker of Rhode Island and John Martinowich of Penn; guards Roy Lawrence of Connecticut and Norm Davis of Dartmouth; tackles Bob Greenlee of Yale and Gary Bugenhagen of Syracuse; and center Tom Whidden of Brown.



Tom Sherman of Penn State was chosen for the quarterback slot and Jim Dulin of Rutgers, who booted three field goals, was named kicking specialist. Army's Steve Lindell was picked as the sophomore of the week.

Gridders Third in NE Poll

Harvard continues to lead New England major college teams and, barring an upset in the final weeks of the campaign, seems almost certain to retain its No. 1 rating, according to the Springfield Daily News football ratings.

Dartmouth remains in second place with UMass in third as the Redmen clinched no worse than a tie for the Yankee Conference crown by whipping Vermont, 27-21. The contest marked the first time in coach Vic Fusia's tenure at UMass that a Yan-Con foe ever scored three touchdowns against the Redmen.

Three teams in the ranks changed positions this week. Vermont, Boston College and Holy Cross shuffled the fourth through sixth positions.

Footrick's Forces Win Yan-Con –

"They Ran the Race, I Didn't"

by TERRY CARPENTER, Sports Staff

Scoring perhaps the biggest upset of the cross country season, Coach Bill Footrick's harriers swept to an overwhelming victory in the Yankee Conference meet Saturday to successfully begin Footrick's 13th season as head coach of cross country and track.

The victory was ever more sensational than the track team's indoor and outdoor Conference wins last year. In addition, it marked the third straight Conference title for Footrick who now has so many plaques on his office wall it's hard to tell what color the room is.

"Footie," as he is called by his runners, would take no credit for the victory. "Well, they ran the race, I didn't," he said simply. But he wanted this one a lot more than usual and worked himself and his runners hard to negotiate it.

The reason is simple. Last year was UMass' worst cross country season ever under Footrick: a losing season (4-6, his only losing season ever), a third place finish in the Conference meet (his worst showing), and an eleventh place in the New Englands, (the only time his team ever finished lower than sixth).

So, though he bounced back last year with two conference titles in track, he wanted the cross country victory. Once again Footie wears a smile around campus. And it could be a long time before that smile disappears.

The Redmen have a meet this afternoon at 3:00 against powerful Springfield behind the Women's Physical Education Building.

INTRAMURALS

Maroons, Smashers Victorious; LCA, Taxi Win Other Games

by TOM CONUEL, Sports Staff

There were four games played on the Intramural Field Monday night and all four were close contests. In the closest game of the night the Chadbourne Maroons nudged the Colts, 27-25. At the half the Maroons left the field with a comfortable 20-12 lead, but the Colts fought back in the final two periods and nearly pulled the game out.

Extra points made the difference for the Maroons as each team scored four TD's, but the Maroons managed three PAT's to the Colts' one. Jim Alward and Jack Murphy were the big stars for the Maroons. Alward threw four TD passes and ran for one PAT. Murphy caught five passes for the night, two for scores and one for a PAT. Tony Lauria of the Colts was equally spectacular with three TD passes and one TD run.

The Smashers, who seem to specialize in last minute heroics, did it again as they stopped the HI-LO's, 21-14. The HI-LO's, behind the passing of Joe Pedro, jumped out to a quick 14-0 lead which they maintained until the half.

However, the second half saw the Smashers come alive. Al Craig, who was 15-23 in the passing department, threw for all the Smashers' points. Bob Hansen caught eight of Craig's passes, two of them for TD's, including the winning one with about two minutes left in the contest. Dick Klemansky also caught a TD pass and had two PAT's.

The real excitement, however, came in the last 30 seconds of play when the Hi-Lo's had a first and goal on the Smasher one yard line, but were repelled by the Smasher defense on four successive plays.

In another exciting game LCA edged KS, 13-8, to win the Fraternity B league title. Bob Donohue had another good night for LCA hitting on 13 of 18 passes. Dave Woodcock also sparked the LCA offense with five pass receptions, one for a score, and one pass off the halfback option which Jeff Larson caught for another score.

In the Independent game Courtesy Taxi emerged with a 21-13 victory over the Trojans. Bill Klaes hit on 15 of 23 passes in leading the Courtesy offense. Three of his passes went for TD's with Don Tudryn making two of the receptions. Andy Costello and Vin Bisaillon each made one interception in leading a strong Courtesy defense.

Entries for Intramural handball must be submitted to the Intramural Office, Room 215, Boyden, by November 9. Entries for Intramural basketball must be turned in by November 7.

Senates Pass Student Communications Board

Faculty Senate Unanimous

by JIM FOUDY, Managing Editor

After a brief introduction by Prof. William Havard, the Faculty Senate yesterday, passed the proposal for a Student Communications Board. The Senate voted unanimously with no discussion or debate of the recommendation.

The Board, which will be comprised of three students appointed by the student senate, three representatives of the communications media, five members appointed by the Faculty Senate and the RSO Business Manager, needs only the approval of President Lederle before it can be implemented.

The President was not available for comment but the indication is that he will approve it.

In other business, the Faculty Senate passed the following proposals of the Academic Matters Committee:

- No changes be made in the present policy on grade changes.
- Any student with a deficiency in foreign language be required to make it up before enrolling in his fifth semester of work.
- Any student for whom the language requirement for admittance is waived be cleared with the Board of Admissions and Records.

The Academic Matters Committee also presented a proposal to raise the graduation requirement beginning with the Class of 1970 from 1.8 to 2.0 However, this was tabled back to the committee for a further report.

A question period at the beginning of the meeting also opened the floor to a discussion of the University's immediate plans for increasing the enrollment.

Provost Tippo, chairman of the Faculty Senate explained the present plans that call for an addition of 1,500 students in the Fall of '67 and again in the fall of '68.

Student Senate--One Dissent

by FRAN BORONSKI, Senate Reporter

With one dissenting vote the Student Senate approved the proposed Student Communications Board at its meeting Wednesday.

The proposal, submitted by the University established Publications Commission was passed after two hours of quick debate and clarification of the constitution.

Under the approved constitution the Board will have the following duties:

1) To provide advice on policies and operations of student communications media.

2) To receive and mediate complaints pertaining to the performance of student communications organizations.

3) To provide advice as to the qualifications of nominees for the positions of chief officer, business manager, and faculty advisor on student publications.

4) To assist member organizations, when appropriate, in recruiting qualified staff and contributors.

The Senate also endorsed Section 5 of the Discipline Board:

"Withdrawal: A student to a discipline action who 1) has appealed to the Board and 2) withdraws from the University while the appeal is pending may continue the appeal if he so desires."

The Discipline Board was a product of the Joint Study Committee Report submitted to both Faculty and Student Senates last Spring. The Board was formed to serve in a supervisory capacity for the judiciary system at UMass. With approval of Section 5, the entire Discipline Board has been approved.

In the area of finances, the Senate approved the 1967-68 budget of the Sport Parachute Club for $764.

OPEN DOOR POLICY

First Open House Causes Problem

by MARSHALL NADAN, Staff Reporter

There is no University policy regarding open doors during open house.

A recommendation of the Student Life Committee which has been adopted by the administration permits each dorm to schedule an opan house up to once a month. Many dorms took this opportunity to schedule their first open house on Homecoming weekend.

However, as with most things tried for the first time, the situation was accompanied by a great deal of confusion. In many instances, the residents of a dorm were informed that it was a University regulation that doors to student rooms must remain open while a member of the opposite sex was in the room.

In some cases this was done by Heads of Residence who were acting out of uncertainty of just what University rules were. In other dorms, residents were told specifically that there was no University regulation on open doors.

However, the confusion has been cleared up. Dean Hopkins has stated, "There is nothing in the current regulations concerning anything about doors that I know of." Dean Curtis and Dean Field have agreed.

Hopkins read from the Student Handbook. "However, residences may schedule an open house up to once each month, on a weekend or holiday afternoon or evening, by majority vote of all residents. As in the past, these social events are registered with the Calendar Office." That, he said, is the extent of University policy.

Hopkins added that he thought the elected House Council of each dorm can make rules and regulations concerning the question of open doors.

Field pointed to the rules in the Handbook and said, "An individual house has the right to add to them. The Student Life Committee can also add to them." He pointed out that traditionally on this campus an open house has meant that those who were receiving guests had open doors.

Jackie Hall, Chairman of Women's Affairs Committee of the Senate and member of the Student Life Committee, said that this question was discussed by the SLC. It's her opinion that "Open-doors is a matter for the individual residence hall to determine. Otherwise, it is not giving the residents the responsibility they should have. It is up to the residents of each hall to assume their responsibility."

John Greenquist, President of the Senate, commented, "My suggestion is that any dorm should run the dorm as they see fit up until they are told otherwise by the administration."

Emerson Advises Graduates: "It's Necessary to Move About"

An old friend to English majors at UMass is Prof. Everet Emerson. Emerson is charged with steering English majors towards appropriate grad schools.

by MELINDA KRIENSKY

English majors headed for graduate school may have to travel outside New England, Everett Emerson said in an interview with the Collegian.

Prof. Emerson of the English department is helping students interested in graduate work find the schools suited for them.

"While the number of students applying to graduate school is increasing, the places available to them are not. However, if you have attained an average grade of B in English and are willing to go some distance, chances are good you will get in somewhere," said Emerson.

Prof. Emerson stressed that in today's society it is necessary to move about. The largest graduate schools are the Midwestern state universities, so it often becomes necessary to leave the New England area in order to find a school.

A major incentive is the demand for English teachers with a Ph.D. This is steadily rising while the supply is not; consequently starting salaries are much higher than ever before.

"Greater earnings cause the professors to have better morale and this makes their students more attracted to teaching," Emerson explained.

The major problem for the students, Prof. Emerson finds, is selecting schools they should apply to. He suggests outstanding schools, some equal to their talents, and some for security.

He suggests four bases for their consideration: (1) prestige of the school, (2) size, (3) location, and (4) size of the English graduate program.

Though financial aid opportunities are increasing, they are still limited as compared to opportunities in the science departments. The need is met in part by employing graduate students to teach freshmen English courses.

At UMass, 50 graduate assistants teach two sections of freshmen English. Each five fellows receive $2,500 and 11 National Defense Education Act fellows receive from $2,000 to $2,800.

BLOOD DRIVE COMPLETING REGISTRATION

The Student Blood Drive under the sponsorship of the Campus Religious Council and the University Women is now completing registration.

This year students were not contacted individually in their dorms, with the result that fewer people signed up during registration week.

Anyone in good health, between the ages of 18 and 59 is elligible to donate. Those under 21 must have parental permission.

Forms for signing up may be found at the Lobby counter in the Student Union. Letters explaining the blood program will be sent out to parents of students under 21, together with a return permission card.

Each donor becomes a member of the Hampshire County Red Cross Blood Insurance Program. The provisions of this program are as follows:

1) By donating a pint of blood, a person becomes a member of the Insurance Program.

2) Membership entitles the donor and his immediate family living under one roof to any blood they may need during the next twelve months.

3) Members of the Program and their families will receive free blood without having to replace it. Non-members are required to replace pint for pint, as soon as possible.

4) Blood supplied to hospitals by the Red Cross is not charged for. Hospitals and doctors charge for administering blood.

A Happening Happens

by PAM METAXAS, Staff Reporter

In a melange of sight and sound, the UMass Art Department presented a Happening Wednesday night. It was conducted by Charles Close, a member of the art department.

At eight the scene was set—a floor of mattresses for the audience, sheets covering the walls, projectors lining the back of Bowditch Lodge.

The Last Rites began the Happening by playing several rock and roll selections. Simultaneously, there was a moving background of circles, polka dots, discs, waves, blocks in splashes of yellow, black, red gray.

A Human organ pulsating rapidly flashed on the ceiling.

A series of pin-ups moved between the slides.

The images changed rapidly—football players, children, highway signs, George Washington, Campbells soup, mouth-to-mouth respiration, the American flag, a white Die sign, elephants, monkeys, Swanson dinner, frogs, an old painting, Abe Lincoln, a human blood cell, a dying child, a salesman selling a steering wheel.

Two go-go girls in tin foil danced in front of the flashing pictures. They were joined by several girls dressed in sheets and totting heart signs. A tape played an art lecture while bursts of pop music, screams and laughter interrupted.

Marshmallows and sugar candy was tossed in the air throughout the hour and one half experience.

Then the circles got larger and redder, the waves began moving, the heart beat became louder and the nude travelled from the top of the room to the bottom.

The lecture diminished into the monotonous beat of deafening American music. The room was a swirl of color, of movement, of perception and of sound.

Then it was over. Suddenly.

Mr. Close worked his way to the front of the lodge through the maze of people that had crammed in to witness the Happening.

"I think I owe you some sort of explanation," he remarked. "Are there any questions?"

There were none. A Happening cannot be explained. It is to be felt, heard, and seen. It is to be appreciated, understood, perceived.

OPEN HOUSE . . .

Speaking on the general situation he said, "I think its poor that dorm governments are not fully informed of their actual responsibility or the limits of their authority. It would be nice if a statement could be made telling them just what University policy prohibits."

Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Co-ordinator of Student Activities and also Chairman of the Student Life Committee, said that he realized how confusion could have resulted on the question of open doors.

He continued, "The rules of conduct applicable within a house should be set down by the governing body as all other regulations are. They must truly be able to speak on such points if they have any autonomy."

Noffsinger commented, "I do not say that closed doors are necessarily unbecoming, but there should be a becoming set of rules regarding open house." He also stated that the SLC had not been requested to speak to this point. However, if Dean Field should request an opinion, the SLC will discuss the matter.

"I don't want to make another rule unless there is need for one," stated Field. "We are going all out to reinforce the students' responsibility to use their best judgments and their best decisions."

Large University Is Not Bad

McCartney Speaks Out

Dr. Robert McCartney says, "The success of the University depends upon the cooperation between the administration, faculty, and the student body."

by CAROL ARCIFA

"It is a myth! A large university is not necessarily a bad one." This is how Robert McCartney, secretary of the University and director of university relations, expressed one of his many strong feelings concerning educational institutions.

Although in a matter of years, UMass will join the growing ranks of universities with 25,000 or more students, McCartney expressed his feeling that largeness will not effect the excellent quality of UMass education.

McCartney spoke of future plans of his alma mater (class of 41), "In a few years UMass will take part in the ABC program whereby the University library will buy all books catalogued anywhere and everywhere."

The campus will tend to be a "collection of small colleges with the focus on the main library which the university as a whole can afford to finance."

McCartney refuted the idea that because this is an extensive campus much time is wasted in walking between living quarters and classes.

"Students do no more campus walking now than they did when I attended UMass. Then, it was a state college of a 1,600 enrollment However, such dorms as Thatcher and Butterfield were already built and many students lived on Lincoln Avenue and Fearing Street. This shows that the outposts of the University have remained essentially the same."

McCartney expressed his regret of the "don't fold, bend, or staple" attitude of the students. He said that IBM machines and student numbers are necessary in a university of this size.

However, "Students are not just numbers to the individual members of the administration and to the faculty members."

"The ultimate experience of education is the communication between the professor and each of his students. An education can not be forced on a student." The professors are willing to cultivate the interest of a student once the student has expressed his interest verbally or scholastically, McCartney emphasized.

In response to a commonly heard criticism that the large size of this University prohibits personal acquaintance with fellow class members, McCartney confessed, "When I went to UMass, I know there were boys in my dorm that I did not know; nor did I care to know them all."

"The fact that fraternities and sororities existed when the University was small and that they still exist now indicates that, no matter how big or small a campus, you will still choose a minority with which to associate yourself."

Different dorms or complexes become almost separate units which offer many opportunities for closeness with fellow students McCartney said.

"The success of the University," McCartney stated, "depends upon the cooperation between the administration, faculty, and the student body. We must realize that a joint effort is needed. A rift between any or all of these indispensible groups will mean a loss of University harmony."

Gubernatorial Candidates Differ Over UMass Construction Progress

Reprinted from Boston Herald

Gov. John A. Volpe and Edward J. McCormack Jr., met in a televised exchange Wednesday evening and differed sharply over progress in construction of the University of Massachusetts.

McCormack, the Democrat who is challenging Volpe for the first four-year term as governor in history, said a "conflict between the architects" of the proposed school would result in a year's delay. .

Volpe, the Republican incumbent, quoted Dean Lamar Soutter as reporting "magnificent progress" on the medical school at Worcester, " and I'll take his word for it."

Soutter, in answer to inquiries by reporters after the debate, said there would be "no delay in construction" and that the school would open on schedule in the fall of 1970.

Gov. Volpe said the school could make its application next March 1, and "still not be behind schedule."

Soutter said he made the decision to delay the application on the advice of federal officials, quoting them as saying great care should be taken in completing the application. He said there had been "no conflict between architects."

McCormack brought up the sensitive issue of medical school architects in his opening statement on an hour-long Channel 2 program, "Issues and Answers," but because of the format Volpe was not questioned by the panel of newsmen on the specifics of McCormack's charge.

Volpe contented himself with his reference to Dean Soutter, but McCormack was asked by Edgar Mills of the Christian Science Monitor for "more" on the matter.

"I understand they had to apply for federal funds by Nov. 1," said McCormack, "but they did not apply because of a conflict between the two architectural schools on design.

"I understand that will delay it a year, and then there will be the question of federal priorities and increased cost."

Pursuing the line of questioning, Mills then asked if McCormack thought the issue of architect selection—a long-simmering one in this campaign—was "a major issue."

McCormack, in an obvious reference to the role of Peter Volpe, brother to the governor, in advising on the selection of state architects, responded:

"I think it is a significant issue, one of the integrity of government. One who is a contractor or should not be passing on the selection of architects, that means the public responsibility conflicts with private interest, it demonstrates a conflict of interest."

FEDERAL WORK STUDY

Students who think that they might qualify for the Federal Work Study Program should see Mr. John Siegrist in the Placement Office, Machmer Hall. The program offers jobs to students who show a financial need. Eligibility is based upon the financial status of the student's family if the student is claimed as a dependent or upon the student's own financial status if he is a self-supporting student and not claimed as a dependent by his parents.

STUDENT SENATE . . .

Tippo explained, however, that while space is available for 1967, the additions in 1968 will depend on the completion of the Machmer Tower and the addition to Bartlett.

He explained that 100,000 to 190,000 square feet of floor space is needed for the fall of '68 if Machmer and Bartlett are not completed.

"Oedipus Complex-- Shmedipus Complex"

by SALLY DOLGIN, Staff Reporter

"I never intended to murder my dad and marry my mother," poor Oedipus might well have declared in Sophocle's classic and controversial myth. This remark was the subject of a lecture given by Dr. Manheim to the Literary Society Wednesday night.

Dr. Manheim, a UMass English professor, was well qualified to present his views on the phychological significance of the Oedipus Trilogy. Backed by twenty years of study in psycho-analytical literary criticism, he presently edits a journal entitled Literary and Psychology and has written a book called Hidden Patterns.

Before presenting his main topic, Dr. Manheim defined the aims of psycho-analytical criticism as being "critical," not "clinical." He enumerated several characteristics of this approach to literature. A few examples are the following:

- Use of literary material to extend one's experience and knowledge of the human psyche.
- Use of several phases of psychology rather than adhering to one particular school of thought.
- Use of a psycho-analytical theory based on the "unconscious" and dealing with irrational material.

Dr. Manheim pointed out that the term "Oedipus complex" was coined by Freud who wanted to explain the phenomenon of a man killing his father and marrying his mother. He drew the term from Sophocle's play which appeared to be the most classic reference available.

"This Oedipus connotation with sex," the lecturer pointed out, is way out. "All that comes relatively later in life." An infant begins life by depending solely on his "momma" for security. Eventually someone interferes with his having his mother. His resentment towards the other person is a natural and expected feeling which is later controlled, but always remains in his subconscious.

The term Oedipus complex, according to Dr. Manheim, is a nasty expression. "Oedipus shmedipus," he roared. A more accurate term would be "oedipal development."

Did Oedipus have an Oedipus Complex? Dr. Manheim approached his main topic of discussion at this point. According to the context (here he cited several examples) Oedipus acted as though he did. He "should have known, could have known, and acted as though he did know" his true relationship to his wife and the man he murdered.

For example, when the people of Thebes asked him to be their king, they offered him the added bonus of the castle's mistress. Did he ask her age to make sure she was not old enough to be his mother? "No," declared Dr. Manheim, Oedipus went blindly ahead and said, "Bring her on'."

Oedipus's greatest flaw, according to the lecturer, was his refusal to recognize the truth.

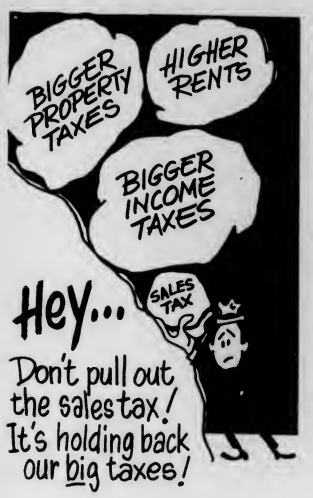
Vote "Yes"



By Joe Ross, Editorial Staff

The sales tax is not just a Republican idea. It is a bipartisan effort to restore fiscal sanity to Massachusetts. In 32 of the 41 other states that have sales taxes, it was passed by a Democratic governor, a Democratic legislature, or both. Since our sales tax was adopted, a Democratic governor and legislature in both New Jersey and Virginia have adopted sales tax programs. Here in Massachusetts, Foster Furcolo, a Democrat, fought for the enactment of a sale tax when he was governor. Mayor Collins of Boston also favors the sales tax.

There is no question as to the need for new revenue, nor as to the amount of that need. Senate President Maurice Donahue, the most vigorous opponent of the sales tax, agrees with sales tax supporters on this question.

The sales tax is not regressive. Essentials and many non-essentials are not taxed. The more money one makes, the more he will spend on taxable items. The elderly and low-income groups receive new income tax credits. The Massachusetts sales tax is the most limited in the nation! It has been endorsed by the Americans for Democratic Action, and by several labor leaders.

The entire income from the sales tax will be distributed to the cities and towns to lower property taxes, which are the highest in the nation. Anticipating this revenue, 167 cities and towns have lowered taxes for this year and 47 others have avoided increasingly them.

If the "no" votes win on Question 5, not only will the sales tax be repealed, but the entire act, which includes the sales tax, will be killed. This includes the new tax exemptions for the elderly and the poor, liquor and cigarette tax increases, and, most important, the local aid fund. City, town, and school budgets will be thrown off balance and real estate taxes will have to be increased astronomically.

Whoever wins the election for governor will have to find a way to raise the needed money immediately. It is very likely that the sales tax would be re-enacted.

A graduated income tax is forbidden by the State constitution. A constitutional amendment to allow such a tax was defeated by the voters in 1962 by a five to one margin. A simillar amendment now pending cannct be effective before 1969.

For these reasons, even Mr. McCormack has said that he will vote "yes" on Question 5. There is no sane alternative.

No Place To Go

It's ironic.

The only curfew on campus is for freshmen women. The rest of us may do as we choose.

But what is there to do? By eleven o'clock the only indoor eating place still open is the Tower. At twelve the library closes.

We do not advocate all night revelry. But it seems logical that there should be at least one campus facility open to students for late eating and studying. Students should not be driven back to their dorms simply because there's no place to go.

The student body has acquired many new freedoms. It should now make itself heard and begin working to solve the problems which are a direct result of these freedoms.

Let's Shed Some Light

Poor lighting is taken as a matter of course by UMass. students. Those who roam the campus at night are usually familiar with the terrain, and therefore are not conscious of the lighting deficiencies which exist in many areas.

But when the landscape changes daily as it does around the Southwest complex, a lack of lighting becomes painfully apparent.

At least a dozen warning flares are needed in the area. The two there at present are inadequate to say the least. And the installation of some temporary street lights wouldn't be out of order, either.

We realize that the mud, mountains, and canyons are all part of the growing process. We can put up with them.

But there is no reason why all campus construction sites should not be adequately lit. This is the responsibility of the contractor, and the administration should see that he lives up to this responsibility.

Or perhaps each student could be issued a flashlight . . .

"The Bummest of Raps"

To the Editor:

After reading the letter "Collegian Rots" on October 26, 1966, I became quite disturbed to find that there is a person on the Amherst campus who can find faults with a highly distinguished news media such as the Collegian.

As a former member and editor of the Collegian staff now residing in Ohio, I can only smile when I review the other publications of the academic institutions in the Mid-West.

First of all, very few publish more than once a week; many publish bimonthly. Only a few publish daily and their quality leads me to believe that they should consider publishing less frequently.

I have never known the Collegian to attempt to give the students anything but the best possible coverage of news concerning the University and its affairs. I remember the days when we were striving to attain an All-American rating and I believe that the current staff is doing the best job I have seen in the past half-dozen years.

I also remember the days when the sports staff was considered the weakest spoke in the wheel. It was said that this aspect of the paper was keeping the Collegian from becoming an All-American publication.

I thought that the sports staff of 1964-1966 was a good one. However, I don't feel that that staff could compare to the staff that Mr. Gould has assembled at present. I have never seen more imaginative writing, especially in features and those predictions. (Who would ever have picked the score of the Harvard-Dartmouth game to within one point?)

I believe that the author of the letter has listened to many partisan reports concerning the Collegian vs. The Heights. I have seen both, and although it might seem prejudiced, I feel that the Collegian is definitely in a higher class than The Heights. Both are All-American papers, making them equal in the eyes of those who judge.

If this student were to keep abreast of the affairs on the University he would have realized that he was writing to an All-American paper when he decided it was about that time to complain. Nowhere, and I mean nowhere, will students interested in journalism get more top-notch instruction than is offered by the Collegian advisors. Naturally, a student newspaper should in part be an instrument for student complaint. As long as they have been properly identified, the students will have their letters published. Unfortunately many of the students take advantage of the open forum and use the space for ignorant comments that have little worth to anyone related to the University.

I can honestly say that this student is giving the Collegian members the bummest of raps. He should open his eyes and see what is being done around him. Appreciate the Collegian for the All-American paper that it is. 'Cause I remember the days when . . .

"Psuedo-Intellectual Staff?"

To the Editor:

Does the Collegian think that it is performing a vital service to the University by informing the student body of its own sex mores? For that matter, does the Collegian think it is performing any service to the University, other than that of a sounding board for the highly disorientated ideas of its pseudo-intellectual staff?

Not only is the Collegian's information not all that informative, but its humor is far from being humorous, in particular in the person of Sam Spark. I fail to see anything to laugh about in the death of our men in Viet Nam, nor in the ridicule of our President.

It is fortunate for the Collegian that it has our money before the year begins. It would never survive, were it forced to exist on the sale of individual copies.

The Student Blood Drive Needs YOU

Pay As You Go

To Day Editor Aliferis:

After reading your editorial "Vote No" I was greatly disturbed. Your opinion is typical of the ignorant people who oppose the Sales Tax.

This co-called regressive tax is the most progressive tax proposed and enacted in this state. Its affect in the future could lower prohibitive cost of the income, property, and automobile excise taxes. These taxes when assessed at the first of the year along with Federal Income Taxes put an unnecessary burden on the taxpayer.

I think it is much better to pay a little at a time by way of a sales tax than to have to go into debt paying the huge costs of the other taxes at the first of the year and then struggling to pay these taxes. It is much easier to pay the 50 cents a week than the lump sum of the extra amount that raising these property, income, and other taxes would cost.

Mr. Aliferis, your views are too typical to be those of a person who pays these taxes as I try to do every year. In my opinion a broadening of the Sales Tax is necessary to lower these other costs. Voters shouldn't vote 'no' on referendum no. 5; they should vote 'yes' on referendum no. 5 and no. 6. A vote 'yes' is for lowering lump sum taxes and instituting a pay-as-you-go basis.

Of Bands and Bananas

To the Editor:

In his letter in support of the University Band (The Collegian—Nov. 2, 1966), Mr. Gilbert Norton states that, "The Band, before his (Mr. Jenkins') arrival, could not have inspired a team of hungry chimpanzees to eat bananas. They were just plain bad."

To be sure, the current edition of the Band is a much better marching unit and is more competent from a musical standpoint than the Band of old. But to suggest that the pre-Jenkins Band was BAD is to register a terribly unfair and completely fallacious indictment against the many people who worked long and hard to provide band music which, in fact, was GOOD.

The implication that the present Band has a more significant impact on the local chimpanzee population is interesting, if not totally complementary. It thrills the imagination to speculate as to how, in the absence of experimental evidence, one manages to reach this conclusion.

Mr. Norton's closing statement, "So let's all shape up before we sound off", is worthy of note and merits his own consideration.

Abolish Conscription

To the Editor:

According to a recent report which appeared in our college newspaper, the University of Massachusetts Collegian, there has been a notable lack of interest on the part of students in reform of the Selective Service System. Because I believe that students should take an interest in those things which concern them most directly, in particular, the Selective Service, I am submitting a few suggestions which have arisen during discussions of this subject among students.

There are several general points which these discussions seem to center upon.

First, no government has the right to demand service on the part of its citizens. Loyalty, in this case meaning national service in the public good, must be given freely by the uncoerced citizen, and any government which feels that it must demand service probably doesn't deserve it.

Second, it is the belief that there are better and more useful ways to serve the nation than in a military capacity.

Third, it is generally the belief that those who do not wish to serve in the military should be allowed some alternate to this type of service.

Therefore, I would like to suggest the following::

1. The abolition of the present form of military conscription, including the present deferment system;

2. The establishment of a National Service Corps which would accept volunteers for a two year period, and which would include the present Peace Corps, VISTA, and other programs;

3. I believe, however, that there might be a danger here, for attempts might be made to change these programs so that they more closely resemble the military in organization. I feel that because of their very nature, these programs must allow a wider range of individual choice, action, and direction than does the military;

4. I note with regret that the Teacher's Corps failed to pass through Congress. I feel that this program should be offered as a form of National Service to last four years. Inu addition, college juniors who agree to particiapte in this program should be given scholarships sufficient to pay for their last two years of schooling;

5. I feel that the federal government should actively support the United Nations, and should as part of the National Service Corps, train and subsidize those volunteers who would prefer to work for the United Nations on any one of its programs.

6. The third alternative — military service — would continue to exist for those who wished to serve in the armed forces, but it should exist on a volunteer basis only;

7. Finally, I would suggest a professional training program in medicine, dentistry, urban planning, and so forth. Students who wished to serve in some professional capacity would be supported in full for the length of their professional training, and in return would agree to serve for five years in Federal or local governments, or in the United Nations.

Of Course

To the Editor:

Of course the sales tax is regressive, but what are the possibilities that something better will replace it?

An even more regressive tax is the Social Security payment—it is deducted from only the lowest part of income, therefore, a poor man pays it on all of his income while the rich pay on only a small part of their income.

Yes, it is a tax in that Congress votes that money from that fund be used to give benefits to groups who have not contributed their actuarial share. For example, for a long while older people could get some coverage by making small payments for only a few quarters.

Many of them may have needed this badly, but a great many of them already had pensions from other sources such as civil service, industry, and the military. They drained money from the fund built up by many workers wh ohad no other retirement system.

R. F. Schweiker

ON THEFT

In our society there is a growing distortion of values. Materialism has found its way into the minds of many. To have, to get, to do requires money. The effected individual who is without money may turn to theft as his answer. All types of items are stolen; from books to clothes to cash. Thefts take place in the University Store, in town, in the dining commons, and in the dormitories.

The monetary significance of these thefts is almost negligible. They barely amount to petty larceny. A student who is victimized by the campus thief and loses his books or notebooks has probably not lost much more than ten dollars. However, the nonmonetary costs are great. The loss of a book includes the amount of time spent in underlining and making notations. A loss of a notebook includes the loss of lecture notes that are necessary to study for examinations.

Stealing in the University Store or from a merchant in Amherst amounts to shop lifting which is a misdemeanor for which the individual could go to court. This fact should be enough to deter any student from attempting theft but it apparently does not.

In a University Community it should be expected that any member is capable of accepting responsibilities to his fellow members as manifested in compliance with that community's regulations. Theft, in any of its forms, can only be considered as a serious infringement upon the rights of the community. Men's Judiciary can not view such an offense lightly, and it is not considered to be an excessive retribution for theft that the offender be suspended.

INSIDE AN ACTIVE STUDENT SENATE

Senate Committees In Review

Activities Committee

The Student Senate Activities Committee met Monday night to review the constitution of the University Reform Committee. The entire Activities Committee was not present so that no definite action could be taken on the constitution. The constitution was passed by the Senate but recalled because the Activities Committee felt that it lacked concreteness and stability.

The committee also met with representatives from Brooks House to go over the Brooks House Constitution.

The Committee will meet again next Monday night with a representative of the Reform Committee and attempt to reach a decision about its constitution, and Noah Webster Houses. Representatives from Hamlin will be present at that time to explain their house constitutions.

The Activities Committee is still short of members. Interested students should contact the Chairman, Dick Homan, Baker (546-6003).

Budget Committee

The Sport Parachute Club budget was unanimously approved by the committee.

It was announced that if the trustees approve the tax to finance the Fine Arts Council, this budget will not come under the jurisdiction of the Budget Committee.

Next week a preliminary of the Engineering Journal will be presented. Also presented next week will be the Heymakers Square Dance Club.

Chairman: Frank Verock

Finance Committee

The committee reviewed Student Senate bill S5. This bill would allow 2 members of Finance Committee to sit in on Budget Committee meetings, and two members of the budget committee to sit in on Finance committee meetings. Since there is an overlapping of the work done by these committees it was felt that such action would be desirable. The Finance Committee voted unfavorably on this bill.

A binding clause was added to the UMass Rowing Association budget. The purpose is to set up a subcommittee of the Finance Committee to assist in budgeting and appropriations.

Regular meetings of the Finance Committee are held every Thursday evening at 7:30 and are open to the University Community.

Chairman: Jim Collins

Academic Affairs

The pass-fail bill proposed by the Student Senate last year is being considered by the Faculty Senate. This bill would enable students to receive either a passing or a failing grade in courses not in their major. There is a limit of one course per semester.

The policy on this year's final exams is that only direct time conflicts will be changed. The committee is preparing a bill for a change in this policy.

The committee chairman is working on core course requirement changes with members of the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate.

Chairman: Bob Gaudet

Public Relations

The committee is formulating plans for a series of informative Coffee Hours. The first in the series was held last night. The topic was overseas studies opportunities.

Preliminary plans for a booklet describing all RSO organizations are being made. This booklet will include a description of each organization and requirements for membership.

Acting Chairman: Dale Coulouris

Crackdown Imminent on Crank Callers

According to Dean of Men, Robert Hopkins, those students who have been losing sleep because of obscene or harassing phone calls will now have recourse.

A meeting held on October 14, established procedures for dealing with such calls received by students. The following agreements and liaisons were established.

The student receiving an offensive call may contact either a representative of the University or the New England Telephone Company. In either case, the student will be referred to Dean Hopkins who will be responsible for coordinating the necessary follow-up with the University Police and the Telephone Company.

The student will receive a form authorizing the Telephone Company to take appropriate action to solve the problem. Included in the form will be a log sheet on which the student will include any pertinent information on the calls. An authorization for police action will also be furnished. The forms are available from the Dean of Men and the University Police.

Threats of bodily harm and bomb threats will be reported to Mr. Roger Gray, Security Agent of the New England Telephone Company, (85 Chestnut St., Rm. 116, Springfield (788-9985)). Obscene and annoying calls will be reported to Mr. Philip McKeague, Manager of the Northampton District Business Office of the Telephone Company, through his representative, Miss Terry Higgins (584-9911).

The Telephone Company policy requires two traces to the same number at the times coinciding with the student's information as to when the calls were made. Information obtained will not be released to the complaining parties but rather wil be released to the Dean of Men through the University Police.

Senate President John R. Greenquist

Who's Carrying the Ball?

by M. MCMANAMA

Senate President John Greenquist candidly discussed the Student Senate and its place on this campus both present and future.

He speculated whether the so-called student leaders are simply leading other students or whether they are genuinely representing student opinion. Greenquist feels that these "leaders" should find out what student opinion is—not mold it.

President Greenquist realizes that the Senate's reputation as a "Mickey Mouse" organization makes it difficult to function effectively in the campus community. This false label discourages student interest in the Senate and also attracts chiefly the type of student who wants the prestige of being a senator with a minimum of work.

In order to combat this, the Senate must prove itself by gaining the interest of the people best qualified to do the job. It must organize publication of Senate activities and programs to gain student interest.

Greenquist stated that few students realize what the Senate is doing or what it has done. For example, a Disciplinary Board was established last year to review student suspension cases so that it is not possible for a student to be suspended for nebulous reasons. This is an important concern of the students, yet, how many students are aware of the existence of this board?

Greenquist lamented lack of student communication with the Senate. Last semester there was a big explosion about "Free Press" when Yahoo was attacked. Then came finals and the issue was temporarily forgotten. Yahoo is still being considered for publication, but there has been a lack of student concern. Do they or do they not feel this is censorship? Are they concerned? The Senate does not know how the students feel.

Must the few students carry the ball for the many? Greenquist is convinced that students must have opinions and complaints, but they seldom, if ever, bring these to the Senate. Concerns with residences, academic affairs, and other issues must be voiced if anything is to be done. There is a complaint Board on Academic Affairs, but it is little used. Students complain about courses, professors, the grading system, but not many take these complaints to where they can be acted upon. Are students unaware that this board exists, or do they just think it won't do any good?

Perhaps there is no student opinion. Perhaps the students do want the Senate to carry the ball alone. This seems to be the case. However, Greenquist thinks that if such a condition did exist it is only augmented by articles such as, "Who Cares" and "What are the Doers Doing?" These caustic criticisms of student apathy "shove student participation down their throats." "Rather than offending students, we should simply let them know that the lines of communication are open."

Greenquist foresees future University government divided into smaller units while the Committee system is enlarged. There will be area government for Orchard Hill, Southwest, the Quad, etc., which will take of local problems and thus leave the central governing body open for campus-wide concerns.

The smaller units will be more representative, and will have the power to refer any problem of general importance to the central body. In this way the Senate will be able to speak more knowledgeably on student concerns.

"The Senate should be able to find out what the students want —even if they find out that the students want to be left alone."

Meet Bill Gile

Director of Carnival

The Operetta Guild would like to have you meet the young man pictured here. His name is Bill Gile. You may have seen him wandering around campus wearing a green corduroy cap similar to one worn by John Lennon of the Beatles.

Bill has come from Boston to "Carnival," the latest Guild Production. His experiences (he graduated from Boston University) have run from College Productions to directing Summer Stock. (New Foundland Art Center in Pennsylvania) to Off-Broadway (last September he worked on Guthrie's Revival of "Dinner At Eight" in New York), and he is presently at work on 2 plays by Malcolm Boyd in Boston.

With most of his experience being with musicals (he has directed such shows as "Gypsy," "Once Upon A Mattress," "The Boyfriend," "West Side Story," "My Fair Lady," and "Sound Of Music") Bill has taken an energetic approach to his production here. He is taking infinite pains to make sure that every aspect of the production (dancing, singing, acting, technical work) is well co-ordinated and well done.

The Guild welcomes you to attend their production and see the work of this young man and all the students who have put so much time into an evening of good entertainment.

Have you seen this young man running around campus in a green corduroy cap?

Dr. Robert R. Archer Named Professor of Civil Engineering

Dr. Robert R. Archer has been appointed Professor of Civil Engineering at the University of Massachusetts. Dr. Archer is a native of Nebraska and a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he received the S.B. degree in 1952 and the Ph.D. degree in 1956.

From 1956 to 1959 he remained at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the Department of Mechanical Engineering. He was a member of the Mathematics Department of the University of Massachusetts from 1959 to 1961 where he was also active in the program of the Computer Center.

He was a member of the Engineering Division of Case Institute of Technology from 1961 to 1966. During the last year and a half of this period he was on leave from Case and serving as Visiting Professor at the Indian Institute of Technolgy at Kampur, India under the A.I.D. Program, where he was active in the development of the Civil Engineering Department and the Computer Center.

Dr. Archer is active in Engineering Mechanics, Applied Mathematics and Computation. He is co-author of a book, "Introduction to the Mechanics of Solids," published by McGraw-Hill, and author and coauthor of more than a dozen published papers dealing with the vibrations, stability and stress analysis of structures.

STUDENT TEACHING SPRING SEMESTER 1967

The School of Education needs to know your definite intentions to do student teaching during the Spring Semester. Will any students approved for the elementary and secondary education blocks who have not received a memo and questionnaire from the office of Coordinator, Student Observation and Teaching please see Mr. Robert C. Jones, Room 110, School of Education at your earliest convenience.

Students Work for Smaller Classes To Solve Problems of Multiversity

Editor's note: The following is an open statement to Master Shute of the Southwest Residential College from the Southwest Residential College Student Policy Committee.

A unique Academic and Cultural Committee has been formed at George Washington Upper to promote and institute educational courses of both a credit and non-credit nature within the dormitory. Its function is to ascertain which programs the students of this dormitory express interest in attending, and to engage the administration and faculty in an effort to establish these undergraduate courses in the dormitory.

It is the opinion of this committee that the academic experience attainable at the university level can be of much higher quality than it presently is. The opportunities afforded by the establishment of the Southwest Residential College should be used to improve instruction at the classroom level.

In a better environment, such as is available in a dormitory, a university student can learn more; an imaginative teacher, together with an informal atmosphere, can stimulate the student to activity participate in his coursework.

In a recent survey made by this committee, it was shown that a small class with increased personal contact is preferred; the students sense that there is something lacking in the desk - podium-lecture - response method of instruction.

The connection between the student's mind and that of the instructor can best be established by a constant interaction of student and professor. The mass lecture presents the problem of acquiring knowledge without being abie to ask questions. The class becomes a matter of lecture and regurgitation. The originality and initiative of the students are stifled.

Standing up and speaking in a large class is like talking to yourself; the other students do not know you; they do not care about your time-consuming answers. The teacher neither knows our name nor is involved with your education; he merely sees you as another point on the bell-shaped curve and hopes that you will not skew his distribution by making too intelligent a reply.

It is the overwhelming desire of students in George Washington Upper to attend classes in which they feel they can participate. We respectfully request the establishment of these specific credit courses in the dormitory next semester: HISTORY 100, PHILOSOPHY 105, ECONOMICS 126, MATH 112, and GOVERNMENT 150.

We further desire that the size of these classes and discussion sections not exceed fifteen to twenty students. This committee has already contacted faculty members from the first two of the above departments and have found them willing to teach these classes in accordance with the Faculty Fellow Program.

We have often heard the sanctity of the individual student preached. We would like to take the opportunity given us by the establishment of the Southwest College Complex to put life into this well-worn phrase.

UMass Summer Program to Hold Graduate Center in Madrid

The University of Massachusetts will begin an 8-week Graduate Center for Hispanic Studies in Madrid this summer, it was announced by Dr. I. Moyer Hunsberger, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The aim of the program is to develop the professional abilities of students studying for their M.A. or Ph.D. degrees in Spanish Literature in an intense but informal Hispanic intellectual atmosphere.

The program will run from June 15-Aug. 16 and includes three seminars in Spanish literature, each covering a specialized topic: an author, a major work, or an intellectual movement of a particular period. Two lecture series will add breadth. Each will deal with a general theme, such as 20th Century Spanish history or Spanish art.

The UM program will have classroom and office space at the International Institute for Girls in Spain.

Seminars will meet once a week for two hours; the lecture series three times a week for one hour. There will also be four or five special lectures during the summer, daily gatherings which students may attend to meet Spanish artists, writers and scholars, and a series of conducted tours.

Applicants may come from UM or other recognized institutions, must have at least a B undergraduate average and must have majored in Spanish or have mastered the Spanish language. Some undergraduate Spanish majors in their senior year may be admitted if they are recommended as highly qualified persons who would benefit substantially from such an experience. A limited number of scholarships will be available.

Each student will choose two of the three seminars offered and will be granted six credits on successful completion. The two lecture series may be attended for audit or for credit. One credit for each lecture series will be given only to students planning to complete their Ph.D. requirements.

Deadline for applications is Dec. 14, 1966. The total cost per student of $990 includes round trip air fare and all other expenses. Further information is available from Prof. German Bleiberg, Dept. of Romance languages, Bartlett Hall, Univ. of Mass., Amherst, Mass.

Four Colleges Meet to Discuss Plans For Student Co-ordinating Board

The Four College Student Co-ordinating Board held its bi-weekly meeting in the Suffolk Room of the Student Union Tuesday night. The purpose of this group is to provide leadership in co-ordinating the activities of UM, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Amherst colleges.

The joint running or at least the joint publicizing of lecture series, concerts, mixers, coffee houses or art exhibits are examples of the goals of the board.

Each college is adequately represented by sending a member of its Recreational Council, Lecture Series, Student Government and Newspaper. These four representatives control the three votes allotted each member school.

The elections for officers of the 4CSCB were held at this last meeting. The results were as follows: Chairman, Ralph Ritchie, UM; Vice-Chairman, Ed Fisher, Amherst; and Secretary, Susy Young, Smith. The vote for treasurer was tabled, for as yet the exact duties for this position remain undefined.

In keeping with four college co-operation, it has been agreed to publish the following activities: This Saturday night a Mardi Gras is being held at Amherst. All receipts go to charity, and a donation of $1.50 is asked. The gym will be the scene of the action, where the Fabulous Fugatives from Virginia will belt out with a little "Southern" rock. There will be mermaides from Skidmore, booth, concession stands and a doorprize.

For you guys looking for a really classy place to take your date tonight, go to the opening of the Lily Pad at Mt. Holyoke. It's the latest thing in coffee houses, and the New York cast of the Fantastics will be there. Also Amherst's own Gangreene will provide the music to dance to.

Fast and Complete

WMUA to Cover Election Results

WMUA radio, the voice of the Broadcasting Association of the University of Massachusetts will again bring to the listening audience the fastest and most complete election results possible, Tuesday evening from 7:30 on.

This undertaking by the WMUA News Department brings regional, state and national results scheduled at twenty minutes past and ten minutes before each hour. Neil Giroux, news director, Jeff Baker, Sports director and Norm Ryan, station manager, will be anchormen.

They will call upon numerous sources in compiling for the listener the most in depth, accurate, and advanced coverage available anywhere. Relying upon direct phone communications from statistical and editorial centers as far away as California, WMUA hopes to keep its listeners best informed.

News department members will be stationed in candidate headquarters, including those of Edward Brooke and Endicott "Chub" Peabody. These reporters will add a more personal touch to the thrilling Massachusetts senate race.

Comments news director Neil Giroux, "We've got the finest, most extensive staff ever assembled by this station, and we're planning to bring to our listeners the best in election coverage. We'll continue broadcasting until the election in California is pretty well decided."

So, if you're at all interested in the shape you're country's in, tune in Tuesday, November 8, 1966, and follow the election results over WMUA radio, 91.1 FM.

Who is the Ale Man of the Year?

Will these girls pick you?

These three girls are on an Ale Man-hunt for the next two weeks. Introduce yourself. They are (left to right):

Pat Jaquith

Mary Halbert

Joan Dombkowski

Be sure these girls get a good look at you. You could wind up as the Ale Man of the Year—and win 10 hours of flying lessons, plus an Ale Man sports jacket, plus an Ale Man mug. You take your flying lessons at the airport of your choice—and you should be well on your way to soloing before they're over.

Here's how the Ale Man of the Year is selected: The girls in the green Ale jackets will spend the next two weeks searching the campus for candidates. They'll nominate three. Then everybody on campus will vote. You'll see ballot boxes everywhere. The biggest vote getter will be the Ale Man of the Year.

So look your best and be on the lookout for the girls in the green Ale jackets. Good luck! Hope you win. But if you don't win, cheer up! You're an Ale Man in any gal's book as long as you drink Ballantine Ale.

Tryouts for "J. B."

Archibald MacLeish's "J.B." will be presented on December 16 and 17 in Bartlett auditorium by graduate student Lawrence Wilker as a partial fulfillment of his requirements towards a Master of Fine Arts in Theatre.

"J.B." will be the second play to be directed, at the University, by a graduate student pursuing the Master of Fine Arts degree. Regular University Theatre-goers will readily recall last year's Master's production of the hilarious absurdist comedy, "One Way Pendulum," directed by Ken Bordner.

"J.B.," a modern adaption of the ancient story of "Job," is a verse drama which pursues the perennial problem of man's relationship to God. Open tryouts will be held in Bartlett, room 119, on November 8, 9, and 10 and any student wishing to participate in this powerful drama will be most welcome.

We feel that the Southwest College is an unusually fine place to try to solve some of the problems of the modern multiversity, and we wish to work toward that goal.

It now is the time to start the residential college down the path by which students could best profit.

Have an Urge to Perform? Musical Talent Is Sought

Have you noticed that something is missing in the Colonial Lounge on Sunday afternoons? The Arts and Music Committee is looking for students who wish to perform in front of an audience, students who want to become known on campus, and for those of you who just want to have fun.

Talent in any musical area is appropriate for the music hours. If you want the opportunity to become a star on campus then don't lose any time in contacting Bonnie Ellis at 256-6887.

Operetta Guild to Present "Carnival"

On April 13, 1961, Broadway opened its door to an enthusiastically welcomed hit—a musical with heart-tugs, humor, lovely songs, endearing puppets, and utterly suitable for children and everyone else.

So delighted were the reviewers that before the month was out they selected "Carnival" as the winner of the New York Critic's Circle Award for the best musical of the season.

On Nov. 11, the doors of Bowker Auditorium will open to present "Carnival", this time produced by the University of Massachusetts Operetta Guild.

Starring as Lili, the waif who seeks a life of magic in the carnival, will be Heddy Zirin, a sophomore at Smith College. Robert Emerson, who has appeared in other Guild productions, will portray Paul Berthalet, the puppeteer who falls in love with Lili, but must suffer to see her wooed by Marco the Magnificent (Stephen Schnetzer, '70) the show's magician.

Rounding out the colorful cast is another freshman, Peter Schofield, as Jacquot, the puppeteer's assistant, and Karen Connolly, (remember that rambunctious maid from "No, No, Nanette"?) as The Incomparable Rosalie, assistant to Marco.

"Carnival" will be remembered most for its haunting love theme, 'Love Makes the World Go 'Round'. Rich in entertainment, it should go down as one of the best theatrical productions on this campus.

It's trade-in time for tired old myths.

Like the one about business. Especially big business. That it is beyond the rugged individualist's wildest daydream to enter this holy of holies because he'll lose something that's very sacred — like his independence.

Sure, it can happen. If a guy or gal wants to hide, or just get by, or not accept responsibility, or challenges.

We're not omniscient enough or stupid enough to speak for all business, but at a company like Western Electric, bright ideas are not only welcome, they are encouraged. And no door is shut. Create a little stir, go ahead, upset an old applecart (we replace shibboleths at a terrific pace — we have to as manufacturing and supply unit of the Bell System — in order to provide your Bell telephone company with equipment it needs to serve you.)

There's an excitement in business. True, we're in it to make a profit, but working to find new and better ways to make things that help people communicate is very rewarding and satisfying. Did you ever hear these wry words of Oliver Wendell Holmes? "Never trust a generality — not even this one."

That's how we feel about the generality that claims you'll just become a little cog in a company like Western Electric. You might, of course, but if you consider yourself an individual now, odds are 10 to 1 that you'll keep your individuality. And cherish it. And watch it grow. Even at big, big Western Electric.

You know, that's the only way we'd want you to feel. If you feel like coming in with us.

Precisionettes Plan Shows for Remainder of Season

The Saturday of Homecoming at Alumni Field, the University of Massachusetts Precisionettes were welcomed enthusiastically by a near-capacity Homecoming crowd.

Although Saturday was considered their official debut, the team made a fine contribution to the Homecoming Parade Friday evening.

Last weekend, the girls traveled to the University of Vermont where they presented the entire half-time show.

In addition to this performance, the Precisionettes will be appearing at up-coming home games for the remainder of the season.

Conscientious Objectors

Draft Counseling Conducted

The most extensive counselling service for conscientious objectors in New England—and probably the most extensive draft counselling service in the nation—is being conducted just off Harvard Square in Cambridge.

The Draft Information Service, a major attempt to advise draft-age men who oppose war or feel they qualify for deferment under the present law and are having trouble receiving it, is a project of the American Friends Service Committee's New England regional office, 44A Brattle Street.

"Our counselling program is probably the largest in the nation," said Steve Hedger, an AFSC staff member. "If there's a larger one, it's in New York, and as far as I know, our program is larger than any in New York."

Hedger said that the aim of the program is educational, not political: to give men the facts about the draft, conscientious objection, and non-cooperation. But the facts are not simple. "Between the position of the men who willingly accept 1-A classification and the position of men who burn their draft cards," Hedger said, "there is an ocean of doubt and misunderstanding."

During the summer, an average of 100 young men contacted the AFSC office for draft counselling each month. Since the start of the year, the number is increasing.

To meet the challenge, Hedger and AFSC staff member Andy Rudin have been conducting training sessions to enable concerned clergy, lawyers and other members of the professional community help them with the counselling.

Each of the 18 draft classifications is only a label for a whole set of rules, rights, privileges, obligations, and possibilities. Any man who fits the requirements of a draft category is entitled to the rights which the classification carries with it, and is subject to its obligations.

It is making clear the full implications of the draft choice which the AFSC aims at with its counselling service, Hedger said.

"Because we have a long history of involvement in draft issues, and have personal experience with the choices men have to make, we can give competent counsel in these matters," he added.

A recent Supreme Court decision in the case of U.S. versus Seeger is of particular concern for young men who sincerely feel they cannot accept a 1-A classification and all that it implies. This decision — which clarified the draft law on the requirement of belief in a Supreme Being for those who wish to be classified as conscientious objectors—made eligible many whose only previous choice was between the army and jail.

Draft boards now recognize that "any sincere belief, which in (one's) life fills the same place as a belief in God fills in the life of an orthodox believer," may qualify as a conscientious objector.

The American Friends Service Committee was organized in 1917 by American Quakers and has sought to give conscientious objectors to war, and others, a constructive alternative to military service since World War I.

Persons interested in the program should contact the Draft Information Service, American Friends Service Committee, 44A Brattle St., Cambridge; or phone 864-3150.

Escape!

Get out from under this weekend. Fly someplace—for half fare on Eastern.

Visit a friend in another town. See an "away" game. Change the scene. Leave late, come back late, enjoy a long weekend—without cutting classes.

Use your Eastern Youth ID Card, or another airline's version. If you don't have one—and you're under 22—you really ought to.

To get your Youth Fare Card, send a $3 check or money order, proof of age (copy of driver's license, birth certificate or passport) to Eastern Airlines, Department 350, 10 Rockefeller Plaza, N.Y., N.Y. 10020

With your Youth ID Card, you can get an Eastern ticket for half fare. No advance reservations are permitted. But if there's a seat free at departure time, after passengers holding reservations and military personnel have been seated, you can fly to any Eastern city in the United States. And look down on all the drivers.

INTRAMURALS

SPE, Hampshire, Adams Win Grid League Playoffs

by ROGER KIPP, Sports Staff

SPE nicked LCA, 29-27, Wednesday for the IFC title, Sig Ep, who took a back seat to Kappa Sig and LCA in publicity, simply went undefeated in their league and won the big one.

Bob Miller, SPE's sensational QB, played an excellent game, getting help from All-Stars like Bob Howe and Dick Scoglund, to get by a spirited LCA outfit. Miller uncorked two TD passes and sneaked over for another on a run to spearhead the SPE offense.

Well-balanced Squad

SPE is a big team and a well-balanced one, and probably profited from Monday's action when Kappa Sig and Lambda Chi knocked each others' brains out in a "B" loop playoff. Even then, SPE had no easy time of it. Brilliant Jim Donahue of LCA hit on 19 of 26 passes for four TD's, three of them to versatile Jeff Larson.

Kappa Sig grabbed third spot in the IFC division, downing TEP, 6-0, on an Ed Godek-to-Paul Scully pass and a tight defense. The victory ended a three-game losing streak and ended the season on a happy note.

Unbelievable as it sounds, the defending campus champion Courtesy Taxi team forfeited away the Independent championship to the Hampshire Hardnoses. Hampshire, made up of mainly graduate students, is ineligible to go for the campus crown.

For the campus championship, SPE will play the Smashers on Tuesday night at 7:30.

Vital Position

The most essential ingredient of a good football team is a good quarterback. The proof is that every good team had one: Miller of SPE, Godek of KS, Donahue of LCA, Pedro of the Hi-Los, Brown of the Flaming A's, etc. So it is with the Adams Smashers, whose quarterback, Al Craig, led them to the Dorm title, which ended for them Wednesday night in a 19-6 victory over the Chadbourne Maroons. Craig used not only his good arm, but his poise and leadership to get the Smashers by the Flaming A's and the Hi-Los, in addition to the Maroons.

Of course, a good quarterback is only as good as his blocking and backs Paul Whalen and Steve Johnson blocked so well that the onrushing opposition seldom touched Craig.

Ironically, Wednesday's biggest hero for the Smashers was none of the three mentioned, but a 6-1, 200-pound center by the name of Bob Hansen. Hansen, whose claim to fame lies in baseball, caught Craig's first two TD passes, the second on a diving catch that onlookers considered one of the greatest ever seen in IM competition. Maroon signalcaller Alyward came back to throw a TD pass to Pete Bakun in the second half, but Craig found talented Bruce Crampton with an equalizer TD and put the game away.

The fabulous Hi-Los tromped over the Colts, 58-7, in the dorm consolation game, giving them third place in the dorm standings. Joe Pedro was only slightly great, throwing eight TD passes, six of them to Dave Armstrong. Despite a heartbreaking loss to the Smashers, the Hi-Los had a splendid season and couldn't have ended in a better way.

The third annual Dormitory-Fraternity All-Star Game will be played Wednesday, November 9, 1966 at 7:00 p.m. Practice will be held on Monday and Tuesday. The squads, each composed of 24 men, have already been selected.

Frosh Gridders Oppose UConn Today at Stadium

Coach Burley Crowe's frosh gridders tangle with the Little Huskies of UConn today at 2 at Alumni Stadium.

The clash will be the fourth of the season for both squads. The Redmen boast a 2-1 record while the Huskies have dropped their last two contests after opening with a 16-8 victory over Boston U.

Following the lead of their varsity counterparts, the Little Redmen specialize in second half heroics. Thus far, UMass' entire output, 34 points, has been scored in the last two stanzas.

Last week's game against URI proved to be no exception as quarterback Tim Adams rifled two scoring bombs to halfback Gerry Grasso, one with less than three minutes to go, to pace the Frosh to a 14-13 win.

Other games were a 12-7 win over Boston University and a 13-8 loss to West Point.

FOOTBALL . . .

to throw to. Captain Pete Kimener is the split end, with 20 receptions for 222 yards, many of them in clutch situations. John Vrionis, the tight end, will return to the lineup after being sidelined last week. He is an excellent blocker and has good hands.

The Holy Cross defense can be tough, as B.U. will agree. The Terriers were heeld on the Crusaders' three-inch line as time ran out three weeks ago, and the Cross preserved a 17-14 win.

Glenn Grieco is classified by many as the best middle guard in the east. The 225-pound junior is considered a doubtful starters, but Fusia is not counting on his absence.

Trouble at Tackle

Dick Krzyzek is described by the UMass coach as one of the best defensive ends in New England. At the other end, Roger Pelletier is injured and Mike Quinn is his replacement. There is a possible lack of depth at the tackles.

A pair of sophomore linebackers, Dan Raymondi and Paul Scopetski, cover a lot of ground and have played well this year.

The defensive backfield, led by cornerback Bob Kurcz and safety Tom Kelly, has intercepted 10 passes as compared with the U-Mass secondary's 17 interceptions. Roving linebacker Dick Giardi is another defensive standout.

Connor Still Out

Fusia calls the game a "battle of the wounded." Offensive tackle Bill Connor is still recuperating and although he is working out again, his injury will definitely keep him out tomorrow. Fusia is pleased with the performance of the reserves who have been thrust into starting positions, but feels that they must perform at their best if UMass is to beat Holy Cross.

The Crusaders, now in their second year under Coach Mel Massucco, hold a 9-6-1 edge over UMass in the series.

Chess Team Sweeps Match

In its first match of the year the UMass chess team swept to a 6-0 victory over Merrimac College Sunday.

Winning for the Redmen were Dave Palmer, Bill Lyons, Ron Burris, George Kosinski, Rick Burns, and Fred Sayward.

Last season UMass compiled a match record of 6-1 while rolling up a total game score of 26½ as compared to 4½ for the opponents.

Currently, matches are being arranged with Harvard and M.I.T.

Duel of Quarterbacks Looms As Redmen Visit Holy Cross

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

Another outstanding effort is a "must" for the Redmen when they meet Holy Cross at Fitton Field in Worcester tomorrow at 1:30. Coach Vic Fusia believes that the Crusader are "the best club we've had to face to date."

Led by standout quarterback Jack Lentz, Holy Cross has a 2-3-1 record against such teams as Army, Dartmouth, Colgate and Syracuse. One of the victories was over Dartmouth, the only team to beat UMass.

Last week the Crusaders were bombed by Buffalo, 35-3, but Fusia cautions UMass fans to disregard that score. He called it merely a letdown after a strong performance against Syracuse the week before.

They also have something of a score to settle with UMass, since the Redmen have beaten them, 25-6 and 27-0 in the past two years.

Holy Cross, like Massachusetts, has been hit hard by injuries in the past few weeks. However, the injured players have all been classified as "doubtful" and all of them could start tomorrow. The Redmen will field the same starting lineup that faced Vermont last week.

Battle of Quarterbacks

Both offenses revolve around quarterbacks, and a fine duel could develop between UMass' Greg Landry and Holy Cross' Jack Lentz. Both players are considered excellent double threats.

Lentz, a senior, set a Crusader record in his sophomore year for rushing in one season but was forced to sit out last season due to an injury. He has regained his form this year, however, running for 20 yards and passing for 432. UMass will have to stop his dangerous rollout pass-run patterns.

The Crusaders have additional backfield strength in the off-tackle blasts of 5'6" fullback Ralph Lilore, who averages 4.2 yards a carry, and halfbacks Bob Lawson and Tony D'Agata. The latter is currently injured, and if he does not start tomorrow his place will be filled capably by Tim Hawkes.

Stadium 'Too Small': Sale Of B. C. Tickets Halted

The ticket committee of the University Athletic Council has announced that because of the high interest in the Boston College game at the Stadium on Saturday, Nov. 19, the sale of tickets will be suspended until 6:00 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 17.

Any tickets available at that time will be sold on a first-come-first-serve basis with a purchase limit of one per student.

For juniors and seniors, the exchange of coupons for tickets will begin on Monday. Freshmen, sophomores and Stockbridge students will begin exchanging a week later.

"The fact of the matter is," explained Business Manager Robert O'Connell, "the Stadium is just too small."

The reasoning of the Council in determining this policy is that, of the 21,000 seats, about 11,000 will be taken by UM students (including members of the band), about 5,800 by B.C. (which originally asked for 10,000), and 1,900 by season ticket holders.

All of the remaining 2,300 tickets have either been sold or reserved.

At the New Hampshire game next week, however, admission will be granted on a strictly coupon basis.

Booters Visit Coast Guard

Out of the running for the Yankee Conference soccer championship, UMass' soccer forces will take the field tomorrow at Coast Guard in an attempt to better their 4 - 3 - 1 record.

A year ago the Redmen toppled the Guardsmen, 2-0, en route to a 7-3 overall slate and a portion of the Conference title. The all time CG-UMass rivalry shows the Redmen holding a 6 - 4 - 2 edge.

Students find fire hose goes no further, in a useless attempt to reach end rooms.

Tower Fire Equipment Discovered Inadequate

by RICHARD KLINE, Day Editor

Emergency fire hoses and fire extinguishers in the Southwest towers are now locked up with only two keys for each six floors the Collegian has learned. The doors, besides being locked, have been painted shut are extremely difficult to open.

There is one fire extinguisher and fire hose for each floor, both locked behind the metal door with a small plate glass window in the middle. One head of residence reported that he and Chief Fire and Security Officer Getzel couldn't get the door open in a check on the system four weeks ago.

Since that time, keys to the equipment have been provided to the heads of residence and their assistants in each of the towers, but the doors remain locked. The same head of residence reported that the doors, once unlocked, were extremely difficult to open due to the paint.

It was also learned that the hoses could not reach to the three rooms farthest from the hose water main due to a miscalculation in figuring. The fire extinguisher, in the same cabinet as the hose, cannot be taken out unless the door is open since the window is not large enough for the thirty pound cylinder.

The system when set up properly according to sources, is a highly effective one and adequate for the protection of tower residents.

A work order to remedy the situation has been made, it has been reported.

Editorial Comment

"Burn, Baby, Burn"

by ELLIE SKINNER, Editorial Staff

Stokely Carmichael's cry "Burn, Baby, Burn" has suddenly taken on a new meaning from Southwest Towers residents. In its new context, the phrase refers to the inaccessible and inefficient fire fighting equipment housed in the Towers.

The fire extinguishers and hoses are tightly enclosed in a locked metal cabinet on each of the floors. Unless the door to this cabinet is opened, it is almost impossible to remove the extinguisher or turn on the water for the hose. Even with a key, these cabinets which have been painted over, remain stubbornly closed.

As a final irony, the hoses fail to reach the three rooms farthest from the fire box, necessitating the occupants of these rooms to rely solely on fire extinguishers in an emergency. Improvements for the fire fighting equipment have been incorporated into a work order which has yet to be acted upon.

We strongly urge that steps be taken immediately to remedy this situation. Safety is a must when the lives of thousands are involved.

Scholarship Controversy In College of Agriculture

by DAVE FLOBEEN, Staff Reporter

Recently, there has been a mild controversy over a rather sizeable scholarship granted to students in the College of Agriculture. For the past 17 years, a grant has been made available to deserving students with literaly no strings attached.

There were no stipulations as to where the student resided, or his personal habits. The trustees of her estate, which amounts to several million, had sole control of the awards, which amounts to about $20,000 a year.

This year everything went as normal, but in the middle of August, the Financial Aid office received a notice that these grants would not be available. This came as a shock, for the recipients had already made their financial plans for the year. The university very graciously decided that these students could not be deprived of their grants with so late notice, so the university with difficulty found the funds elsewhere.

Apparently the reason for this mixup was due to two things. Firstly, most of the estate's records were lost in the gas fire last January in Boston's Combat Zone. Then the head trustee died late last spring, causing further commotion. The new trustee evidently caused a shift in the policy of the estate.

The new trustee must have decided that (interpreted the will that) these grants were to be in the form of loans rather than outright scholarships, as the previous trustees had. What action the University will take, if any, is unknown at this time.

UNC Instructor Removed; Assignment Termed 'Embarrassing'

If University of North Carolina graduate instructors have their way, English teacher Michael Paull, removed from teaching duties for lacking "effective communication" with his students, will be given back his class.

Paull was relieved of his freshman English class last week by University Chancellor Carlyle Sitterson after the graduate instructor's assignment of a theme on seduction embarrassed some students and drew unfavorable publicity over a local TV station, WRAL-TV.

The assignment, given in conjunction with class reading in English of poet Andrew Marvell's To a Coy Mistress, was completely misinterpreted by students, according to Paull; and to prove the point, he read several student papers aloud in class. One paper contained words "inserted only for stock value," the instructor said, and the protests of offended students led Sitterson to the conclusion that "the normal student-teacher relationship" had been disturbed.

Following Paull's removel, part - time English instructors threatened to boycott their classes unless their colleague was immediately reinstated. Charging that the Chancellor, appointed several weeks ago, had given in to local community pressures, the instructors said they would meet their classes at scheduled times but would not teach.

Their boycott did not materialize, however, because a five-man English department committee was appointed to re-examine the case. The committee, with two instructors as members, was asked to give recommendations to the full faculty "as soon as possible."

The appointment of the committee was hailed by the graduate instructors as a "moral victory." The English department

Retiring Senator Leverett Saltonstall Addresses 300 In S. U. Ballroom

by FRED ENGLANDER
Staff Reporter

The honorable Senator Leverett Saltonstall visited the University of Massachusetts Student Union Friday afternoon for a 3:30 speaking engagement and spoke for thirty minutes before a moderate-sized crowd of 300. The Senior Senator's appearance was sponsored by the Political Science Association of the University.

Saltonstall, who is serving out the last month of his 22 years in Washington, spoke mainly on the past session of the 89th Congress.

He began with several amusing anecdotes of his experiences in Washington and then commented on our effort in Viet Nam. He stated his belief that Presidnt Johnson is doing all that he can to bring an end to the conflict, and mentioned the grave concern that he and colleagues have on the issue.

Senator Saltonstall then moved on to many of the social welfare measures that the federal government has been undertaking.

Although he made clear his support for the aims of the legislation, he was critical of the extensive role that the national government has assumed. He expressed hope that the goals of this legislation can be obtained without greater federal intervention in the individual communities and in the private lives of its citizens.

After his address, Mr. Saltonstall fielded questions from his audience in the ballroom. Questions put to him concerned Viet Nam, his impressions as the ranking minority member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, the CIA, the Sales Tax, and the current political situation.

Although Mr. Saltonstall emphasized that his speech was non-partisan, when pressed on the issue, he did express personal preference for Republicans Brooke, Volpe, and Richardson.

After the question and answer period, he signed autographs and met with a receptive crowd of supporters.

"Carnival"

The chorus members of the Operetta Guild Production "Carnival" run through a scene for the performances November 11, 12, 17, 18, and 19 in Bowker Auditorium.

The male lead in the Operetta Guild's latest production, "Carnival" to be presented in Bowker Auditorium on November 11, 12, 17, 18, and 19.

Bob, a senior, has appeared on the stage in several roles during his time here at the University. For the Operetta Guild he appeared in the Music Man a few years ago. This past summer he was seen in the University Theatre's production of "Irma La Douce." Last year, at Smith, he appeared with Heddy Zirin (our leading lady) in "Babes in Arms". In "Carnival" he portrays Paul Berthalet, the lame puppeteer who, through his lovable puppets (horrible Henry, Marguerite, Renardo, and Carrot Top) tries to tell Lili, the lonely young girl who tries to find the true magic of the carnival, of his love for her. He is thwarted, at least temporarily, by the wiley Marco (as in magnificent) who is played by Steven Schnetzer, a freshman making his first appearance at UMass.

Heddy Zirin, Smith College's contribution to the Operetta Guild, is our Lili. Though only a sophomore she has gained a name for herself in the musical theatre in the Four College area. Her role of Susie, in "Babes in Arms," while still a freshman at Smith, has established her reputation as an accomplished actress and performer.

has "made in clear that they would reinstate Paull if they could," one instructor said. Paull added that he has full confidence that "the English department will arrice at a fair and honest decision."

But the committee's report must go to Chancellor Sitterson for final approval, even if the full faculty approves the reassignment of Paull to his class. While prospects look good for his return to class, one instructor complained that the Chancellor "had not made it clear to the department that it has full power in the case; otherwise the department would have reinstated Paull during the investigation."

McCormack Draws Rebuttals On UMass Medical School Statement

Edward J. McCormack drew rebuttals from University of Massachusetts officials Friday with a statement slamming the Volpe administration for delaying the new UM med school in Worcester.

McCormack, Democratic candidate for governor, charged that construction of the med school would be delayed a year because of the administration's failure to apply for federal funds before November 1.

He said in his statement: "The UMass trustees, at their June 30 meeting, made it clear that in order for the med school to open in the fall of 1970, preliminary plans and an application for federal funds should be submitted to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare before Nov. 1, 1966. This deadline was not met."

HEW Sec'ty. John W. Gardner, contacted this week, said no application has been received, McCormack said.

"Dean Lamar Soutter acknowledges that if funds for the med school are not included in the fiscal 1968 budget, the opening of the school will be delayed one year," the candidate said.

Dean Soutter, however, told The Union Friday night that he made the decision to delay filing for federal funds.

He said he is holding up the application on advice from HEW officials in Washington, who said a better application could be filed by Mar. 1 if he spends more time working with the federal agency between now and then.

"Holding up the application for federal funds to the March 1 date definitely will not delay construction of the med school," the dean said.

He added that this approach might result in "obtaining more money, more quickly."

Attacking the Volpe administration, McCormack's statement said: "It is apparent that the controversy and conflicts over the selection of the med school architects created by the Volpe administration is the cause of this delay, and the school's scheduled opening in 1970 is now in jeopardy."

UMass trustee Fred C. Emerson disagreed.

"I don't see any delay," Emerson said. "I think they're moving along very well."

He said the architectual firms chosen for the project have been compiling data on the federal fund application since August, and have meshed efforts smoothly since the work began.

"It takes a year to get all the stuff together," Emerson said, pointing to the complexities involved in planning a facility for medical study. He said a study of data "that may be three inches thick" is required for the application.

Emerson said he attended the June 30 trustees' meeting, and understood the Nov. 1 deadline cited by McCormack was flexible.

"That was phrased as a target date, as I understood it," he said, adding that he feels the application delay won't bar the med school from either state or federal budgets for 1968.

Emerson said he expects the school to open on time in 1970. UM trustees have begun approving land acquisitions in Worcester, he said, and Dean Soutter has made several trips to Washington in recent weeks for conferences with HEW officials.

Drive for Needy Under Way

Time: 7:30 p.m. Setting: a dormitory room.

E.W., typical UMass student, is settling down to study. At his desk, he reaches for his Math 143 book, some notepaper, a pencil or two, and starts working.

The first two problems were easy, but that third one . . . he opens the squeaky desk drawer, pushes aside some perfumed letters, and grabs his well-used eraser. Since his prof likes diagrams, E. W. searches for his clear plastic ruler and finds it hidden beneath a pile of physics notes.

About 8:00, there is a knock and his friend walks in wanting a signature for nomination as dorm Senator. E. W. puts down his chewed-up pencil and promptly pulls a pen out of his pocket. . .Sound familiar? Sure it does; we do it every night. But, there are students in Kentucky and Virginia who have no pencils or rulers of their own. All their work must be done in school, or they are forced to share one ruler with four other children.

To help out Vista in these areas, Gamma Sigma Sigma is holding a Pencil Drive November 6-10. Boxes will be set up in the dorms for pens, pencils, rulers and erasers.

Wouldn't you want to help some little boy or girl get his or her homework done?

UMASS-BOSTON

Overcrowding Major Problem

by BOB GORMAN and
UMass-Boston Correspondent TOM FLYNN

Editor's Note: This is the first of a weekly column written with the help of the UMass-Boston correspondent. Each week all new developments at UMass-Boston will be reported.

UMass-Boston is having growing pains. The biggest problem is a lack of facilities. All classes are held in the lower eight floors, since the upper five floors are offices for faculty and administration.

The classes are not very crowded and are usually limited to thirty students per class.

However, the available classrooms and study rooms are a problem. Students study in corridors, parked cars and every conceivable space.

The library has books but no place to put them. Most students do not even bother with the library since it is so inadequate.

Even getting to class is a problem. Since there are only four elevators, they are in constant use. The stairway is sometimes so crowded that students cannot get to class.

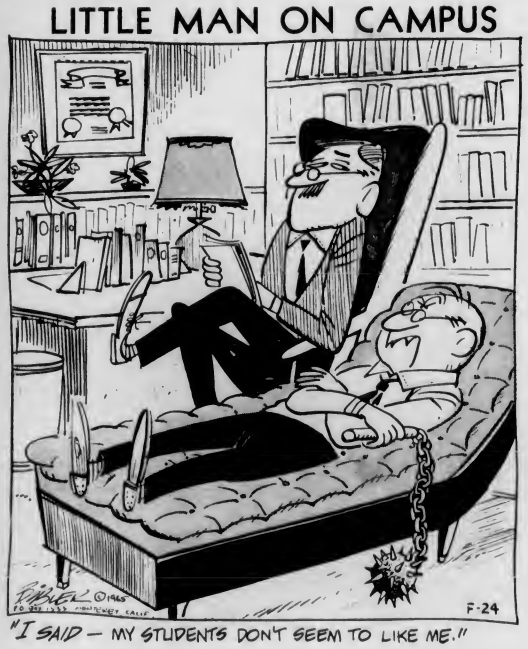
When there is a general assembly, the ballroom of the Statler-Hilton has to be used, since there is no auditorium large enough to accomodate the entire student body.

Since there is no gym in the building, students have to travel to Hyde Park to play sports.

Another side effect of the building shortage is the student-administration communications. Presently the administration is so busy trying to secure new space, students seldom reveive any directives from the administration.

The morale of the faculty is very high, and for that reason the students are not complaining. Also, the quality of teaching is very good. The school is trying to grow despite these problems and several extra-curricular activities have been formed. There is a Math Club, a French Club, a hockey team, an intramural basketball team, a literary magazine and a broadside "UMass-Boston."

Faculty Recital Wednesday



Two University of Masachusetts music department members will present a recital for violin and piano Wednesday, Nov. 9, at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

Ronald Steele, violin, and Howard Lebow, piano, wil perform the Sonata in F by Handel; the Sonata No. 24 in C, K. 296, by Mozart; "Hexapoda: Five Studies in Jitteroptera" by Robert Russell Bennett; and the Sonata No. 3 in D minor, Opus 108, by Brahms.

Mr. Steele is conductor of the University Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Lebow chairman of the UMass piano faculty. Both are assistant professors of music.

The program, second in this season's faculty recital series, is open to the public without charge.

The Senate:

What the Doers Are Doing

This is where the action is. Not action meaning leaping and screaming, but action meaning progress (i.e.—work) Not action because this is the Senate Office because this picture could have been taken in any number of places. This is where the action is because she is there. Tomorrow the action might be in her room, or in the R.S.O. office or almost anywheer. In fact, theres action going on right now all over campus, because right now, at numerous locations on this campus, there are doers-doing. Only once in a great while will you hear about them, because they are working quietly on research, statistics, and policy problems that continue to confront the Student Population of this University in ever increasing intensity.

Funny thing about doers, there are no two alike. Some are Student Senators, some are Non-Senators, some are Faculty, and some are Administration. But each has a vital and serious interest in improving the campus life for the masses who don't have the time or interest to follow their example. Want a few examples?

Dave Briggs, a student who lost a recent Student Senate election is now working on the Senate Budgets Committee. He is not crying over split milk, he doesn't have time.

Dr. William Havard, head of the Government Dept., who in the space of one week has given up 4 hours of his valuable time to participate in two Student Senate coffee hours.

Tim Cunningham, Vice President of the Student Senate, who seems to live in the senate office and is always ready to tackle a new idea and work on old ones.

Finally, pictured at left, Dale Coulouris, presently chairman of the Senate Public Relations Committee, and a Non-Senator to boot.

All these, and many more. All working (yes-WORKING) to improve your Student Government and Campus life. The biggest thing they have in common is this. No one really knows that they are doers. Why- Because this isn't the sort of job in which one gets headlines and publicity, but don't let this stop them.

THATS why this is where the ACTION is. One more thing. One thing they are not doing is running around screaming APATHY. They don't have time. If YOU have the time to leap and scream, why not start using it for a better purpose. Put yourself in this picture.

Public Administration Fellowships Offered

Students interested in a career in public administration in the national, state or local government are offered an opportunity to apply for a fellowship to study at three different universities.

Candidates must be American citizens who have completed or who will complete a bachelor's degree with any recognized major by June of 1967. Each fellowship has a total value of $3,500. The stipend is $2,500 and the remainder of the grant consists of fees and tuition at the three cooperating universities.

Beginning this June, fellows will serve a three-months' internship with a government agency in Alabama, Kentucky, or Tennessee such as the TVA, the Marshall Space Flight Center, or a department in one of the state governments. During the 1967-68 academic year, they will take graduate courses in public administration at the universities of Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

Completion of the twelve-months' training period entitles fellows to a certificate in public administration. They can be awarded a master's degree at one of the three universities attended upon completing a thesis and passing appropriate examinations.

For information and applications, students should write to Coleman B. Ransone, educational Training Program in Public Administration, Drawer I, University, Alabama. The deadline for submitting applications is March 1, 1967.

Detective-Novelist to Speak

On Tuesday, November 8 at 8:00 p.m. in SU, Roy Stratton, author-journalist, Naval Intelligence officer, guerilla-pirate paymaster, and traveler extraordinary, will present an exciting lecture on the "Crime Novel—How to Write One."

Mr. Stratton was trained in the art of criminal detection at the Harvard School of Legal Medicine and indoctrinated in police procedures at the Massachusetts State Police Academy.

He was economic inteligence officer for the Fleet Admiral Chester Nimitz.

Roy Stratton's books are always thrillers that weave factual scientific material into mystery. You won't want to miss this informative and amusing lecture.

PEABODY
For Senator

We, the Editorial Board of the Collegian, endorse Endicott Peabody for Senator of the United States. We believe that he is the only candidate who possesses a unique combination of personal character and political accomplishment.

As a political leader he has demonstrated the independence, honesty and practical idealism that have been the tradition of great men from Massachusetts.

As an elected official, Endicott Peabody has achieved an unequalled record in fulfilling the mandate of liberal activism. While Governor he reached milestones in Constitutional Reform, and in the improvement of the quality of government e.g. limitation of the power of the Governor's Council; reorganization of the Departments of Public Works and Commerce; financing of the Crime Commission.

Governor Peabody is responsible for the creation of the Commonwealth Service Corps, and the Consumer's Council, which protects the purchaser against unfair advertising and merchandising.

In education, Peabody secured a 400% increase in scholarship aid; a 44% increase in funds for higher educational facilities; the establishment of the Boston branch of the Univ. of Mass.; an increase in the minimum salary of public school teachers; and the effectuation of the State and Community College programs.

Between 1963-1965, Governor Peabody scored major gains in Civil Rights, and in the fields of Mental Health and Highway Safety; e.g., the seat belt law; learner's permit regulation.

Endicott Peabody's administration has received praise from a variety of sources across the nation. From the Blatnick Commission to The New York Times, he has been recognized as a leader in the progress of good government. It is no wonder that he has been endorsed by countless professors of law, sociology, government and economics—from Harvard and M.I.T. to UMass and Amherst.

We support and urge the election of Endicott Peabody as Senator. Our conviction is strong that he will continue his tradition of personal integrity and effectiveness in government.

Sales Tax?
A Rebuttal

by DON ALIFERIS,

In the initial editorial urging the repeal of the sales tax it was stated that arguments used to support the sale tax are "deceptions" and concepts based on "the-bigger-the-lie-the more-it-is-believed."

Here are a few examples:

Deception #1: "The sales tax is not just a Republican idea. It is a bipartisan effort . . ."

It is true that the sales tax is not "purely" Republican; It has had the support of some pseudo-Democrats. The sales tax is, however, supported overwhelmingly by higher-income and property-owning groups; and not by lower-income groups which the Democrats generally represent.

Big-lie #1 and #2: "There is no question as to the need for new revenue nor as to the amount of that needed. Senate President Maurice Donahue the most vigorous opponent of the sales tax agrees with sales tax supporters on this point."

There is an enormous question as to the need or the amount of need for new revenue. Up to the moment of sales tax passage, there were various estimates which ranged from "no need" to 135 million dollars a year to 150 million to 187 million to over 200 million a year. Senator Donahue did not agree with the figures suggested by Governor Volpe and the sales tax supporters.

Big-lie #3: "The sales tax is not regressive."

There are virtually no economists or sales tax politicos that would deny the law of regression inherent in a sales tax—even one that exempted food, clothing and medicine. The poor will pay relatively more; the poor will feel it more. And that is why lower-income groups have always opposed the sales tax.

Deception #2: The sales tax "has been endorsed by . . . several labor leaders."

It is true that the sales tax has the support of several labor leaders—but these are only a very small minority. They are renegades; and moreover they represent higher-income earning workers.

On the other hand, the strongest opposition to the sales tax has come from organized labor. In fact it was the state AFL-CIO which had the sales tax referendum put on the ballot.

Honors: One of "Ten Outstanding Young Men of Greater Boston, Junior Chamber of Commerce Award, 1952; Distinguished Service Award, AM - VETS; National Judge Advocate, 1955-57, and Massachusetts Department Commander, AM-VETS 1954-55; Fellow, American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Fellow, American Bar Assn. for excellence in law, 1963.

ENDICOTT PEABODY — Democrat
Age: 46
Address: 19 Larch Rd., Cambridge.
Education: Groton School; Harvard College, A.B., 1942, Harvard Law School, L.L.B., 1948.

Occupation: Attorney; counsel, Roche & Leen; founding partner, Peabody, Koufman, Brewer.

Military: Lieutenant, Submarine Service, World War II, receiving the Silver Star.

Public Office: 1955 - 57, Governor's Councilor from 3rd District; 1963 - 65, governor of the Commonwealth of Mass.

Public Service: Federal—assistant regional counsel, Office of Price Stabilization; regional counsel and assistant to the Small Defense Plant Administration, Boston Regional Office, State — state chairman, Massachusetts Mental Health Campaign, 1957; state chairman, Heart Fund, 1960; presently member of board of directors of World Affairs Council.

Honors: 1954—Selected as one of the seven outstanding young men of Boston.

Questions to U. S. Senate Candidates:

1. Please indicate the aspects of U. S. foreign policy with which you are most in agreement; those of which you are most critical.

Peabody:

I am proud of our policies which have fed the hungry and protected the weak. By honoring our commitments in Viet Nam, supporting free elections there and standing there and standing ready to negotiate an end to fighting, we continue this tradition. I oppose foreign projects which do not advance peace, political stability and economic well-being.

Brooke:

I agree with our commitment to defend South Viet Nam against Communist aggression, and to assist the Vietnamese people develop free political, social, and economic institutions. I am concerned about the continued military escalation and feel that we must create a climate for negotiations leading to a political settlement of hostilities.

2. What do you envision as the role of the Federal government in meeting problems of urban areas?

Peabody:

The creative genius of the Federal government must be applied to help the people of the city solve the human urban problem—education, poverty, mass transportation—and not merely to supply skyscrapers. Federal assistance shouldn't however, retard state initiative and administration. Consequently, direct noncategorical grants should be increasingly used.

Brooke:

The Federal government should: a. establish a coherent national policy for urban development to guide cooperative and full use of both public and private resources in the solution of metropolitan area problems affecting all urban dwellers; b. promote new forms of revenue sharing to meet the unique demands of each urban area.

3. Do you support Federal programs which would require regional arrangements for water pollution and water planning projects? If so, what percentage should the Federal government contribute toward such projects?

Peabody:

I support such intergovernmental programs. While governor I called an interstate conference to abate pollution in the Merrimac River. This conference generated a new spirit of interstate and regional copration in this area. Federal funds must be made available on a flexible but increasing scale so that the present 50 per cent participation can be adjusted upward as has been done in highwa yand housing grants. Private industry and local state participation is needed for this joint endeavor. The ultimate goalwclean water, clean air and greater industrial and recreational opportunities.

Brooke:

I strongly endorse the water pollution control bill approved this July by the U. S. Senate. The bill provides a 30 per cent Federal grant plus a bonus 10 per cent grant for projects conforming to a comprehensive metropolitan area plan. Since rivers frequently flow through several states, regional cooperation is essential. Under the bill, planning is the responsibility of the states and cities involved. I also support

Statements of Principle

The Democratic Party of Massachusetts has long reffected a sense of responsibility, a concern for the physical, moral and economic well-being of all citizens and a belief in the participation of all citizens in their own government.

The Republican Party believes that a successful democracy is based upon the fullest participation of the citizens in their government . . . (and) recognizes the responsibility of government to assist people in the realization and development of their highest potential as contributing members of our society and to give every man a truly equal opportunity to pursue his individual dream.

Election Battle Looms Tomorrow

The Gubernatorial Race . . .

JOHN A. VOLPE - Republican
Age: 57
Address: 10 Everett Ave., Winchester.
Education: Malden High School; Wentworth Institute.
Present Occupation: Governor.

EDWARD J. McCORMACK - Democrat
Age: 42
Address: 1110 Morton St., Boston.
Education: U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis; Boston University Law School Present Occupation: Attorney.

Questions to candidates for Governor:

Of the following issues which will receive top priority in your program?

1. Revitalizing our Civil Service;

2. Public education, including the state's responsibility for higher education;

3. Taxes.

Please explain your choice. Will you also indicate your position on the sales tax and what program you will offer to produce the needed revenue should the sales tax be repealed by referendum.

McCormack:

My top priority is a three-fold program of leadership, efficiency and honesty in government.

I am for Civil Service reform in the field of recruitment, compensation, establishment of a statewide rating system and of educational qualifications for professionals.

The state has not yet met its responsibility in providing an opportunity for public higher education for all eligibles and for providing proper vocational and post-secondary level training.

Whether the sales tax is repealed or not, we need to take a fresh look at our tax structure to meet our fiscal needs.

Volpe:

Revitalization of Civil Service and continued expansion of public higher education both have top priority in my program: I will work for Civil Service reform, including a true meritsystem, as resolutely as I have fought for fiscal responsibility. I will double total capacity at state institutions of higher learning, already up 50 per cent during my administration.

The revenue program enacted with bipartisan support this year, comprising limited sales tax and increased excise taxes, has already made possible, in seven short months, sharply increased state assistance for local schools, plus substantial property tax relief. I urge its continuation.

Lieutenant Governor's Contest

FRANCIS W. SARGENT - Republican
Age: 50
Address: Farm St., Dover.
Education: Massachusetts Institute of Technology, architecture.
Present Occupation: Candidate for Lieutenant governor.

JOSEPH E. McGUIRE - Democrat
Age: 38
Address: 12 Schussler Rd., Worcester.
Education: Georgetown University; Georgetown University School of Law; Foreign Service Institute, Washington, D. C.; Institute Labor and Management Relations, Holy Cross College.
Present Occupation: Lawyer.

Questions to Candidates for Lieutenant Governor:

1. What should be the role of the lieutenant governor?

McGuire:

Without day-to-day responsibility for running of the state, he can focus attention on special areas of service and serve as a person to whom the public may turn with their ideas for better government.

Sargent:

He should help plan and execute the governor's program and offer programs based on his own special experience and competence.

2. What are the particular programs that you would be interested in spearheading as lieutenant governor?

McGuire:

Reviewing areas in which Federal funds are available and bringing this to the executive's attention in the interest of state programs. While these concerns should cover all areas, my particular interest is in programs for education and rehabilitation of the mentally and physically handicapped.

Sargent:

Improvement of our environment through control of air and water pollution.

More efficient use and expansion of recreational facilities to make our natural resources available to all our people, at all income levels.

Joint public works and natural resources planning of public projects to avoid conflict and misuse.

Recruitment of young professionals to state service.

Secretary of State

KEVIN H. WHITE - Democrat
Age: 37
Address: 158 Mr. Bernon St., Boston.
Education: Tabor Academy; Williams College; Boston College Law School.
Present Occupation: Secretary of the commonwealth; lawyer.

RAYMOND M. TRUDEL - Republican
Age: 49
Address: Main St., Montague.
Education: Northeastern University, L.L.B.
Present Occupation: Attorney.

Questions for Candidates for Secretary of State:

1. How do you propose to increase voter registration and participation?

White:

This year I sponsored legislation liberalizing absentee voting. I introduced another law providing for registration on Saturdays; registration in all precincts; evening registration once a week for three weeks before elections. I submitted a bill to make Election day a holiday.

Trudel:

It is a problem of education. There should be a course in every high school, on "local government." Education should be commenced at the "learning level." Interest can only be stimulated if there is knowledge of the matter in question.

2. How would you strengthen election laws, particularly the reporting of campaign expenditures?

White:

I will work for legislation creating a bureau free from political interference, to administer and enforce campaign disclosure laws. The Corrupt Practices Bureau would work closely with the attorney general's office, which would prosecute violators.

Trudel:

Before strengthening the existing law, better enforcement and interpretation of existing law should be effected.

The Controversial Referendum:

Referendum No. 5

Do you approve of a law summarized below, which was approved in the House of Representatives by a vote of 118 in the affirmative and 102 in the negative and was approved in the Senate by a vote of 21 in the affirmative and 16 in the negative ?

The Sales Tax: Retain or Repeal ?

Summary: This referendum asks the voter to approve a law which has already been passed by the House and Senate, and which is now in effect.

This law imposes a temporary tax upon all retail sales of tangible personal property at the rate of 3% (three percent) of the selling price, with certain exemptions.

A "YES" vote would retain the sales tax.
A "NO" vote would repeal the sales tax.

Battle for Attorney General

FRANCIS X. BELLOTTI - Democrat
Age: 43
Address: 120 Hillside Ave., Quincy.
Education: Boston College; Tufts University; Boston College Law School.
Present Occupation: Attorney.

ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON - Republican
Age: 46
Address: 56 Sargent Crossway, Brookline.
Educations: Harvard College, B.A.; Harvard Law School, L.L.B.
Present Occupation: Lieutenant governor

Questions for Candidates for Attorney General:

1. Is the present conflict of interest law adequate? Can it be enforced?

Bellotti:

I feel that the conflict of interest law should be tightened in a number of areas which I have expressed in an attached memorandum. I understand that space limitations do not permit publication of my position paper.

Richardson:

The conflict-of-interest statute is a major step toward improved morality in government, but it should be strengthened by Delineating enforcement responsibility and providing enforcement staff; broadening the standards of conduct section to include elected officials, and making these standards more explicit.

2. Do you favor an expanded investigatory division within the office of the attorney general or a division separate from this office?

Bellotti:

I favor, under the direction and control of the attorney general, a Bureau of Investigation, adequately staffed, making a continuing analysis of criminal activities, assisting local Police Departments with information, and advising on the need for Grand Jury action.

Richardson:

I favor an expanded investigatory division within the attorney general's office, subject to his direction, armed with the subpoena power, and staffed with the necessary accountants and other investigatory personnel.

Competitors for Auditor

THADDEUS BUCZKO - Democrat
Age: 40
Address: 47 Butler St., Salem.
Education: Salem High; Norwich U., Boston University; Boston University School of Law, L.L.B.; Northeastern University Graduate School of Law; Bentley.
Present Occupation: State Auditor.

JOHN J. BUCKLEY - Republican
Age: 37
Address: 11 Leicester Rd., Belmont.
Education: Malden High School; Boston College, College of Business Administration, B.S.
Present Occupation: Special assistant to U. S. Sen. Leverett Saltonstall.

Questions for Candidates for Auditor:

1. What administrative practices would you follow in the management of your office?

Buczko:

A department with trained personnel, passing judgment on administrative procedures, is the most effective control over proper disposition of the tax-payer's dollar. I shall continue my present management techniques.

Buckley:

Introduce post-performance audit to assure that the public gets a dollar's worth of value for every tax dollar spent.

Have private accounting firms calculate state's accounting system.

Recruit young men familiar with modern accounting principles.

2. Is there some particular problem that prompted you to seek this office?

Buczko:

My reward as auditor shows that I have administered my duties in a highly creditable manner. My reelectionwill insure continued proper accounting of the state's assets.

Buckley:

An antiquated state audit system.

Lack of systematic audit to guarantee proper use of tax money.

Candidates for Treasurer

JOSEPH E. FERNANDES - Republican
Age 43
Address: Fernandes Circle, Norton.
Education: Norton public schools; Boston University College of Business Administration.
Present Occupation: Executive officer of supermarket chain.

ROBERT Q. CRANE - Democrat
Age 40
Address: 10 Burton St., Boston.
Education: Boston English High School; Boston College.
Present Occupation: Treasurer and Receiver-General.

Question for Candidates for Treasurer

What experience have you had handling large sums of money?

Crane:

As treasurer, my office handles expeditiously $1.5 billion; has custody of $300 million funds; sells $100 million bonds yearly; pays approximately $10 million weekly to vendors, $6 million monthly for state payroll, $4.5 million retirement funds, $25-30 million yearly to municipalities.

Fernandes:

My family-owned business does close to $42 million yearly. Staff Supermarket Associates (director) does $400 million. Space limitations preclude further listing.

JUMP!

by BOB HOBBS

UMass Sport Parachute Club

"UMass beats Army," if we had gotten a headline after the 1964 Inter-Collegiate Parachute Meet this would have been it.

We have some pretty strong competition in the North-East; Army, Harvard, and Norwich, just to mention a few. And in the 1964 meet, competition came from such far away places as the University of Montana and the University of New Brunswick in Canada.

Maybe you're not interested in Inter-Collegiate Competition, but you would like to jump. What can the UMass Club offer you?

First, we can offer you guidance. You don't have to be a member of the Club to complete a first jump. But we do offer you reduced rates in the hope that you will join the Club.

Secondly, as a Club member you have at your disposal some of the best parachuting equipment available. With the help of the Student Senate, we have acquired the safest and most modern equipment available.

Thirdly, we offer you the services of the Pioneer Valley Sport Parachute Center at Turners Falls Airport. Our Club is centered there and we have been lucky enough to acquire the assistance of the many people at the Center who themselves are devoted participants in the sport.

The Center is not run as a commercial venture and therefore, the rates are reduced to put the "sport" back in parachuting.

Fourthly, we offer you the comradship of the Club members. These people, like you, are interested in the sport and willing to help you as much as they can.

Let's get back to finances. Do you like to ski? Well parachuting is about as expensive, and with the Club a lot less expensive.

As of Oct. 31, a First Jump Course at the Pioneer Valley Center for a student at the University will cost fourteen dollars. Rates have steadily climbed since the beginning of the semester due to rapid depletion of our subsidy money (over 100 jumps since Sept. 15).

Also, as of Oct. 31, it will cost a student ten dollars to join the Club. How are these rates comparable to a commercial center such as Orange? The First Jump Course at Orange is $35.00.

Renting equipment for your continuing jumps will bring the price of jumps #2, etc. up to $12.50 per jump. With Club rates, and as a member of the UMass Club, your next jump will cost you $3.50 per jump.

We and the Pioneer Center are not commercial ventures. Our objectives are:

1. To encourage participation in the fast growing sport of parachuting.

2. To encourage the growth of sport parachuting on the collegiate competitive scene.

3. To educate and inform the college community about the various aspects of sport parachuting and skydiving.

4. And to provide the necessary atmosphere for the growth and development of the sport of parachuting here at the University.

In passing, it's not too difficult to see what the Club can do for you. What we as Club members are interested in is what you can do for the Club.

We offer quite a bit and we hope that you will take advantage of it. Could be we'll see you in the air someday and then you'll be doing something for the Club.

BUDAPEST AND AFTER

Professor Thomas Aizel will give a talk on "The Hungarian Revolution and It's Consequences," Wednesday, November 9, 6:30 p.m. at Middlesex, Student Union.

Prof. Aizel, a distinguished writer and novelist, formerly lecturing at Oxford University, is presently teaching at UMass' English Department. He is a winner of the Stalin Prize on Literature. In 1956 Prof. Aizel defected from Communist Hungary. The lecture is sponsored by the International Club. An informal coffee hour will precede the lecture at 5:30 p.m. at the Governor's Lounge, S. U.

YD's Wrap Up Campaign

With the election today tomorrow, the Young Democrats of the University of Massachusetts are making their final preparations to insure the success of the Democratic ticket in the town of Amherst this Tuesday. Since the beginning of the semester, committees for Peabody, McCormack, McGuire, and Bellotti have been active to promote these candidates victory at the polls.

For the last two weeks the Young Democrats have been operating out of their own campaign headquarters located on Amity Street in the center of Amherst as well as campaigning in the Student Union. The group has passed out thousands of pieces of literature, organized bumper sticker crews for the local shopping centers, and is planning to call every registered Democrat in Amherst to remind them to get out and vote for the Democratic ticket.

This Tuesday the group will also cover all the precints in Amherst and will greet the voters with literature supporting the party's candidates. A good portion of the club will travel to Springfield to work at the polls for United States Senate Candidate Endicott Peabody and State Senate candidate Donald Ryan.

Commenting on the Tuesday election, YoungDemocrats President Nick Akerman stated that it is in the best interests of the University to elect the Democratic Slate. "The Republicans have failed to meet their obligation to higher education especially to the University of Massachusetts. Governor Volpe says his administration has promoted the cause of higher education but fails to account for his severe cut in the University's budget last year."

After the election, the Young Democrats are planning to be more active than ever. Committees will be organized on State Policy, National Issues, Human Rights, and Community Action. Anyone who might be interested in joining the group is encouraged to come to a short meeting on Wednesday, November 9th at 8:30 P.M. in the Plymouth Room.

GRADUATE SCHOOL: NOT MUCH TODAY, TOMORROW?

by KEN DAHL

"Graduate School at the University of Massachusetts is not what it should be. It is growing slowly, and it will be another three or four years before progress assumes a more healthy pace."

This is the opinion of Dean Edward C. Moore, head of the University grad school.

Of 13,000 students on campus, 2,500 are grad students, or one of every five. Dean Moore feels that a ratio of 1 to 3 is necessary because graduate degrees are becoming more essential. Yet we are turning down qualified applicants. Last year, 1,000 of the 10,000 who applied could not be accommodated.

One reason is the facilities. In the sciences, such as physics, engineering, and chemistry, equipment is becoming obsolete, the dean said. The libraries are scattered among buildings all over campus, and many of these buildings are old and far apart. This situation does not advance interaction or stimulation, Dean Moor continued.

In the arts, the main lab is the library. And Goodell Library is "not adequate for the demands of grad students," in the opinion of Dean Moore.

There are, of course, plans to solve the problems of limited size and inadequate facilities.

Efforts are being made to increase graduate enrollment by 500 each year toward a projected total of 4,500 in 1970. This is intended to create the best possible balance between the quality and number of students, the dean said.

One major part of the plans to improve facilities is the Graduate Research Center. The center, to be completed in the early 1970's, will comprise three towers and several low-rise buildings housing the engineering, physics and chemistry graduate departments. The center will contain the latest equipment and the accumulated libraries of the three departments, thus providing the greater research, interaction and stimulation, the dean holds as keys to the program.

To improve Goodell Library, the grad school plans to spend $1-million a year to purchase needed books and publications.

Yet, the dean added, the quality of a grad school rests ultimately with the faculty. In this respect, Dean Moore feels, "We are particularly well-endowed."

The programs attracting special attention right now are the master of fine arts degrees in theatre and English and the new degree programs in astronomy and computer science.

Although our grad school "is not what it should be," Dean Moore feels, "These plans will provide the needed improvements."

SALES TAX . . .

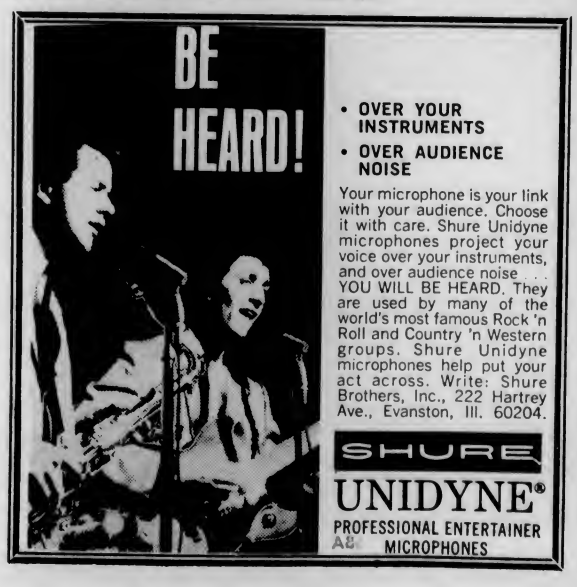
Deception #3: "New tax exemptions for the elderly, and the poor, ilquor and cigarette tax increases" will also be killed by repeal of the sales tax.



There is no serious obstacle to the enforcement of these provisions. They could be immediately re-enacted as separate legislation. Big-lie #4: If it is repealed "it is very likely that the sales tax would be re-enacted."

It is highly improbable that a defeated measure could be re-enacted for at least two or three legislative sessions—and by that time (and we can bear to wait) the legislature will have come up with a more fair and progressive tax program, e.g., graduated income tax.

LAWRENCE A. MARTIN

Bank President Martin To Address SBA

Dollars and sense—that is the idea of the Accounting Association when they bring Lawrence Martin to campus this Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Martin is the distinguished president of the National Shawmut Bank, one of the largest in Boston. He will speak on management's view of the accounting function.

With the end of the American Institute of Certified Public Accounts (AICPA) Convention in Boston, questions remained as to precisely what function does the account serve in management decision-making. And Mr. Martin will present his enlightened views concerning the controversial issue of the business world. It is an absolute must for all members of the School of Business Administration to attend this talk.

After the speech by Dr. Martin, who is also a Trustee of Northeastern University of Boston, he will be available for questions concerning not only his talk but questions on his views of modern education.

The event will be held in the small auditorium of the School of Business Administration, SBA 120, and is open to all members orf the University. Mr. Martin is scheduled to begin his speech in the afternoon, followed by the question and answer period.

This is the second in a series of formal and informal sessions with prominent personages from the world of finance, economics and accounting as well as their related fields. In the future, the association will have a coffee hour, talks with members of the Placement Office as well as the afternoon speeches.

Charter Procedure Set Out

Dean of Students Dr. William F. Field today announced the procedure that all residence halls follow in order to have residence hall government charters recognized by the University. Briefly, a five-step process is outlined as follows:

Step I. The Charter is ratified by a residence hall referendum and copies are submitted to the Dean of Student's Office.

STEP II. The Dean of Student's Office issues an authorization for the residence hall to operate according to the provisions of its charter pending review and recognition. He then forwards the charter to the President of the Student Senate.

STEP III. The President of the Student Senate submits the charter to the Activities Committee of the Student Senate, who, after satisfied that the charter is consistent with University guidelines, then refers the charter to the Student Sen.

STEP IV. The charter is approved by the Student Senate and then forwarded to the Dean of Students in the usual manner.

STEP V. The Dean of Students issues formal recognition of the charter in behalf of the Univ.

Implicit in the review process by the Activities Committee and /or the Student Senate is recognition of the possibility that certain provisions of the charter may be considered by these groups to be inconsistent with University guidelines. In such a case the charter will be returned to the residence hall with comments concerning the reasons why a given provision is considered inconsistent with University guidelines. It is then incumbent on the residence hall, on the basis of the reasons stated, to modify the given provision so that it will be consistent with University guidelines. After this is accomplished, the review process resumes at the point from which it was referred back to the residence hall.

Quality of Work Mark of University Press

by JEAN FULTON

Sandwiched between the University Duplicating Service and the University Publications office, and surrounded by the 4-H Extension offices at Munson Hall, is a room bearing the name-tag, "The University Press."

In this small office, complete with five desks, typewriters, drawing board, assorted foreign and English dictionaries and the everpresent paper work, 16 books and three pamphlets have been led through the publication process in the past two years.

Established July 1, 1964, the Press has this year been admitted as a member of the American Association of University Presses, an advantageous affiliation according to its director, Mrs. Leone Barron. "Our membership is important, one reason being that we are now listed in Scholarly Books in America, a select list of scholastic publications," she said. This achievement after its short existence of two years compares with many colleges taking up to seven years to achieve the high standards of the association.

"But we must not forget the influence of the Massachusetts Review," Mrs. Barron hurried on. The Review, a publication supported by the Four Colleges, "created a climate which is partially responsible for the Press."

What does the University Press publish? With emphasis on American philosophy, the Press publishes books of a scholarly nature and some dealing with the arts. Works are frequently of a regional interest, and subject and the Workers in Massachusetts 1886-1912 (by Henry F. Bedford), to The Lyman Letters—New Lght on Emily Dickinson and Her Family (by Richard B. Sewall), to Come Out into the Sun—Poems New and Selected by Robert Francis).

Mrs. Barron estimates that half the book authors are UM professors, which she feels is "as it should be".

"The Press began in 1964 with one part-time employee and now has graduated to a staff of seven —five full-time and two part-time," Mrs. Barron said proudly, surveying the papers covering her desk. "Two students are employed, one in shipping and a graduate student in copy editing."

Other positions are those of director, secretary, production and design, sales and promotion.

The staff's job is advancing the manuscripts from rough copy to bound book. Manuscripts directly submitted by authors—"in fact, we often find them on our doorstep in the morning!" smiles Mrs. Barron—are read by an objective expert in the field. The final decision is made by a press committee of 12 members.

The director enthusiastically added, "We always work on a half-dozen or so at a time, at different stages, of course. I'd say we average about eight books per year."

Financially, the Press is a non-profit organization supported by the University with non-state funds, under the supervision of the Dean of the Graduate School, Edward C. Moore. Advertising, mostly by direct mailing is carried out by means of flyers and small catalogues, and now the recent listing in Scholarly Books in America.

Program Bounds Up From UM

Upward Bound soared at U-Mass last summer and is heading for new heights in its follow-up program.

James S. White of the UMass School of Education, who is director of Upward Bound at this campus, defines its purpose as that of "motivation and raising aspirations" of teenagers who have little hopes for a college future.

As part of a federally sponsored anti-poverty program, Upward Bound at UMass served 100 ninth and 10th grade students selected from 18 Western Massachusetts high schools.

Most of these students had low expectations for a college education, so the project's aim was to motivate them "to be more successful and to perform at the best possible level now" while in high school. And through the follow-up program of Upward Bound, the students will return in the 1967 summer as juniors and seniors to learn more academic skills, which the staff hopes will be in preparation for entering college.

Most vital to the continuing success of the project is the counseling. In the summer, there were 12 resident counselor-tutors, both graduate and undergraduate students; nine of these were from UMass. Counseling was done in small groups and individually. The counselors lived in the dorms ate meals, played sports and attended classes with the Bound students.

"Very close relationships" developed between the counselors and students. The counselors even tutored in math and English.

Discussion of all problems was encouraged and ranged from gang talk to Viet Nam. By the counselors' fostering freedom of expression within a strictly confidential atmosphere, the student "talked out" his ideas and problems and appreciated the interest and attention of his counselor.

Appreciation of freedom also accounted for the students' formation of a student government. It established fines for violators of quiet hours or curfews and any other regulations, all of which were decided upon by the summer students. These Upward Bound students valued, appreciated and accepted freedom and its responsibilities, said White.

The relationship continues.

The Upward Bound follow-up program includes a visit by each counselor once a week to each of the 10 high school systems from which the students were selected. The visits will continue through the 1966-67 school year.

During his visit, the counselor talks with his students individually and in small groups, just as he did in the summer. If the student is having academic problems and wishes a tutor in a subject, the counselor will find him one. Local colleges and agencies are lining up tutors in English and math. Discussions are also held with the students' teachers, high school guidance counselor and the principal.

A counselor plays a significant role as a liaison between those who are educationally concerned with the low-achieving student. In addition, the counselor seeks out the students' parents twice a month for personal consultation on integrating the student's academic life to his home life.

This "Follow-up project is a major thing," said White. The student cannot be abandoned after his summer program experience. White comments that the student needs the "close contact and warm personal relationship" formed at UMass in order to build his confidence and to make him fully aware of his capabilities as a future college student.

Also, there are non-academic aspects of the follow-up which include a reunion of the 1966 Upward Bound students and trips to UMass for cultural and recreational activities—sports events or a University Theater production. Communities will sponsor cultural enrichment and recreational opportunities for the Upward Bound students and their tutors, White continued.

Has Upward Bound worked? White is very happy with the success of the program so far. Some students have switched their high school courses to the college prep curriculum. One student asked White this summer, "Gee, how do you get into UMass? I'd love to come here!"

Upward Bound follow-up is the evaluative part of the project. True success will be determined by how well UMass keeps in touch with the Upward Bound students and how well the follow-up relates the realities of the students' school and home life.

White is optimistic of the outcome of this first project. He only hopes that more students who are capable but lack the opportunity of an education beyond high school will aspire for the heights which Upward Bound offers.

PQT

Professional Qualification Test—A prerequisite to qualify for a career position with the National Security Agency.

WHEN: December 10, 1966
(Get a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office)

If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1967, register for the Professional Qualification Test. Taking and passing the PQT doesn't commit or obligate you to anything, but we urge you—even if you are not now fully certain of your future interests—to investigate NSA career opportunities.

An Agency of national prominence, this unique civilian organization is responsible for developing "secure" communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. How and why does that affect you? Because NSA has a critical and growing need for imaginative people—regardless of your academic major.

You will participate in programs of national importance, working in such areas as: Cryptography (the making of codes and ciphers), analytic research, language research, data systems design and programming, and administrative management.

At NSA, your professional status and earning power grow rapidly from the day you begin, without having to wait for years of "experience." Starting salary of at least $6,451 (for bachelor's degrees), regular increases, excellent advancement possibilities . . . and all the benefits of Federal employment. Another advantage is NSA's location, convenient to both Baltimore and Washington and a short drive from ocean beaches and other recreational attractions.

Plan to take the PQT. It could be your first step to a great future!

IMPORTANT: THE DEADLINE FOR PQT APPLICATIONS IS NOVEMBER 25. Pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office. It contains full details and the necessary registration form. Applicants must be U. S. citizens, subject to a complete physical examination and background investigation.

UNIVERSITY PRESS . . .

The printing—1500 to 3,000 copies of each work—is not done in Munson Hall, nor amidst ceramic classes in Munson Annex. Rather, the books are printed outside the University on commercial bid.

With the University advancing in all directions, can the Press remain the self-contained operation that it is? Mrs. Barron—projecting her thoughts 10 years ahead as does the University—is uncertain.) She believes it may stay a small and high quality press (like the Press at Brown University, which prints only eight books each year), and then again "perhaps we will be printing 20 books per year in the next decade". She emphasized the 'perhaps', but if enthusiasm relates to growth as practice does to skill, the University Press, under the drection of Mrs. Barron, will most likely keep pace with the University, both in quality and quantity.

W1PUO Expands Range,

The UMass Amateur Radio Association, W1PUO, recently acquired a new amplifier which boosts the power level of the University's amateur radio station from 180 to 2,000 watts.

The amplifier arrived late one Friday afternoon and club members John Gniady '67 and Robert Bass '66 spent the entire evening connecting it to the existing equipment.

At about 1 a.m. Saturday, the job was completed and the first call with the new amplifier was made. The call was answered by KC4USB, an amateur radio operator located at Byrd Station in the Antarctic. The Byrd Station operator reported the University's signal was the strongest coming in from throughout the world.

Since that time contact has been made with operators in such places at Peru, Russia, Republic of the Congo, Zambia, and Hawaii.

If "ham radio" sounds interesting to you, come to the club's next meeting on Monday, Nov. 28, in EBE 104 at 7:30 p.m. You are welcome to see one of the best equipped college amateur radio stations in the East.

A one-week postponement was granted yesterday in the cast of two college students charged with using a campus magazine to "trespass" against a public official who proposed prosecuting parents who seek welfare aid for illegitimate children.

The students, Charles Kaska, 22, of Rahway, Mass., and Thomas Breslin, 21, of Toms River, Mass., were suspended from Monmouth College and arrested.

Magistrate Charles L. Morgan granted the postponement to allow their attorney to prepare a defense.

The two were arrested Monday after police carried them bodily off the campus on the instructions of college officials. The students, publishers of the Hawker magazine, also were handed suspensions for at least one academic year on grounds of insubordination in refusing to obey college administration orders to abandon the publication.

Kaska and Breslin each contend the magazine was banned because of its criticism of Monmouth County Freeholder Marcus Daly. They also maintain that Daly, a trustee of the college, engineered the suspensions.

The incident that led to the arrests was an "emergency" edition of the magazine, which the two students published in defiance of a college order last Friday. During the weekend, 3,000 copies of the Hawk were printed, and the two students began distributing them free on the campus Monday.

Within a half hour after the distribution began, the suspension notices went ont. Then, when they continued handing out the magazine, police were summoned and the two arrested.

College officials would comment only that the school's regulations prohibit unauthorized publications on campus.

UMASS CHAPTER HOSTS MORTAR BOARD MEETING

On November 4th and 5th, the first Mortar Board Section One meeting to be held in three years was hosted by the University of Massachusetts Mortar Board Chapter. Twenty-eight delegates from Middlebury College, and the Universities of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, St. Lawrence, and Vermont participated in the conference held at the Woolman Hill Quaker Center in Old Deerfield. Mrs. Melanie D. Hodge of Buffalo, New York, Section One Director and the keynote speaker, Miss Helen Curtis, Dean of Women at UM, and Miss Margaret Ford, one of the advisers to the UM chapter, also participated in the conference.

The workshops, discussions, and main address focused on the question—what role can and should a Mortar Board chapter play on its individual campus if it is to be a really vital force in American Higher Education and not just a key-hanging society?

Delegates concluded that what each chapter does must suit the needs of its campus and the time and talents of its members, that the programs must be constantly re-evaluated and re-assessed, and that the uniqueness of Mortar Board lies in the area of service—"it elects and expects."

Middlebury College with an enrollment of 1,100 does not have the same needs and problems as UMass oh UConn; St. Lawrence with five Mortar Board members cannot handle the same kind of projects as UConn with 17 Mortar Board members. Indeed, the programs are and must be different as the chapters themselves.

As to the importance of Mortar Board programs, the editor of the Mortar Board Quarterly says: "If we fail in the area of strong chapter programs and deteriorate into a key-hanging society, I am afraid that Mortar Board will become less and less of an honor because there will be less and less honor associated with it. Honor produces itself, and if we are doing nothing more than conferring a name, we will become nothing more than an honor 'in name only'."

Mortar Board's purposes, as outlined in the Preamble to the Constitution, are to promote college loyalty, advance the spirit of service and fellowship among university women, promote and maintain a high standard of scholarship, recognize and encourage leadership, and stimulate and develop a finer type of college woman. The Preamble implies that there must be activity on the part of the Mortar Board chapter.

In evaluating the section meeting Mrs. Hodge proclaimed it to be a minor miracle. The co-chairmen, Claire Amiot and Deborah Kaiman, had few resources to turn to, and what little helpful material that was gathered and sent to them was temporarily lost in the mail; Mrs. Hodge herself was snowbound in Buffalo and had to postpone her arrival until late Saturday morning; Anne Yakavonis, President of the UM Mortar Board chapter spent part of Friday afternoon at Bradley airport waiting for Mrs. Hodge's plane to arrive, only to find later that all flights from Buffalo had been cancelled; and the arrival of St. Lawrence Mortar Boards was delayed by snow and slippery roads.

In spite of these frustrations and delays, the meeting retained its continuity, reached a climax with Mrs. Hodge's address, and concluded with lively and worthwhile afternoon discussions. Many of the delegates then visited UM before returning to their respective colleges and universities.

Death of God?

Father Raymond J. Nogar, O.P., S.T. Lt., Ph. D. will be the guest speaker at a general meeting of the Newman Club at 8 p.m. this Tuesday, Nov. 8, in the Social Hall at Newman Center.

Father Nogar was born in Monroe, Michigan in 1916. He received his B.A. degree from the School of Literature, Science, and Arts as well as a Teacher's Certificate from the University of Michigan in 1939. He did graduate work at Michigan in Sociology and also did field work in animal ecology in conjunction with his graduate work at the University.

In 1939, he became a convert to the Catholic Church and entered the Dominican Order in 1940. He received a degree of Licentiate of Philosophy and a degree of Lectorate in Sacred Theology from the Aquinas Institute of Philosophy.

He was ordained a priest in 1948. He received his Doctorate in the Philosophy of Science and taught the Philosophy of Nature at the Aquinas Institute.

Father Nogar toured Europe and taught Philosophy of Nature at the Angelican University in Rome. He returned to the Aquinas Institute of Philosophy where he is now teaching Philosophy of Science and Problems in Evolution.

Father Nogar has written articles in many well-known Catholic journals. He also has written a book on evolution called The Wisdom of Evolution and has just completed and published The Lord of the Absurd.

Father Nogar's topic will be "Evolution and the Death of God". He will try to clarify this idea which has been plaguing the modern world.

Frosh Devour UConn, 21-0

by AL PEAKES, Sports Staff

The University of Massachusetts Freshmen parlayed a diversified offense with a tremendous defense for a 21-0 victory over the Connecticut frosh on Friday. The contest, played on the wind-swept practice field, was dominated by the Redmen from start to finish.

On the first play from scrimmage, UConn quarterback Don Martinelli faded back and threw to halfback Tom Sweeney. The pass never reached him as Tom Brennan, the brilliant UMass safety, picked it off and returned the pigskin 36 yards to the UConn 12. From there a series of rushing plays brought the ball to the 1, where Redmen quarterback Tim Adams plunged over for the score. George Andersen's kick split the uprights perfectly making the score 7-0.

A very muddy, slippery field prevented the UMass offense from moving in the remainder of the half. The great blitzing of the defensive front four, particularly end Jim Nangle, kept UConn from moving into Massachusetts territory.

Key interceptions by Larry Rendin and Tom Brennan's second of the day, were factors that enabled the home team to maintain ball control. Rendin also recovered a Husky fumble on the UMass 18 yard line after a bone-jarring tackle by Nangle had knocked the ball loose.

The second half brought about a rapid revival of the Bay Staters offense. The Little Redmen took the kickoff to the Nutmeggers 44. From there halfback Gerry Grasso twisted and spun past the diving UConn secondary, for the score. Andersen's foot was good, making the score 14-0. UMass easily contained the sputtering Husky offense, forcing them to punt. Burley Crowe's warriors then drove to the Connecticut 13, where Adams lofted one to John of the day.

Extra Points: The UMass defense held Connecticut to a mere 24 yards rushing. Redmen halfback Grasso doubled their total 53 yards gained while averaging 10.6 per carry. The Redmen's total offense was 264 yards as compare d to just 100 yards for UConn. The win was the 3rd straight for the Freshmen after an opening day loss to Army. New Hampshire will be the last opponent for the Redmen, the contest taking place on Friday, November 11, at Alumni Stadium.

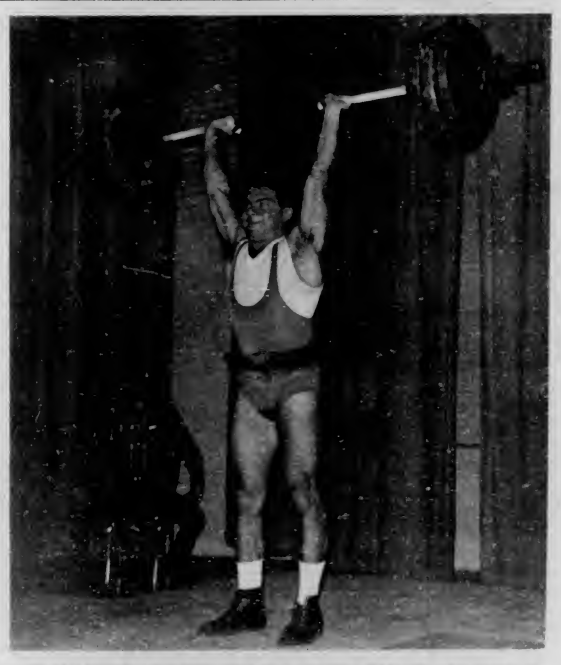
UM Weight-Lifters Excel in Olympic Test

The University of Massachusetts Barbell Club entered four contestants into the olympic weightlifting contest at Winchendon, Mass., on Saturday, November 5. The crowd was astounded by the UMass contestants' achievements and the potential they showed for future contests.



The meet was highlighted by the great lifting of James DeCoste (163½ lbs.) who pressed 255, snatched 245, and clean and jerked 330 (double bodyweight) for a new England middleweight record total of 830. Jim's 330 clean and jerk when weighed was 328¾ lbs. which is ¾ of a pound over the New England record, but since records must be broken by at least a full pound, the lift will not go into the record books. Jim's clean and jerk was the highest lift of the contest in all the weight divisions.

Barry Laycock (180½ lbs.) also displayed great lifting ability by way of a 260 press, 260 snatch, and a 320 clean and jerk for an excellent and near record-breaking total of 840. Barry, who at present is the finest snatcher in New England, was just shy of the New England snatch record of 267½ pounds which has been standing for nearly ten years. Because of the ease with which Barry snatched the 260, it appears that the long standing record will be broken by this young star in the next contest.

Jeff Lynge (173), in only his third contest, exhibited excellent form in totaling 680 by way of a 210 press, 195 snatch, and a 275 clean and jerk. He also cleaned 285 and barely missed the jerk. Jeff is showing great promise for the future, as in all of his lift it appeared that he was good for at least another ten or twenty pounds.

The disappointing aspect of the contest for the UMass weightlifters was the turning down of Ray Rogers' (178¾ lbs.) three press attempt with 295, which was 12½ pounds in excess of his New England record set three weeks ago. Ray twice received only one of two required white lights necessary to pass his lift. It appeared that his third and final attempt with 295 pounds was an easy success, but to everyone's surprise, it was turned down.

INTRAMURALS

SPE, Smashers to Clash For Grid Title Tuesday

by TOM CONUEL
Sports Staff

The intramural football season is just about over, but the bowling season is just beginning.

The big game in intramural football will be played tomorrow night at 7:30 when the dorm champs, the Smashers from Adams House, take on the fraternity champs SPE, for the intramural championship. Both teams have fine quarterbacks, big linemen, and good deep receivers. Coach Gladchuck is expecting a standing room only crowd for the contest, mainly because there aren't any seats on the intramural field to begin with.

In bowling, there were 14 matches rolled last week. In the International League the Cellar Savers topped the Tower Terrors, with Edelman of the Savers rolling high total for the night with a 437. The Colt 45's stopped APO with Dick Minton leading the way with a score of 568. The Commanches rolled over the Monuments behind McDonald's 510; and the Hermits beat the Lucky 13's.

In the South League it was the Flaming A's over the Spartans with Benham high with a 585, the Patriots over the Jaguars with Bleyle high at 566, the Smashers beating the Leopards with Rich Little high for the Smashers with a 478 and the Cougars topping the Academics.

Finally in the North League the Hoovers topped the Elms with Lambert high at 521, the Redwoods felled the Pines, Marr being high with a 466, the Lemons downed the Eagles with Sandman leading the way with a 571. The Trojans stopped the Maroons with Kenney high at 532, the Hemlocks beat the Hi Lo's; and the Grants and Phallics tied four to four with D'andrea of the Grants high man with a 603 score.

Cross, and eight plays later, Lentz rolled right, cut back, and eluded a pair of tacklers on a 17-yard jaunt for the touchdown. Kaminski's kick was good and the Crusaders led, 10-0, with 1:47 to go in the first quarter.

Kaminski's second field goal, with six-and-a-half minutes left in the third quarter drew considerable comment. The ball was kicked at a wide angle and curved over the left upright. At any rate, the score was an unlucky 13-0. And with 9::40 to go in the fourth quarter, Kaminski lengthened the margin to 16-0.

Cross - examination — Holy Cross middle guard Glenn Grieco, back from a knee injury, plugged up the middle effectively for the Crusaders before he was forced to leave late in the game. Defensive end Dick Krzyzek was excellent too . . .

The Redmen were seeking their fifth straight victory. They stand at 5-2, heading towards that potential Yankee Conference clincher against New Hampshire next Saturday at Alumni Stadium. Holy Cross is now 3-3-1 . . .

The touchdown pass to Detore was Landry's first of the season . . . Detore was top U-Mass rusher, with 19 yards . . . End Mike Casey was Landry's big target during the final drive . . . Bob Gogick and Bill Connor returned to action for the Redmen, but Mike McArdle suffered a bruised hip.

Belated Rally Falls Short As Crusaders Nip Redmen

by TOM FITZGERALD, Sports Staff

WORCESTER—The game had all the earmarks of another UMass victory. The Redmen had penetrated the Holy Cross defense for three well-deserved first downs and 19 big yards of total offense in the first half. And with little over five minutes to play, Holy Cross led by a mere 16-0.

So the many UMass faithful at Fitton Field were being realistic, not chauvinistic, in expecting The Big Break That Would Turn the Tide. Throughout the chilly, but sunny afternoon, some might have remembered the Redman motto: "lest too light winning make the prize light."

Not Enough Time

The Big Break did come and it did turn the tide, but although five minutes might have been enough for the Redmen to run a mile or so, it wasn't enough time to catch the Crusaders. Holy Cross won, 16-14, and the UMass fans probably felt as though they had seen Batman end up in the blazing furnace or Nell crushed under that train.

The truism of the day was was someone's remark in the press box that UMass isn't playing a schedule—it's playing a serial. It certainly looked as though Alfred Hitchcock and Rod Serling were the technical advisors for the production, especially when Rod Brooks blocked a Phil O'Neil punt and Paul Vaccaro recovered on the Cross two-yard line with 5:37 left.

After one rush failed, UMass quarterback Greg Landry vaulted over the pile to break the ice for the Redmen. Landry passed to tight end Bill Carty for the conversion to narrow the gap to 16-8 with 4:51 left.

Dick Qualey's onside kick attempt after the score was grabbed by UMass' Rod Brooks just before the ball had traveled the necessary 10 yards. Holy Cross marched to the UMass 25, but Mike Kaminski's field goal try was blocked, again by Brooks. Dick Qualey fell on the ball at the UMass 12 with about two minutes left.

Poise of a Pro

The Redmen's offensive blocking finally jelled and Landry showed the poise of a professional in marching the visitors 88 yards, entirely through the air. With the ball on the HolyCross three and 19 seconds remaining, Landry fired over the middle to a diving Bob Detore, who bobbled the ball momentarily but hung on with cornerback Webster Knight on his back.

The score was 16-14 and the vocal crowd was on its feet as Landry tried another conversion pass to Carty, who had it, then dropped it just before a pair of defenders hit him from behind.

Another onside kick try failed, and the Crusaders let the clock run out.

The Redmen spent the first three periods running their hands down the jerseys of versatile quarterback Jack Lentz and halfback Bob Lawson. UMass punted on third down twice in the first half.

One Per Game

Midway through the first period, the Redmen maintained their average of one goal-line stand per game. A 22-yard run by Lentz gave Holy Cross a first down on the UMass one, but miniature fullback Ralph Lilore and Lentz couldn't budge the wall on successive plays. Then Lentz rolled out but lost his footing as he headed for the endzone on third down. A fourth-down pass for end Pete Kimener was overthrown.

The Crusaders came back the next time they had the ball, and Kaminski booted a 25-yard field goal, the first of his crucial three.

On the ensuing kickoff, Mike McArdle fumbled as he was hit. Bill Cavanaugh recovered for the

'Had Us Worried' --H. C.'s Massuco

Holy Cross' youthful head football coach, Mel Massucco, who still has plenty of friends left over from his coaching days at UMass, was liberal in his praise of the Redmen's comeback as he spoke outside the home team's locker room after Saturday's game.

"You give that Landry some room," he said, "and he'll kill you. And that pocket they gave was terrific.

"They had us worried there that they were going to do the same thing they've been doing all season," said the man who broke a number of Holy Cross rushing records in the early 50's Massucco, incidentally, passed up a potential professional football career to become freshman football coach, varsity football scout, varsity hockey coach, and freshman baseball coach at UMass, before returning to Mt. St. James as assistant to Dr. Eddie Anderson in 1953.

The second-year head coach lauded the UMass defense, which "got tough inside the 20." He called linebacker Rod Brooks "one of the best we've seen this year." T.G.F.

Line Play Was Key

by DAVE JARNES, Sports Staff

WORCESTER — As the saying goes, it's whats up front that counts, and Saturday's game is a perfect illustration. Coaches will tell you time and again that ball games are won or lost in the line, and Holy Cross' defensive and offensive forward walls dominated their University of Massachusetts counterparts through most of the game.

Some people criticized Greg Landry for not passing earlier in the game as he did in the last minute. The fact of the matter is that Greg tried to throw, but the stout front line of the Crusaders prevented him from doing so.

Until the last few minutes the Cross continually pressured Landry with blitzing linebackers in passing situations, and Greg was consequently thrown for substantial losses. With time running out, Holy Cross went into a prevent defense by keeping their linebackers back on pass coverage. Since Landry had more time to pass, he was able to hit his receivers with the precision he is capable of.

A disappointed but philosophical Vic Fusia was the first person to give credit to Holy Cross. "Their offensive line outblocked us and their defensive line did equally as well." Fusia singled out defensive end Dick Krzyzek as a thorn in UMass' side.

He cited his team's poor play in the first half as the major reason for the loss. "UMass just didn't play as well as it is capable of playing. This time the Redmen waited a little too long to get going. But Holy Cross deserves a lot of credit. UMass was unable to play position football because of the outstanding Crusader line play. The defensive line kept UMass bottled up deep in our own territory while their offensive line opened up some big holes for Lawson and Lentz, "both of whom are very fine runners."

Despite the frustration of that miraculous finish, Fusia was proud of his team. "They're still the same gutty group. I've got a great deal of respect and admiration for these men. They've been coming back all year and they came back again today.

"After we scored that first touchdown on the blocked punt I knew we would score again. As a matter of fact, I was planning on the play we'd use for the two point option before we even got the ball again.

Booters Pepper Coast Guard, 2-0

by TIM MURPHY, Sports Staff

Take an attritive, grinding offense and a grudging defense and, if the breaks go your way, you might win.

So the theory goes. A weeks ago such a combination failed to insure victory for the UMass soccer team, which was deprived of the Yankee Conference championship by a 1-0 loss to Vermont.

Saturday, however, the Redmen parlayed the offense and defense and made their own breaks in the process to edge Coast Guard, 2-0, at New Haven, in a contest not so close as the final score indicates.

The visiting Redmen made Coast Guard goalie Bob Anderson feel like a kernel of unpopped corn in an Easy-Pop package as they shelled him with 40 shots, 16 in the first period of play.

Redmen reminder Carl Gustafson authored his second shutout of the campaign in as many starts, while saving 14 shots.

Gustafson was especially impressive in negotiating the stopper on a second quarter fast break by left half Greg Freeman of the Guardians.

After pressing the attack for the first 22 minutes, the Redmen apparently elected to rest on their initial laurels. Coast Guard took the cue and, though unable to knot the UMass twine, shot eight attempts at Gustafson, who was equal to each.

In the third quarter center foreward Aba Ayanaba, an offensive and defensive standout during the entire campaign, tricky-dribbled the ball around the right of the goal and let fly with a hard, low line-drive to the left corner. The ball lipped the goal and landed behind the beaten Anderson. There was no assist on the tally.

The fourth quarter was played in a conservative, action-at-midfield manner. Neither team was able to mount a serious threat in the quarter — Coast Guard had only one shot on goal in the entire period — until the Redmen massed in front of the Coast Guard net at the 17-minute mark.

At 17:37 Rick Kosoff took possession of the ball and booted it to inside right Marty Smith. The lithe Smith stroked a smoker off of the surprised Anderson from about 15 feet out to end the scoring and ice the UMass victory cake.

"FREE UNIVERSITY"

AMHERST COLLEGE HOLDS EDUCATIONAL REVOLUTION

by PAMELA METAXAS, Staff Reporter

A total of 17 "courses" are presently being offered at Amherst College as part of the Free University program. Open to any college student in the area, these "courses" run Monday-Friday, are student-operated and offer no credit.

The original idea of the Free University was to offer seminar-type "courses" which would have no marks or credit. Professors would be invited to a discussion if the students enrolled wished it. Those in the Free University seek intellectual stimulation of a different sort outside of formalized classes.

One of those enrolled is Fred Aronow, Amherst, who takes part in two "courses," a contemporary art seminar and a film group. In the discussion group on art, they "talk about the whole art movement in general," he said.

In the film "course" the history plus the analysis of films takes place. Another group of students is actually making films, two of which have already been shown. He remarked the Free University plans to get a base for operations soon. Home base presently is Phi Psi.

"Unusual techniques are tried out in these "courses," he continued. "I worked on three films," he said. One was a film about a dancer made "for the purpose of showing the object of the dancer" (modern dancer). The second film was an experimental film in double exposure. And the other film is "different from all the others in that it will have a script," he added. It is called "The Last Pizza."

Another Amherst student, John Tobis, is enrolled in an interesting "course," American Social Problems (i.e., Civil Rights). He and his group have read "The New Equality" for the seminar. He believes the Free University is extra work for the student but "it depends on the individual and what courses you are taking," he commented. "I have gotten to read a number of interesting books I never would have read otherwise," he added. Overall, he finds the Free University at Amherst "worthwhile."

There is also a Free University bulletin published at Amherst available to anyone. Called The Valley News Letter, it deals with the organization and policy of the Free University and has a mailing list of 180. One of the editors, Ira Karasick, plans to publish the letter more often in the future. "We hope to get it out once a week on a regular basis," he said.

The "courses" which are offered include the following: Yoga, Morality and Politics, Drugs, Existentialism and Psychoanalysis and American Foreign Policy. All "courses" are open to any college student and offer a new way of education through the Free University.

Food Committee Meets; Investigates Commons

by LEWIS SMITH

A committee to study the University food services met for the first time Wednesday. With the avowed purpose of setting up a "working relationship between students and the administration," the group is headed by Dean Field and includes a subcommittee of the Student Senate Services Committee.

The first problem dealt with in committee was the "seconds" policy, which allows unlimited seconds at every meal on beverages, bread and butter. On potatoes and vegetables there are seconds if the person will go back to the serving line with his plate. Also any person who requests seconds for health reasons can get them.

The policy on seconds in the entree is, at this time, fairly vague. A clarification of seconds on entrees will be forthcoming in the next two weeks. For now, the commons retains the right to give seconds on the entree by announcement.

This policy was developed because of preparation of the meal is done on a calorie count. Also, leftovers are an added choice at the next meal.

A problem that arises is that many students are inconsiderate—the commons managers often find students taking food and not eating it. This causes general waste and hampers the giving of seconds. At the next meeting of the committee the question of transferring of meal tickets will be discussed.

Sub-committees of the Central Board will be established to consider problems in each commons. These sub-committees will work with the respective dining commons directors in order to offer constructive criticism and formulate a representative opinion about the Food Service.

If any student is interested in working on this committee, he should get in touch with his senator.

Church Reform Decisions May Influence Campus

by AUDREY WYKE

Bishops meeting at the National Catholic Welfare Conference in Washington, D.C., next week will consider lifting the Friday ban on meat and making other changes.

If the Friday law is changed, the Hatch, dining commons and other food services at UMass will be faced with altering their Friday menus. Msgr. David Power of the Newman Center is opposed to change because, "The principle of sacrifice is good."

A law like this can be changed, modified or omitted because the Church is the author, he explained. In contrast, there are laws which cannot be amended by the NCWC because they are based on the Ten Commandments and the Bible.

A controversy which won't be discussed next week is whether priests should marry, since a change of this type would have to be authorized by the Pope.

Because a decree of Vatican Council II indicated there must be reorganization of such groups in each country, the work to update the NCWC, which will be completed next week, has already begun under direction of the Aberican bishops. The changes, the first since NCWC's inception in 1927, will include a new name and election of officers.

BLOOD DONORS NEEDED DURING CAMPUS DRIVE

The Red Cross Bloodmobile will be on campus next week for three days — Tuesday through Thursday, Nov. 15, 16, and 17. Students between the ages of 18 and 59 may sign up now at the Student Union Lobby counter to give.

Recruiters from APO, GSS and IFC have been assisting the Campus Religious Council in signing up prospective donors, but more pledges are still needed.

The Red Cross depends on a large collection from UMass to meet the growing needs for blood throughout the country. In past been the second largest in the state—Harvard being first.

In addition to helping others when he gives blood, the donor becomes insured under the Hampshire County Blood Insurance Program. This entitles him and his immediate family to receive all the blood they might need in the next 12 months. Without such insurance they would be asked to replace pint for pint.

The charter from the Federal government under which the American National Red Cross is auhtorized to collect blood states clearly how blood collected is to be distributed: 70 percent is to be used by community hospitals wherever it is needed, while 30 percent is designated for Federal institutions, including Veteran's and military hospitals. With stepped-up activities in Vietnam the military needs continue to increase.

The civilian need for blood is also increasing. New surgical techniques—open heart operations and organ transplants, for example—take up to 15 pints each. The treatment of anemias, child-birth hemorrhages, infant RH incompatibility, uncontrolled bleeding (hemophilia) and extensive burns are a few of the nonsurgical uses for blood.

UMass Not Interested in Bowl Bid

Ross Smith, Atlantic Coast chairman of the NCAA college division, was notified yesterday that the University of Massachusetts is not interested in a post season football bid.

The statement, issued by President Lederle, ends speculation that the Redmen might play in the Tangerine Bowl. Even if offered a bid, UMass will refuse it.

Possible reasons for the action include the large number of injuries on the football team, the undermanned state of the squad, and the fact that there are so many underclassmen on the team.

Folk Singers to Appear In Concert

by DANIEL MADDEN

Walk into any dorm and say, "Folk Singing Group," and chances are you'll get "Peter Paul and Mary" as an answer. PPM has become a by-word in the world of quiet guitars and straight, simple harmony.

The talented threesome, who rose to national prominence immediately following its formation in 1961, will apear in the Cage on Monday, November 21, at 8 p.m.

Peter Yarrow, the one with the beard, the only member of the group with formal musical training, is the trios arranger. Known as the "straightman", he's the unmarried one.

Paul Stookey, the one with the beard, came to folk singing from the chemical supply business. ("They thought I had lost my mind," he reminisced. "After less than a year I'd been given a private office and my own dictaphone." A sensitive mind hidden behind a barbed wit, he's a gifted composer and the business mind of the three.

Mary Travers, the one without the beard, who has rubbed elbows with the likes of Pete Seeger since childhood, was coaxed out of semi-retirement to complete the group. With a wide range of experience on and off Broadway, in groups and as a solo, Mary brought to partnership a voice that is considered the chief reason for their success.

Peter, Paul and Mary will appear in concert at Curry Hicks Cage 8 p.m. November 21, 1966. Tickets will be on sale Nov. 15-Nov. 21 from 10:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Student Union ticket office.

The unified stage presence molded from these disparate personalities will cast its acclaimed spell over the cage a week from Monday.

Publications Board

Professor Fights Criticisms

(A talk delivered by Ira L. Baker, High Point College, High Point, N. C., to the National Council of College Publications Advisers, Friday, Oct. 21, 1966)

I have sincerely believed that the Publications Board system is the best way to administer college student publications.

The most recurring argument against Publications Boards that I have met is that member often know very little about publications, especially if elected by popular vote. I shall not attempt to suggest the various solutions that might be offered to counteract these arguments.

However, perhaps a possible alternative to this first criticism would be in order here. Why not elect all members for two years, with only half of them being named annually. Thus half the members would have always had at least one year's experience. Administration and faculty representatives on the board might serve for many years, thereby assuring a surplus of experience in this group.

Another argument against the board system is that such an organization is in reality a back-seat driver and student editors do not like, as one put it, "people looking down our necks and getting in our hair." During the past week, the editor, managing editor, and sports editor of the Texas A&M Battalion, undergraduate newspaper, all were fired by the campus board of publications, the editor being replaced by the college Director of Information and Publications. Additional action eliminated the Letters to the Editor column.

Another complaint, especially from students, is that all too often Board members frequently have political and other taxes to grind, that student members frequently have political and other axes to grind, that student members have been known to run for the board for the expressed purpose to vote for —or against—a certain person for editor; or another board candidate submits for election on a platform of more fraternity coverage, or if he is an independent, more space for Non-Greeks.

A student business manager of a college newspaper contends that boards are "notoriously" slow in making petty as well as crucial decisions. Often these decisions should be made immediately, not in two weeks, he added.

One of the staunch friends of this Council, Fred Kildow, director of Associated Collegiate Press, suggests that perhaps boards should have two standing committees, finance and editorial, with both empowered to act on emergency matters between board meetings and later seek approval of their actions at the next regular board meeting.

Another nationally known authority on student publications feels that perhaps Publications Boards, despite their general usefulness, do introduce an unnecessary element in the relationship between the administration and the student publications.

He cited an example of one rather conservative university whose business members of the Publications Board had to be pushed rather hard to get a favorable vote prohibiting advertising with a racial designation.

In conclusion, it would seem from this brief discussion that wittingly or unwittingly, with malice but no forethought, or vice versa, there are weaknesses in the Publications Board system of control. Whether the Board is an honest-to-goodness foe there seems to be some lack of unanimity. But I don't feel that the flaws that have been exposed today are beyond redemption.

Frankly and in all sincerity I feel that one of the most useful roles that we as members of the NCCPA can assume is that of consultant, trouble shooter, or peacemaker, call the function what you will, whenever there is a Publications Board problem or crisis.

I would like to suggest, finally, that if we can assume that the Publications Board is a foe of the student, that we ourselves stand up and let the world know that the NCCPA is a friend of both!

University Plays Host To Management Leaders

More than 200 labor and management leaders from all parts of New England will participate in a case study of a labor grievance at the second annual Labor Arbitration Conference to be held at the University of Massachusetts on Monday, Nov. 14.

Sponsored by the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center and the UMass School of Business Administration in cooperation with the American Arbitration Associaiton, the conference will be devoted mainly to workshop discussions of a labor grievance and then arbitration of the issue. A highlight of the conference will be a luncheon address by AAA President Donald B. Straus.

After brief words of welcome from UMass Dean of Administration Leo F. Redfern, Dean of the School of Business Administration H.B. Kirshen, and Director of the Labor Relations and Research Center Ben B. Seligman, the case study will be presented to the group.

The conferees will then break up into four workshops to discuss and negotiate the case.

In the afternoon, everyone will gather in the ballroom for the arbitration of the case presented and discussed in the morning. Thomas Kennedy, professor of business administration in the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, will be the Arbitrator.

William F. Joy of the Boston law firm of Morgan, Brown, Kearns and Joy will serve as the counsel for the company. Counsel for the union will be Robert D. Manning of the Boston law firm of Angoff, Goldman, Manning and Pyle. After listening to both sides of the case, Arbitrator Kennedy will hand down a decision and explain his reasoning.

At the luncheon preceding the arbitration session, AAA President Donald B. Straus will address the participants. A graduate of Harvard College and the Harvard University School of Business Administration, Mr. Straus has had wide experience in the labor relations field.

From 1951 to 1956 he served as executive director of the Atomic Energy Labor Relations Panel. He is a former member of the New York State Mediation Board and has served as vice-president of the Health Insurance plan of New York.

Cooperating sponsors of the conference include the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO, the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the Boston Bar Association.

Those interested in registering may write to the conference office, Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

BISHOPS . . .

As the parent organization of all official Catholic groups, the NCWC has as its objectives, "The unifying, coordinating and organizing of the Catholic people of the U.S. in works of education, social welfare, immigrant aid, civic education and other activities."

A bishop governs each department.

By definition, the NCWC is the secretariat of the Hierarchy in the U.S. It is the successor of the emergency organization, the National Catholic War Council, founded by the bishops to supervise and unify the Catholic lay activities of the U. S. during World War I.

Every American Bishop of the Church, including U.S. territories and possessions has voice in the conference.

Oxford Dons Impressed By Students' Showing

It is a crisp fall day in Amherst and two UMass students are discussing John Mullen's punting ability.

That in itself is not unusual except that Mullen is not a football player. He did his punting this past summer on the lazy Cherwell River that runs in front of St. Hilda's College at Oxford University. Mullen, senior class President at UMass, was in England with a group of 124 American students who participated in the University's summer program at Oxford..

Seventy-five UMass students, undergraduate and graduate, and others from 32 institutions including Mt. Holyoke, Smith, Amherst, Wellesley, Dartmouth, Notre Dame, University of California, Washington State and Harvard had the privilege of studying under Oxford's finest dons in a most unusual program.

According to Dr. Ernest Hofer, program director and Associate Head of the UMass English Department, "The program was so successful and our American students did so well that all of the Oxford dons have volunteered to teach again next summer."

Massachusetts students paid $750 for six weeks in England. This fee included transportation, lodging, food, tuition and tours. Most students spent an extra $100 for other expenses.

Students could take two courses in English literature from 10 offered. They received three credits a course from UMass, graduate or undergraduate. Next year the group will be limited to 100 members, half of them graduate students.

Dr. Hofer says "These students all had excellent academic backgrounds, and despite the rigors of the course work they handled it beautifully."

What does it mean for an American student to get this type of exposure to Oxford ?

Culturally, each weekend there was an extensive tour of the countryside or one of England's many historic centers. These trips included visits to Stratford, Coventry, Salisbury, Stonehenge, the great country houses, the British Museum, and the theatre in London.

"On the less academic plan," says Hofer, "students had a chance to get out into the pubs and rub elbows with the people."

The benefits were not all one way. The Americans took over the entire St. Hilda's College at Oxford. The dons, used to rigid formal lectures, enjoyed the give and take demanded by the young Americans as well as their informality. They were delighted by the students' enthusiasm, warmth, and forthright points of view.

The Bursar at St. Hilda's became so attached to the young scholars that she suggested that Massachusetts construct a permanent building in a nearby meadow to assure continuity of the program.

Student comments in an anonymous questionnaire filled out after their return from Oxford were generally enthusiastic. One student, writing about the Oxford dons, said, "The faculty has been excellent. In large part, they set the tone of the program, and it is imperative to keey them at this high level.".

Most of the comments about the English food were favorable, although several of the Americans said they would have liked to have been served milk more frequently.

When asked whether they would be allowed to return another year, most students, despite their enthusiasm, felt that repeat applications, in all fairness, should be considered last.

The deadline for application to next year's program is Nov. 15.

"Let Your Greeting Help a Child"

A year ago UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund, received the highest recognition possible when it was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Today, in its 20th year, UNICEF is still endeavoring to save the lives of millions of children in more than 100 countries with an annual budget equivalent to what is spent on world armament in two hours of one day.

UNICEF is a semi-autonomous body in the United Nations which depends on voluntary contributions to keep its program working. This program, consisting of a global effort to combat disease, malnutrition, misery, and ignorance, is also aided by annual card and calendar sales held throughout the country.

This year, Panhellenic Council is sponsoring the Card and Calendar Sale in the Student Union Lobby from November 14-18.

This year's 13 designs, included on greeting cards and notes are the gift of some of the most tal they are available with a unique feature—season's greetings in the five official languages of the United Nations.

The 1967 UNICEF Engagement Calendar, which makes a wonderful Christmas gift, will also be sold by Panhellenic Council. For 1967, the Engagment Calendar, available for $2.50, is illustrated by a collection of watercolors and gouches painted by talented artists from every part of the world. These are all full-colour designs that center around the activities and happy moments of children in many lands.

Concern for the world's all too numerous sick and hungry children can be expressed by heeding UNICEF's annual plea: "Let Your Greeting Help a Child."

Diverse Background

Author Joins UMass Faculty

by HELEN LAZARRI

The University's English faculty this year has a man with a wide range of interests and a diverse writing background.

An author by profession, William Brandon is teaching a creative writing course here — his first experience in teaching.

In 1929, when he was 15 years old, Brandon worked for a small-town paper. Within two weeks, in order to retain his job as pony-wire man for the paper, he progressed from a two-finger search-and-peck typist to a very proficient one. The pony-wire man's job was to listen to and type news as it was dictated from a wire service office, requiring both an alert mind and quick fingers. Teletypes now carry the news to service clients.

However, Brandon's major interest turned to writing, which he has pursued actively for 30 years. Although he has no formal education, Brandon has reached a degree of achievement which many college graduates would be happy to claim. His many short stories hav appeared in a wide variety of publications and a couple dozen stories have been published in anthologies, here and abroad.

Prof. Philip Durham of the UCLA English department is preparing a collection of these stories, emphasizing the unusual range of work. Brandon has also written several essays, poems and translations in prose and poetry from French, Latin and Greek as well as two screen plays.

Among his major works are a book-length historical essay, The Men and the Mountain; a text, The American Heritage Book of Indians; and a history of the Santa Fe Trail on which he continues work. Such works are developed only through several years of intensive research, devoted time and effort, Brandon noted.

One of the books, The American Heritage Book of Indians, is in the University library and has also been published in a paperback edition. "It is the only serious attempt at such a synthesis yet undertaken," explained Brandon. The book is rather atypical for a text in that it reads easily, captures and holds the reader's attention, is far from dry and yet detailed enough to provide an adequate knowledge of the American Indian.

It shows Brandon's great personal involvement in the material and an unusual effort (at least for a text book author) to compile both technical and socially significant material that can be read easily. The text, in short, has an appealing style—a style which Brandon seems to be carrying into his classroom.

A slim, middle-aged man with an easygoing, pleasant manner, Brandon shows a deep concern for his students. He said he is enjoying his first year as a teacher and considers it a worthwhile experience. Having office hours several hours a day and encouraging frequent visits by

Orgy Planned At Historic Old Boston Church

Boston's historic Arlington Street Church will be the scene of an "intellectual orgy" on Saturday, Nov. 12.

Leading a 14-hour session of speeches, panels, and discussions will be poet Allen Ginsberg, author-lecturer Mrs. Bonaro Overstreet, psychologist Solomon Asch, and Ebony Magazine editor Lerone Bennett. Each will deliver a major address on "The Future of Freedom" and take part in audience discussion and panels.

Called a convocation, the marathon meeting is under the sponsorship of the Unitarian Universalist Layman's League. Its purpose, according to League Director G. Robert Hohler, "is to bring religion and the real world closer together. We are hoping for a creative confrontation."

Open to the general public, the Convocation is expected to attract over 1,000 persons from the New England area.

Beginning at 9:30 a.m., Mrs. Bonaro Overstreet, co-author with her husband, Harry, of What We Must Know About Communism and The Strange Tactics of Extremism will speak on "The Self—and Much More."

Lerone Bennett, editor of Ebony Magazine and author of the controversial book Confrontation: Black and White will speak at 11:00 a.m. on "Freedom: In Black and White."

Psychologist Solomon Asch, newly appointed director of Rutgers Institute of Cognitive Studies and author of Social Psychology will speak at 2:00 p.m.

A speakers' panel comprised of Mrs. Overstreet, Mr. Bennett, and Dr. Asch, and moderated by Dr. Jack Mendelsohn, Arlington Street Church's minister, will be at 3:30 p.m.

An informal reception will be held at 5 p.m. The evening will be capped by poet Allen Ginsberg's presentation at 8 p.m. His topic is "Public Solitude."

Sociology Club to Sponsor Sampling Bank of Students

Be plagued no longer by survey-takers in front of the Student Union or semi-serious interviewers attempting to execute their research projects above the din in the Hatch !

Doubt no longer need to exist about the validity of the survey itself or the intentions of the interviewer.

Although there is no known way of totally eliminating hack researchers and their lines (which are usually directed toward unsuspecting UMies), the Research Committee of the Sociology Club has devised a means for exposing these people as frauds in addition to providing a more adequate technique for those survey-takers who, believe it or not, are genuine.

This ideal, almost unprecedented in American colleges and universities, is to be realized very soon on this campus. The Research Committee will transform itself into a Sampling Bank making available a randomly selected sample of the student body (including undergraduates, grad students, and special students) of the University to all those interested in making studies on any subject which could relate in any way to University students.

This sample will be drawn according to the most scientifically pure techniques known to social science. Approximately seven variables include sex, class, college (Arts and Sciences, Education, etc.), Greek affiliation or non-affiliation, research (dorm, fraternity or sorority house, or off-campus), marital status and state or out-of-state permanent residence will be tabulated on each person falling within the sample. All of this information will be key punched on IBM cards and made available to anyone interested in making a study.

The Research Committee feels that this Sampling Bank will be an invaluable contribution to the validity of studies made of University students.

Not only will a large amount of the researcher's work be completed prior to his initiation of the project itself, but the sample mabe available to him will be one by which he can more scientifically test his hypotheses.

The Committee hopes that the Sampling Bank will significantly add to the number and the variety of studies done on University students. We also hope that the availability of this sample of a large and diversified University such as this one will encourage other researchers than those here on campus to execute research projects and perhaps to make generalizations to similar Univrsity populations.

The availability of the Sampling Bank is dependent on the publication of the permanent Student Directory. Relatively soon after the Directory is printed, the sample will be accessible to all those interested by contacting a member of the Research Committee.

Amherst Man Predicts Thirty Storms to Come

The area can brace itself for 31 snomstorms this winter. That's the word from Frederick Goodrich of Old Belchertown Rd., Amherst, who issued his annual forecast Sunday as the season's first snowfall blanketed the ground.

Goodrich, who has been predicting the number of storms each year since 1957, said he is usually within one storm of the actual number. His forecast for this winter is the same as last year's. He added that the snow this year "will come and go," with bare ground showing between storms.

The system used by Goodrich is said to have been used by the Indians, but he declined to divulge it. He said only that he learned it from his father, the late Herbert Goodrich, who predicted weather for 70 years.

Pioneering the Past

A new and exciting opportunity in England is now offered to College students wanting to spend next summer in Europe in an interesting way.

You may help to reveal the secrets of a Roman villa, an iron-age hill fort or the structure of a medieval town or Anglo-Saxon cathedral before they disappear. perhaps for ever.

You may help in this important work, earn credits, make international friends and receive valuable training in archaeology, by joining a program sponsored by the Association for Cultural Exchange, the British non-profit organization.

Volunteers first join a three-week seminar for training in British archaeology and excavation techniques at Westminster College, Oxford. They then split up into small groups for three or more weeks "digging" on an archaeological site.

Total cost of the program is 685 dollars, including round-trip air transportation from New York. Part scholarships are available to suitable students with a "B" plus average.

Write now for further details to United States Representative: Association for Cultural Exchange, 539 West 112th Street, New York 10025. Closing application date is expected to be beginning of January 1967.

College Graduates Earn Advanced Degrees

A higher percentage of today's college graduates is going on to receive post-graduate and professional degrees, according to data released recently by the U. S. Office of Education.

During the academic year ending June 1965—when Americans won more college and university degrees than ever before—master's dgrees showed a greater rate of increase than bachelor's degrees. Doctorates had the greatest percentage increase of all, the Office reported.

As in previous years, the field of education was the most popular among those earning bachelor's and master's degrees. Among those receiving doctorates, education was second to physical sciences by a small margin.

The annual survey also showed that:

In all, 667,592 degrees were earned by 410,573 men and 257,019 women. The total is 8 per cent more than in the 1963-64 academic year.

Bachelor's degrees, totalling 493,000 were up 7 per cent from the previous year. Master's degrees totalled 112,200, up 11 per cent, and doctorates reached 16,500, a 14 per cent increase.

First - professional degrees, granted chiefly in medicine, law, and religion and requiring more than four years of study, went up 10 per cent to 46,000.

The 118,500 bachelor's degrees in education accounted for nearly one-fourth of all bachelor's degrees. The 43,700 master's degrees in education represented about two-fifths of the degrees in this category.

The physical sciences led in doctorates, with 2,800. Education was second with 2,700 and engineering third with 2,100.

One Would Be Enough

By Paul Robert Hallock, Editorial Staff

The point cannot be stressed enough. We need an all-night establishment.

Last Friday, you read Jack Dean's "No Place To Go," which stated, quite simply, that, after 11 or 12 o'clock, there's no place to go.

Here are two possibilities to consider:

(1) An all-night restaurant.

(2) An all-night bookstore.

The possibilities are not as far-out as they might seem to would-be dissenters. There are entrances to both the Student Union and the Newman Center that could be used.

The northeast and southeast entrances of the Hatch could be kept open without any fear that the rest of the Union would be invaded. The south entrance to the Newman Center—the one that leads downstairs to the cafeteria—would be an ideal gate to a break for the many students who are regular all-nighters.

Paperback Booksmith in Cambridge has been operating for years from 9 A.M. Monday to 12 A.M. Sunday. With almost as many students here as in Harvard Square, business shouldn't be too bad. The Booksmith does business at all hours of the day and night.

In either case, more employment would be provided.

Both suggested places are central.

To have an eating place and a bookstore open all night would be ideal.

But, for the present, one would be enough.

Passing The Buck

By Jim Thompson, Editorial Staff

The first round of buck-passing is over concerning the regulations of open-house. No one said anything. No one dared to say anything because it is as touchy a question as curfews. That is one of the phenomena caused by persons in authority: posing a pointed question, offering the alternatives, and making a flat statement which says absolutely nothing.

Taking a look at the diverse persons asked for their opinion, we find highly respected members of the student body as well as the administration. Dean Curtiss and Dean Field refused to take a stand; John Greenquist, President of the Student Senate, said nothing and Jackie Hall, Chairman of the Women's Affairs Committee, passed the buck in accord with the others. And so it is left . . . sluffed-off to the dorms to decide.

What is the trouble? Why do these people, so directly concerned with the students, refuse to make up their minds? Perhaps they are just plain tired of making decisions that effect the whole university. Perhaps they aren't. That isn't for an editorialist to decide.

As for leaving the decision to the individual house, the inequity here lies in the various decisions that will arise. No house, as pointed out above, has an advantage of more mature members. The houses are about equal. The house councils are not.

Some councils have regular attendance; some do not. Some are dominated by house mothers; others are dominated by the house president; others are just plain wide-open affairs. If in fact the decision will finally rest with the house council, then it is the up to members of the house to actively seek out their representatives and express their views, one way or the other. But let's hope for efficacious reasoning and an enlightened decision from the administration.

What Are YOU Doing?

By Jack Dean, Day Editor

It's here.

Your chance to improve the curricula is at hand.

Your chance to disprove the "apathetic theory" is at hand.

But what are you doing?

For over a week Critique has had a box in the SU lobby counter just for you to suggest courses which you feel are in dire need of criticism or worthy of praise.

The result: 30 replies. Out of 12,000 only 30 have any opinion about their courses.

But there is still time. You still have your chance.

Take a minute tomorrow. Show that you really do have an opinion.

On the Political Scene

Bomb China?

By Mike Hersh, Political Editorialist

William Buckley has repeatedly called for an "immediate nuclear attack by the Strategic Air Command against Communist China's nuclear installations."

The contemplation of such an act is highly ludicrous. First, millions of Chinese troops would fan out through all of Asia. The United States would, therefore, be either driven out of Asia altogether, or get bogged down in an exhausting and fruitless war on many fronts against the world's largest army supported by local revolutionaries.

It is recognized by military men that a ten-to-one ratio is necessary to defeat an indigenous guerilla force. Thus an occupying force of no less than 25 million (!) would be needed. Since our allies would never support any nuclear action on our part, the brunt of manpower would fall on the U.S., which could never raise such a force while simultaneously meeting its other obligations.

Secondly, the radioactivity caused by nuclear explosions in China would be carried by an easterly flowing jet stream over the United States. "Tuesday and Wednesday, the radioactive cloud from China's latest nuclear explosion crossed the United States on a path 1,000 miles wide." (Worcester Telegram, Nov. 6) This factor makes us vulnerable even from our own nuclear warheads.

These are practical reasons why it is not feasible be bomb China, not to mention the moral aspect involved. Could we possibly justify the dropping of nuclear warheads on millions of defenseless civilians?

"With a Forked Tongue"

To the Editor:

One of the chief attributes that an institution for higher learning can claim is the high quality of the teaching that its faculty offer. That this fact is acknowledged as an accepted practice at the University of Massachusetts is evidenced by Provost Tippo's remarks published in the Mar. 31, 1966, issue of the Amherst Record Week where Provost Tippo stated, "the central emphasis of the faculty will be on teaching. . . ."

In light of this statement, the University is indeed fortunate in having Prof. Bernard Lovell in the Electrical Engineering Department. Prof. Lovell has demonstrated an excellent teaching ability in presenting to his students in an easily comprehensible form many of the complex problems of engineering.

It has recently come to light that Prof. Lovell's teaching contract will not be renewed for the academic year commencing Sept. 1, 1967. At the time of this writing, Prof. Lovell has resigned his teaching position at the University of Massachusetts, rather than have a non-renewal of contract appear on his enviable teaching record. Hence, future students at this University will be denied the superior teaching ability of Prof. Lovell.

Considering the above incident and the Mar. 1966 comments of Provost Tippo, it is obvious that Provost Tippo speaks with a forked tongue when he states, "the central emphasis of the faculty will be on teaching. . . ." Either the Provost is unaware of the contradictory situation, which would seem hardly the case, or Provost Tippo is placing emphasis on areas other than teaching.

Whatever the case, it is the advice of this writer, in his capacity as a student, that either the Provost offer Prof. Lovell a renewal of his contract, recognizing his superior teaching ability, or in the future make it publicly to the State Legislature, the elected representative of the taxpayers of Massachusetts, and to the taxpayers themselves that at the University of Massachusetts, the central emphasis of the faculty will NOT BE ON TEACHING.

The Bovine Ilk

To the Editor:

As believers in the Great Society we're all for Lyndon's domestic policies, but do the quadrupeds of the Pedernales (i.e., cows) have to be stationed across the country as guardians of the American psyche? Way up yonder in Tower I the mooing of these beasts has become more than noticable. Where is the tranquillity of yesteryear? Bad enough to suffer the early morning trauma of D. O'Connell & Sons, but to also have to endure the plaintive wailing of a herd of cows in the sweet eveningtime is just too much. What's going on out there anyway? Are they keeping the sexes segregated?

Some say a massive alter is being planned to offer up these sad creatures and hopefully assuage the ruffled feelings of some god (Metawampe?). If so, who is to be the high priest during the bloodletting? Or is it that we have some latter-day Jonah amongst us who should be cast aside? Maybe it's part of the newly revised 'Leather Curriculum.'

In Poor Taste

To the Editor:

I think that the section appearing in your last issue of the Collegian on the political candidates and the issues was well organized and printed at a pertinant time, and I could follow the election races better as a result of reading it. However, I feel that the statement by the editorial board, written by Don Aliferis, entitled Peabody for Senator was printed in poor taste with respect to the time of printing and with respect to placement in the newspaper.

The rest of the page was dedicated almost exclusively to unbiased fact, and this statement seemed to be a bit defensive. There was just a little too much contrast between the complete objectivity of the other columns and the subjectivity of the statement. I am not saying that the statement was in poor taste but the space in which it was placed made it look a little unfavorable for an editorial the night before election day itself.

The Cost of Quelling Communism: Democracy

To the Editor:

In the article in the last issue by Dr. Gerard Braunthal, the Indian students at the University asked the following question:

Since Pakistan has made a reapproachment with Communist China, why did the United States continue to pour military aid to Pakistan when that aid was designed to be used against Communism, and certainly not against India.

There is a subtle point involved in our military aid to Pakistan. Despite Pakistan's reapproachment with China, the United States realizes that Pakistan is not and will not become a communist nation. Pakistan's proximity to China places her in a strategic position and like India, she is a bulwark to Chinese expansion to the West.

Pakistan is a nation controlled primarily by a small elite, of which the military is their guardian. They would have much to lose from a social upheaval in the country. Our military aid to Pakistan is not only to prevent Chinese expansion, but to give the government the means to quell any internal uprising stemming from its many social and economic distresses. Though in recent years Pakistan has been under progressive leadership, we feel that if such an uprising should occur it might be communist controlled.

The policy of bolstering military establishments in lesser developed countries, to check radical social change and to preserve internal stability, has been in recent years a major element in United States Foreign Policy. This is quite evident in our relations with military dictatorships in Latin America. The dictatorship of Alfredo Stoessner in Paraguay is on example.

In order to check radical change in these countries, we have dedicated ourselves to supporting an undemocratic institution. The result has been the bolstering of traditional interest groups who have found it in their interest to prevent an equitable distribution of wealth and to prevent any far reaching change in the traditional social structure.

Furthermore, in countries which are behind in the technological, economic, and social advances of the twentieth century, a modern military gives them their only identity with the twentieth century. Since they cannot compete with giants such as the United States, Russa, or China, they confine themselves to their immediate geographical ara.

..Brazil, Egypt, and Pakistan are three countries which have shown such aspirations. With the tension in the world today, the power politics and armed conflicts of these small nations might result in a direct involvement by the major powers.

It is about time for the University to make a paying proposition of its many by-products. Let's see: Sandals for the Rousseauian elements, vests for the dandies, whips and thongs for the sado-masochists (always a strong lobby on campus). Even now, yes, now, they continue their gutty moans. Do you beseech some bovine Being up there in the lush Elysian fields to save them?

Do let us in on the secret, oh Master Planners, and tell us it's not some future Commons creation we hear out there in the night. Tell us some soft lie to sooth our troubled minds and we will go back to our studies and let the 'matter' ride.

Just Not Kosher . . .

To the Editor:

Miss Hearst discussed a crucially important issue when she questioned the scheduling of Saturday classes.

Must non-Christian students be forced to resolve the inner conflict of deciding which course of action is more important to them—to forego classes in observance of their belief or to compromise their religious integrity in pursuance of their academic goals?

The University policy of holding classes on Saturday is wrong, end beginnig the school year on the Jewish High Holy Days is unforgivable! The administrators wouldn't think of holding sessions on Christmas or Easter.

A careful re-evaluation of the present situation is mandatory, because what we have now just isn't kosher.

INSIDE THE STUDENT SENATE

YAHOO Editor ROGER JONES

Yahoo Lives!

by STUMP and MAX

Six months after the controversial Yahoo issue, editor Roger Jones still feels that it "was not censorship on the part of the legislature. It was political maneuvering."

Jones stated, "It was great for publicity. It forced certain individuals who had been lax in the past to take a look at campus publications and cooperate with them.

However, this political maneuvering seems also to have had an adverse effect. Yahoo does not officially have any Senate funds for publication. Is this to be the end of the campus humor magazine?

According to Jones, Yahoo will definitely publish.

As soon as the Pub Board is established, one of the major obstacles to publication will be eliminated. Jones feels that for safety's sake the magazine should not publish before the Pub Board has been consulted. Nonetheless, the first issue is expected to come out during this semester, in late Nov. or Dec.

In reference to the resignation last May of the Yahoo advisor, Wes Honey, Jones stated, "He resigned out of necessity. The fact that the Collegian dug up that story and put it on the front page six months later once again proves that the Collegian has all the facts at its fingertips."

Jones does not consider the lack of an advisor a serious threat to publication.

Funds for maintaining Yahoo will be derived from the sale of the magazine on and off campus. Additional income will be provided by advertisements and loans, some of which will hopefully come from the Student Senate.

In the past Yahoo as well as many Senate-financed publications had to "cut corners or go over their budget to meet their means." The proposed fiscal autonomy should allow Yahoo to function without former budget limitations.

All the money from sales will be invested back into the publication. Jones expects that this will facilitate improvements. He predicts "more imagination and creativity in the visual arts rather than remaining in the bonds of pure prose.

"One could probably observe this trend taking place in any type of publication for the past four or five years."

In this way Yahoo will be keeping pace with other college humor magazines. Jones feels that, like a picture, college humor can say 1,000 words —only one of which need be slapstick.

The purpose of a college humor magazine, in Jones' opinion, is "to provoke and entertain—to make people laugh." "College humor is one of the few outlets for striking out at any facet of human life."

With these factors in mind, the Yahoo staff will endeavor to produce a better and more satirical magazine. In order to accomplish this it is necessary to have full student support.

A special invitation is extended to Yahoo critics:

"Let the people who complain come forward with better material; if they don't come forward with better material; if they don't come forward with better material, let them shut up."

Senate Committees In Review

WAYS AND MEANS

A meeting of the Ways and Means Committee was held on November 3, 1966. Chairman Freedman spoke on the aims and objectives of the Committee and its functions.

Goals, to be set up by the body, will determine the use of its power over R.S.O. budget spending and its proper financial allotment.

Procedures for efficient operations, communication with the Finance and Budget Committees, and feasibly of work through subcommittees will also be considered.

Problems, which will concern the actions of the Ways and Means Committee were previewed. These include a review of: the R.S.O. Accounting system, summer R.S.O. spending, negligence of organizations to stay within the limit of their budgeted monies, the power to authorize R.S.O. expenditures being solely within the hands of their treasurers, and the possibility of University coverage of inter-dorm telephone costs.

Lastly, the financial state of the General Fund and its use was cited a major interest of the committee's work.

FINANCE

The Finance Committee met on November 3, 1966.

They discussed a request by the Student Senate to send four persons to a four day conference at Cornell University. The conference will be held from February 15 to 19, 1967 and will deal with topics of Vietnam and selective service.

Two proposals were brought before the Committee. The first proposal to send the delegates by plane was defeated 6-2. The second proposal to send the delegates by bus was passed 5-1.

The Prelaw Association presented a bill requesting appropriations for various speakers. The Committee reported favorably for funds for the first speaker. However, the remainder of the bill was tabled for one week because of a lack of dues levied on the Prelaw members, and a lack of properly elected officers.

The Premed Association has requested $540.00 and will appear before the Committee next Thursday, November 10.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

A meeting was held on November 4. The first coffee hour, held Thursday night at 8:30 p.m. was discussed. The topic for this coffee hour was Overseas Studies Opportunities.

Dr. Hofer, Associate Head of the English Department, spoke on the Oxford Program; Dr. William Havard, Head of the Government Department, spoke on the Bologna Program; and Dean H. Duncan Rollason, Dean of the Class of 1969, spoke on the Freiburg Program.

Approximately 40 students attended the coffee hour. The committee feels that the program was successful.

Senator Larry Marcus will report on his meeting with President Lederle and the feasibility o having him at our next coffee hour.

Plans for a booklet describing all RSO organizations and conditions for membership will be formulated. An information sheet will be drawn up to be distributed to each organization asking for a description and other pertinent information to be included in the booklet.

The idea of a student poll to be conducted second semester will be brought before the committee. The purpose of this poll will be to obtain an idea of student opinion in regard to the Senate and its effectiveness.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS

The committee met on November 4 to discuss four bills. S 13, concerning the feasibility of class officers speaking during the election of Senate officers, was amended to allow the privilege to the class presidents only. They will not be able to vote—just speak.

S 14, to allow the Stockbridge freshmen to be included in and given copies of the Freshmen Directory was amended to include "Swing-Shift freshmen.

S 22, to give graduate student representation in the Student Senate was voted on favorably.

S 23, concerning absentee balloting in Senate elections was voted on unfavorably.

Reapportionment of the Senate was brought up. Five plans have been produced thus far:

- Raise the number of students per senator
- Establish voting districts with senators elected at large from each district
- Establish a bicameral legislature
- Establish a limit on the number of senators
- Establish area senates

Plans 1 and 2 are being researched; others will be developed. Correspondence concerning apportionment has been sent out to 25 major state universities.

SERVICES

The Senate Services Committee has extended its interests into many areas of complaint. Last week, Services Committee members met with four administrators in search of solutions to problems. These include scarcity of left-handed desks in testing centers, poor lighting in University parking lots, unavailability of English and Speech exemptions to Stockbridge students, and the limited availability of the steam room and other facilities at Boyden.

Those who were interviewed, including Dean Bishaph, Dean Jeffreys, Mr. Ryan (Maintenance), and Mr. Lampert (Plant Director), were most cooperative and expressed their willingness to improve the situations where possible.

Senator Pat Petow spoke to library administrators in the hope of having the fourth level remain open longer at night. Specific requests were for later use of periodicals on the reserve desk level, and of in-library books. These requests are now being considered.

A sub-committee was organized for the project of evaluating the Index. There will be six members; two from sororieties, two from fraternities, and two commuters.

Senator Bob Dawson spoke to a representative of the Peter Pan Bus Lines on the question of having the route extended to Southwest and the Orchard. Such an extension is feasible but would require University permission. Road construction seems to be the only thing standing in the way.

All legislation passed is researched in committees; all student complaints are channeled through committees; all ideas for an improved UMass come from committee (committees backwards). We spend your money, we ask for your votes at election time; we want you (not your roommate) to help us.

Join one of our committees —we have ten (one for each of the Seven Wonders of the World, plus three).

Strategically located by the ride board in the Student Union is a box, inside of which we hope you will put your name and campus address. Within one week you will receive a letter on official Senate stationery (8½ x 11) telling how you may become a member of the Committee Corps. (If you submit your name 26 times you may even receive an alphabet.)

So the next time you have a snack, remember: If you only have one jar of peanut butter for a whole loaf of bread, you have to spread it pretty thin.

Help the Senate. We're in a real jam.

Treatise on Peanut Butter

"Y was I born?" moaned the chromosome. "Wait and z," said sister Gene.

Here comes the snow . . . there go the swans from the campus pond. Will the clock at Old Chapel ever be illuminated so you can tell when it's 9:23 p.m.? Did Justin C. Morrill have any brothers . . . what's Student Union's middle initial?

There are rumors that the Hatch will soon sell dill pickles on a regular basis. They are now furnishing tourniquets for those who use the ketchup pump.

Did James Whitcomb Riley ever really see frost on a pumpkin? . . . Was Walt Whitman ever a captain in the Air Force ?

Now that you're thinking U-Mass, allow me a few lines for an unpaid political announcement: We are soliciting again. No, we don't need jelly or marshmallow. WE NEED YOU !

The Senate is your voice . . . led us your larynx. The Senate is your head legislative body . . . may we borrow your brain?

Hampshire College Challenges Education

An experimental college without grades, departments and course requirements may soon be challenging existing educational institutions in this four-college area—and the challenge has been initiated by the established schools themselves.

Hampshire students will be allowed to complete their undergraduate work at their own rate. The academic program is organized in a "divisional sequence rather than through a fixed series of four academic class-years," and students will move from a Basic Studies Division to Intermediate Studies to Advanced Studies.

Although this sequence closely parallels a regular four-year curriculum, students will focus their work in interdisciplinary fields and concentrate on an aspect of a field. The emphasis in the "Advanced Division" will be on independent study and integrative seminars. The only grades will be pass, fail, and distinction; and student will move from one "division to another" on the basis of their performance in exams, not on a time-schedule.

To combat the "narrow-mindedness" of departments interested only in their own specialty, faculty members will hold rank in one of four schools—humanities, natural sciences social sciences, and a new field, linguistics and communications, according to Hampshire Trustee and Amherst President Emeritus Charles Cole.

"A great many of the most exciting things being done today," he said, "are happening between departments, on the boundaries of different specializations."

The emphasis on living-units, which encompass rooms, faculty office-studies and classrooms is intended to integrate the total academic environment. This residential concept was added to the original proposal as the result of suggestions made by students at the four colleges. There will be little or no social regulations as known on the campuses today, and no mention has been made of fraternities or gym and chapel requirements.

Hampshire is intended as a response to what its President, Franklin Patterson, calls the "cliche of the 20th Century, the 'Expansion of Knowledge.'" The school will attempt to educate its students for "process thinking," rather than for the accumulation of facts, and to stimulate students for creatvie self-study.

The Art of Etching

Self Expression in Platemaking

(Editor's note: Pamela Jay, class of 1968, is an Art major at UMass. She is now taking Printmaking, an introductory course which includes Etching. In the following article, she describes her feelings as an artist involved in the creative process.)

by PAMELA JAY

To begin, the first line must be placed, and it is the hardest. It's not so much the idea that this line is immutable, but that it is a small exposure, an opening of the artist's personality. Through the medium of the etchers needle, the personality of the etcher is exposed to his viewers.

At last, when sufficient courage is summoned, the first line is scratched with the etching needle. Then, more lines. Soon an image is formed, and the artist's ideas take shape. With each successive line, the artist's idea grows and he as an artist grows with them.

Now technique comes into play; the zinc plate is put into a solution of nitric acid and water. The first time the plate is put into solution, it's plate will be left in for only a few minutes. All the artist's hopes are contained in this first etch. Here, at this stage, he can tell if his ideas are of any merit. Here he can see the translation of a part of himself into visual experience.

After the plate comes out of the acid bath, the ground is removed. When the plate is clean, the process of printing can begin. The plate must be completely covered with sticky, black ink. As the ink is rolled on, the lines of the drawing seem to be rolled out.

When the lines are covered with the ink, the artist feels dismay; it seems as if his image is gone forever! The artist in a complete tizzy over the blackened plate, begins removing the ink.

To the beginning etcher he can't understand why he must apply ink only to remove it. The idea of all so much wasted ink is constantly on his mind. This process takes too much time for too few results, he feels. Although much ink is wasted, etching is one of the few ways to print a positive line. With other printing methods, the original line or area becomes white, and the untouched background is black. In etching the drawing does not have to be backwards.

When all the ink is removed the lines, which retain ink will print black. Printing is done by drawing the plate and a piece of danpened paper through a press, thus forcing the paper into the lines where it picks up ink.

With extreme trepidation, the artist lifts the paper off the plate. It is still moist to his hot little hands. Everyone in the studio around him stops working in expectation. Only the clock can be heard ticking away, oblivious to the work of art unveiled. The artist is not really sure what the image will look like until this electric moment.

After the first print is "pulled," the real work begins. Over and over, the artist scratches lines. Over and over, he puts the plate into acid. If he is lucky, he begins to build up blacks, and mold his image into the desired form. If he is not lucky, the lines, which are piled one on top of another, break down, leaving an ugly mottley grey area.

Many of the things which can happen to a plate, but most are things the artist doesn't want to happen. Everything that could possibly increase the artist's frustration can and usually does happen.

After etching a plate 8, 9, or 84 times the artist gets sick of it all. He doesn't even want to look at a print again—not even the final edition or the series of finished prints from his plate. All the freshness of the artist's first "inspiration" is so worked over, that he must be very careful not to ruin the print through lack of interest and disgust.

When the work goes as it should, which is rare, a growing elation overtakes the artist. At last, a true expression of his inner self emerges.

Now the artist feels a sort of impatience; his only wish is to begin another plate, in which he can correct all his mistakes, and carry his ideas and techniques to a further degree. The artist is never satisfied with the print he is working on. He always has an eye toward the next print, the next exposure of a secret part of himself.

NEWS STAFF MEETING TONIGHT 6:30

UMass Boasts "Unique" Department

The fields of restaurant, hotel and business management have been expanding greatly and UMass has responded significantly to their demands for new personnel.

An increase in airplane and cross-country automobile travel has spurred the growth of these businesses. The result has been a call to qualified persons to fill ownership, sales, and managerial positions.

The department of Restaurant and Hotel Management operating as a part of the UMass College of Agriculture is "unique" because of the facilities its affords its students and the type of program it offers.

In the $2 million Chenoweth Laboratory, the department has the latest in kitchen, testing and experimental equipment.

According to Dr. Donald E. Lundberg, Professor of Food Science and Technology, "All of the gas appliances in the food service lab are on wheels, which along with the other equipment, make it one of the finest demonstration classrooms in the world."

A $7 thousand dining room furnished by the Howard Johnson Corporation provides an elegant atmosphere for testing the results of food planning and preparation by the aspiring restauranteurs and hoteliers.

Two programs are offered for a major. A two-year program leading to an Associate of Arts degree is available leading through the Stockbridge School. This program is primarily for those interested in the technical operations of a restaurant or

The four-year program integrates restaurant and hotel courses with the regular University requirements, and applicable courses from the schools of Home Economics and Business Administration.

Both programs require summer work in a restaurant or hotel. Those in the four-year program program usually concern themselves with front office work, sales, food distribution and food or beverage operation.

In any case graduation virtually assumes well-paying and practical employment as these fields continue to expand rapidly, especially among such franchised companies as Holiday Inn and Howard Johnson. 175 students are taking advantage of the present opportunities.

Mission Director to Speak

The Rev. James J. Wilmes, Eastern Field Director for the Glenmary Home Missioners, will be guest speaker at the Newman Center on Sunday, Nov. 13 at 8 p.m. His topic for discussion will be "Poverty in Appalachia."

Fr. Wilmes is a former Chicago diocesan priest who has ordained at Mundelein, Illinois on May 1, 1952.

After he joined Glenmary, Fr. Wilmes was assigned for seven years to the Smoky Mountains of North Carolina, where his parish was 1500 square miles. Of the 45,000 souls under his care, only 120 were Catholic and these were scattered over 3 counties and a Cheroke Indian reservatiqn.

His pastoral duties there included care of 5 mission chapels, a Newman club at Western Carolina College, daily devotional radio programs on two stations, weekly news articles for the county papers on the spiritual life and marriage problems, a Church building program, and 1500 miles a month traveling in order to give instructions and perform the usual duties of a parish priest. For three years before being assigned to Fairfield in January 1960, he was Director and Dean of Studies at Pius XII Pastoral Center, a postgraduate internship for newly ordained priests near Hayesville, North Carolina.

Last year, thousands of lawyers, bankers, accountants, engineers, doctors and businessmen went back to college.

And not just for the football games.

We'd like to clear up what appears to be a misunderstanding. It is somewhat popular on campus to decry a business career on the grounds that you stop learning once you start working for Cliché Nuts & Bolts.

That idea is groundless.

We can't speak for Cliché, but we can for ourselves—Western Electric, the manufacturing and supply unit of the Bell System. 6 out of 10 college graduates who have joined us over the past 10 years, for example, have continued their higher education.

How're these for openers:

W.E.'s Tuition Refund Plan lets employees pursue degrees while working for us. Over 6 thousand have attended schools in 41 states under this plan. We refund more than $1 million in tuition costs to employees a year.

To name another program: advanced engineering study, under the direction of Lehigh University, is conducted at our Engineering Research Center in Princeton, N. J. Selected employees are sent there from all over the country for a year's concentrated study leading to a master's degree.

You get the idea. We're for more learning in our business. After all, Western Electric doesn't make buggy whips. We make advanced communications equipment. And the Bell telephone network will need even more sophisticated devices by the time your fifth reunion rolls around. The state of the art, never static, is where the action is.

At Western Electric, what's happening is the excitement and satisfaction of continued doing and learning. If this happens to appeal to you, no matter what degree you're aiming for, check us out. And grab a piece of the action.

Teacher Transferred Over Themes on Seduction

CHAPEL HILL, N. C. Oct. 22—"To His Coy Mistress," a poem about seduction written more than 300 years ago by Andrew Marvell, one of the great poets of the Puritan period in England, has risen to stir a tempest on the campus of the University of North Carolina.

The clouds began to gather when Michael Paull, an instructor in freshman English, assigned his class to write a theme on the subject of "To His Coy Mistress," a poem that appears in many college textbooks and anthologies used in classwork. The resulting themes were read aloud and some of the students found them embarrassing. At least one regarded some of them as vulgar.

The instructor, also somewhat embarrassed, asked that the themes be rewritten.

Student Wrote Parents

One of the students apparently wrote her parents about the incident and the parents brought it to the attention of WRAL-TV, a television station in Raleigh with right-wing views that has been a frequent critic of liberalism at the university. Only days before Jesse Helms, commentator for the station, had been critical of an article on physical love that appeared in the Carolina Quarterly, campus literary magazine of which Mr. Paull is the editor.

All 22 of Mr. Paull's students signed petitions requesting his return to teaching duties. Between 200 and 300 students and faculty members organized into the Committee for Free Inquiry met and asked that Mr. Paull be reinstated and that a review board be set up in the English Department "to determine whether or not Mr. Paull's effectiveness as a teacher has been damaged to such a degree as to necessitate his reassignment to nonteaching functions."

East-West Center Offers Scholarships

The East-West Center, an experiment in international education involving students from the United States, Asia and the Pacific, is offering 70 scholarships to Americans for the 1967-68 academic year.

Initially awarded for one year, these scholarships are for graduate work in Asia-Pacific area studies and languages at the University of Hawaii. Some qualified students may have their grants extended in order to complete their degree programs and are generally given an opportunity for study and research in Asian or Pacific countries as well as in Hawaii. Scholarships provide for transportation, tuition, room, board, some books and incidental expenses.

Through life at the Center, the more than 600 students from 30 nations learn about different cultures and often gain a deeper appreciation of their own.

The University of Hawaii (enrollment nearly 19,000) has long had an academic outlook toward Asia and the Pacific—a natural result of the multicultural heritage of the 50th state.

The East-West Center was established six years ago by the United States Congress in cooperation with the University. In addition to providing educational opportunities for graduate degree candidates, the Center sponors non-degree academic and technical training programs. Still another program brings leading scholars of many countries to the Center as specialists-in-residence. A common goal of all Center activity is creation of a climate encouraging international understanding and good will.

Students interested in working toward an advanced degree while taking part in this dialogue among cultures should contact the dean of their college for additional information, or write to the

Gibbs School Awards

Two national scholarships for college senior women are offered for 1967-1968 by the Katharine Gibbs School. These awards were established in 1935 as a memorial to Mrs. Katharine M. Gibbs, founder and first president of the School.

Each scholarship consists of full tuition ($1,350) for the secretarial training course, plus an additional cash award of $500, totaling $1,850. The winners may select any one of the four Gibbs schools for their training—Boston, New York, Montclair, or Providence.

Winners are chosen by the Scholarship Committee on the basis of college academic record, financial need, and potentialities for success in business.

Application blanks may be obtained by writing to: Memorial Scholarship Committee, Katharine Gibbs School, 200 Park Avenue, New York, New York 10017

Augie to the Rescue:
FREE MONEY

by SUSAN RUCKSTUHL

Augie of Augie's Tobacco Shop has set aside $500 as a loan service to any students who shows his ID card. A student may borrow $5 for a period of one week without interest.

If the loan is not repaid promptly, other students will not be able to take advantage of this service. Since only $500 has been set aside, after that amount is loaned out another student cannot borrow $5 until $5 is returned by another student. Augie said that so far only $160 has been out at one time.

If after the allotted time the money is not returned, a letter is written to the parents of the borrower explaining the situation. Augie remarked that so far students have cooperated very well and that he doesn't feel there will be any trouble in the future.

There is no gimmick attached to this loan service. Augie is just promoting good will by helping students who need cash immediately and who know they will be able to pay him back within a week.

He says sometimes a student will come into the store who needs a book right away or who needs the money for some other reason. If they know there will be a check coming from home soon, he tries to help them out.

It is just in time for the weekend when you can surprise your best girl by taking her to a dance and actually dancing with her. Everyone is welcome to learn.

MAN and MACHINE:
"Notorious Victory"

Automation and technology of the computer age—and their effects on human ends and human purpose— is the subject of a new book by a UMass labor specialist and professor of economics.

"Most Notorious Victory," subtitled "Man in an Age of Automation," by Ben B. Seligman, director of the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center, will be published by the Free Press in New York, providing a comprehensive 441-page examination of the challenges of automation.

Economist Robert L. Heilbroner in his foreward to "Most Notorious Victory" calls Seligman's book" . . . particularly important. It is the most exhaustive, the most encyclopedia, and certainly the most seriously challenging treatise on the subject that I know of . . . It is really a book about tomorrow."

The UMass author argues that technology's "notorious victory"—the rapid adaptation of automation in our economy — threatens to destroy essential human qualitits. The work forsees automation's threat to individuality, reveals a number of problems that seem destined to con front factory and office workers, reviews in detail what economic and social theory has had to say about the phenomenon of automation to date.

It is Seligman's thesis, outlined in his preface, that modern technology is by no means a consequence of increments of accident; rather there exists now an internal drive with an independent force that conditions man and his works.

A New Jersey native, Prof. Seligman is a graduate of Brooklyn College and has attended Columbia University and the New School for Social Research. He was research and educational director for Retail Clerks International Association, AFL-CIO, before his appointment to the University in June, 1965. Prof. Seligman has also been a lecturer in sociology at Brooklyn College, international affairs analyst for the United Auto Workers, and an associate fellow of the Institute for Policy Studies.

Join the Peace Corps... or join General Electric

Let's face it, the Peace Corps isn't for everybody. (Neither is medicine, law or social work.) But you can get a lot of the same kind of satisfaction from a job with General Electric.

Because we, too, are trying to make life on earth more livable.

That can mean a job designing a new satellite to forecast weather. Or supplying nuclear reactors to generate electricity more cheaply than ever before. Or controlling smog in our cities and pollution in our streams.

It can mean better lighting to cut down crime. It can mean new rapid-transit systems to unclog traffic.

All it takes is brains, imagination, drive and a fairly rugged constitution. These qualities can get you a job with General Electric — or with the Peace Corps.

If you choose the Peace Corps, we'll understand. But when the day comes that you leave the Corps, remember us. You'll still be young, and at General Electric, the young men are important men.

Ski Hopefuls to Meet November 17

Candidates for the varsity ski team will meet Thursday, Nov. 17, at 7 p.m. in the Nantucket Room of the S.U. to organize the fall training schedule, according to Coach Bill MacConnell.

Returning from last year's squad are co-captains Colin Garstang and Tom Pittendreigh and four other veteran racers. The six paced UM to a 77-13 record in nine meets against 11 colleges last fall.

The Redmen finished second in the New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference in 1965-66, while compiling the best ski season in the history of the sport at UMass.

With Garstang, a winner of four gold medals a year ago, and Pittendreigh, who copped one, prospects for the upcoming season look good.

Amherst, after a year of rebuilding, will be much stronger and Boston U., with its entire team back, will be very strong. Other teams competing in all races are AIC, Boston College, Bentley College, Boston U., Northeastern and Tufts.

The 1967 N.E.I.S.C. race schedule follows:

Race Sponsor	Date	Race	Area	Location
A.I.C.	Jan. 28	Slalom	Middlebury Snow Bowl	Middlebury, Vermont
Boston College	Jan. 29	Giant Slalom	Middlebury Snow Bowl	Middlebury, Vermont
Amherst College	Feb. 4	Slalom	Dartmouth Skiway	Lyme, New Hampshire
UMass	Feb. 5	Downhill	Dartmouth Skiway	Lyme, New Hampshire
Bentley College	Feb. 18	Giant Slalom	Mount Sunapee	Newbury, New Hampshire
Tufts	Feb. 19	Slalom	Mount Sunapee	Newbury, New Hampshire
Northeastern	March 4	Giant Slalom	Mount Whitier	West Ossipee, New Hampshire

Coach Bill MacConnell spent last winter smiling as the ski team, best ever at UMass, compiled 77 wins and only 13 losses.

Western Mass. is well represented on the varsity soccer team. Shown above with Coach Larry Briggs are, from left to right, front row: Lorin Tarr (Springfield), Marty Smith (West Springfield), Mike Russo (Deerfield), Gary Gibbons (Longmeadow), and Gerry Cellilli (Ludlow). Back row, same order, are: Tom Kakley (Springfield), Phil Bozrnhard (West Springfield), Dave Jekanoski (Hadley), Bob Dubiel (Easthampton) and Bruce Allen (Fairview).

Booters Play New Hampshire In Season's Finale Saturday

by TIM MURPHY
Sports Staff

Necessity, they say, is the mother of invention. Experimentation must be a maternal aunt.

UMass soccer mentor Larry Briggs, currently in his 35th year of intercollegiate soccer wars at UMass, is familiar with the aforementioned sisters.

In last Saturday's contest with Coast Guard at New Haven Briggs courted the latter. In the second half of the game won by the Redmen he employed mass substitution—committing entire offensive and defensive lines — instead of the usual player or two at a time.

The Redmen were in command of the game throughout. But Briggs, noting that many of his starters were seniors who had played the lion's portion of each game, decided to experiment with his juniors and sophomores—the core of next season's squad.

The experiment, he explained, "worked out quite well. The boys that were sent in were not outclassed by any means. They definitely held their own and, additionally, provided rest for the starters."

One line that was particularly impressive included Tom Ward, Bruce Allan, Pete Makhambera and Charlie Stacy. Briggs moved starting center foreward Aba Ayanaba to the wing position to balance the group.

Briggs will probably go with the same format in Saturday's contest with New Hampshire here. A UNH win relegates the Redmen to third place in the Yankee Conference while a U-Mass win insures second place. The game, UMass' last of the season, will begin at 10:30.

The current Redmen record is 5-3-1.

Rising Frosh Gridders Host UNH Friday

The rapidly improving U-Mass freshman football squad will close out a successful season Friday when it tangles with the Wildcats of New Hampshire.

The contest will be the fifth of the year for the Little Redmen. Game time is 1:30 at Alumni Stadium.

Under the leadership of rookie mentor Burley Crowe, the frosh have compiled a 3-1 record, including wins over B.U., Rhode Island and UConn. UNH also boast wins over the Huskies and Rams.

There will be no admission charge to the contest.

Harriers Third in NE Meet

UMass cross country team, under the leadership of Coach Bill Footrick, compiled a total of 144 points to finish in a tie for third place Monday in the New England College Cross Country Championships at Franklin Field, Boston.

Thirty-one schools competed in the meet as Providence College copped first place while Central Connecticut took second.

Undefeated Ambrose Burfoot of Wesleyan cut 16 seconds from the course record, covering the 4.7 mile course in 22.15. Paul Harris of Providence finished second, 48 seconds off the pace, leading a successful defense of Providence's team title for the second straight year.

The old mark for the course was set by Barry Brown of the Friars last year.

Sebo Mamo, exchange student at Colby who was an Olympic 1500 meter contender at age 17, won the freshman contest cutting 14 seconds off the former record with a 15.0 trip over 3.1 miles.

The top ten schools and total points:

Providence	60
Central Connecticut	127
UMass	144
Brown	144
Springfield	159
New Hampshire	183
Northeastern	220
Connecticut	239
Wesleyan	239
Tufts	274

Presenting The Drinking Song for Sprite:

"ROAR, SOFT-DRINK, ROAR!"

(To the tune of "Barbara Fritchie")

Traditionally, a lusty, rousing fight song is de rigeur for every worthy cause and institution. But we wrote a song for Sprite anyway. We'd like you to sing it while drinking Sprite, though this may cause some choking and coughing. So what? It's all in good, clean fun. And speaking of good, clean things, what about the taste of Sprite? It's good. It's clean. However, good clean things may not exactly be your idea of jollies. In that case, remember that Sprite is also very refreshing. "Tart and tingling," in fact. And very collegiate. And maybe we'd better quit while we're ahead. So here it is. The Drinking Song For Sprite. And if you can get a group together to sing it--we'd be very surprised.

Roar, soft drink, roar!
You're the loudest soft drink
we ever sawr!
So tart and tingling, they couldn't keep you quiet:
The perfect drink, guy,
To sit and think by,
Or to bring instant refreshment
To any campus riot! Oooooh--
Roar, soft drink, roar!
Flip your cap, hiss and bubble,
fizz and gush!
Oh we can't think
Of any drink
That we would rather sit with!
Or (if we feel like loitering)
to hang out in the strit with!
Or sleep through English lit' with!
Roar! Soft drink! Roar!
Yeahhhhhhhhhhhhhhh, SPRITE!

Sprite

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

The Bean Pot . . . . . . Bringing It All On Home

Redmen Seek Yankee Clincher Against UNH

Since the first practice session, Coach Vic Fusia and his staff have dedicated themselves to one task: bringing the Yankee Conference Beanpot back to Amherst. A dearth of able-bodied players and some rugged opposition became the big problems in their plans.

It took some good breaks like recovered fumbles, intercepted passes, and line-drive field goals, to make a 4-0 Conference record, but it also took a defense that came through in the clutch.

Saturday at 1:30, the Redmen tackle New Hampshire at the Stadium, and, as Fusia says forcefully, "This game is for all the marbles." Should UMass win, it will win its third Conference title in four years.

New Hampshire's main asset is a quarterback that spectators may have trouble seeing. His name is Bill Estey, and he stands 5'6" and weighs about 140 pounds in full football regalia. He's also a tough man for opponents to see; he has had three lengthy returns of kickoffs or punts and is dangerous on rollout plays.

"He's all over the park," Fusia says. "We'd better get to him fast."

The coach holds the rest of the Wildcat squad in high regard: "They've been in every game they've played this year, and they can be explosive offensively. They've lost two one-pointers."

U.N.H., which beat Maine and gave Vermont a tough battle, is loaded with sophomores. The top running backs are Bill Phillips, Tom Kasprzak, and Bob Paul, while tackles Al Witteman and Vince Martino are tough men to budge on defense.

For the Redmen, defensive back Mike McArdle is a doubtful starter. He suffered a bruised hip in the Holy Cross game. And the condition of Greg Landry is in doubt. The quarterback was running a fever during last week's game, but came through with a courageous job in the final minutes. He is recuperating at the Infirmary.

Key figures in the successful Redmen football season are: (top photo) Co-captains Ed Toner and Rod Brooks and, (bottom photo) left to right, End Coach Fred Glatz, Asst. Backfield Coach John Bamberry, Frosh Coach Burley Crowe, Line Coach Ted Schmitt, Line Coach Bob Graham, Backfield Coach Jack Delaney and Head Coach Vic Fusia.

Adams Disintegrates SPE for IM Grid Crown

by ROGER KIPP, Sports Staff

Adams' Smashers ripped the SPE squad, 28-7, for the campus football championship last night to gain a measure of revenge for the previous dominance of the game by the Fraternities.

The Smashers started as if they were not at all fazed by the stature and prowess of the SPE team.

In the early going, Bob Miller, QB of SPE, found it tough going on the slippery turf, as he threw mostly incompletions. On the first set of downs, however Bob put in the air a perfect TD pass, but it was too slippery for Rick Parthum to handle.

After giving up the ball to the Smashers, Al Craig, the Smashers' ace QB, got good blocking and threw three straight complete passes to move the Smashers in for a TD. Al covered the last few yards with a pass to Bruce Crampton. He then roamed around the backfield until he was able to hit Dick Klemansky with a PAT pass and make the score 7-0.

After the ensuing kickoff, Paul Whalen, on the first play of the series, intercepted a Miller bomb, and the Smashers proceeded to move upfield again. This particular drive fizzled at the SPE 20-yd. line, but the Smashers came back a short time later to score as Craig found Bob Hansen alone in the left corner of the end zone.

Craig, still getting good blocking, threw through a maze of defenders to Steve Johnson for the PAT and a 14-0 halftime lead.

In the second half, the Smashers took up where they left off. After taking the kickoff, Craig used the short pass to quickly bring the Smashers in for their third TD, much to the astonishment of SPE. Al covered the last few yards to Bob Hansen, who made a fine jumping catch. Craig's pass to Klemansky was good for the PAT.

SPE was not about to give up. Miller, a sensational QB in his own right, started to utilize the Smasher strategy of throwing short passes on the soggy field, and it worked. He pitched to Rick Parthum for a TD, quickly fired the PAT to Bob Howe, and SPE was back in the ballgame.

At this point, a furious SPE rush, led by Mark Chenoweth, started to get to the cagey Craig and the Smashers quickly relinquished the ball.

Here was the true turning point. SPE roared to the Smasher 5-yd line and had apparently scored their second TD in a matter of only five minutes time, but the tally was called back for a penalty.

From about 15 or 20 yards ont, the spirited SPE squad almost scored again, but Parthum was ruled out of the end zone on a pass from Miller.

With time dwindling, the Smashers attempted to sit on their 21-7 lead. However, Craig, while attempting to eat up the clock by running around the backfield, pitched a bomb to Klemansky who romped for the fourth TD of the night. Mr. Craig found his favorite target, Klemansky, again for the point after-TD and soon the game ended.

Credit is due the SPE outfit, who played a greater game than the score indicated. Their rush was fierce, and even when down, 21-0, SPE refused to give up. The poor playing conditions were of no help either. It was a hard fought contest which left neither team anything to be ashamed of.

Committee Questions Preparation of Food

by LEWIS SMITH

Preparation of food was the major topic of discussion at the last Food Services Committee meeting. Responding to complaints that breakfasts are often poorly prepared, the commons directors said that they realize a problem exists. Toast is usually cold and hard, and eggs are sometimes poorly prepared.

Attempts to rectify these problems are constantly being made by the commons directors

On the question of "mystery meat" the commons directors said that what the student considers the same meat is actually a variation. of different meats like veal and pot roast. More variation of meats was suggested by the Senate Services sub-committee.

Another topic discussed was the requirement that all Southwest students eat at the Southwest Commons. This is an exception to the general University policy at other commons.

The following proposal to rectify the situation was made by Senator Lewis Smith of William James House. The bill will appear in the Student Senate on Wednesday. In essence his bill asks that Southwest Commons follow general university policy in regards to dining commons rules.

The point was made that contrary to rumor, students who are not holders of meal tickets can get jobs at the dining commons.

Also a study will be made in regards to summer meal prices.

Transferring of meal tickets was discussed but nothing concrete was determined. Further discussion will be based on a bill by Student Senate Vice-president Tim Cunningham. The bill states in part: "Meal tickets shall be transferred at the discretion of the student who has legal ownership of said ticket."

Peace Corps Looking for 11,000 To Begin Training in June

by GORDON DAVIDSON, News Editor

Five Peace Corps recruiters, all returned overseas volunteers, will be in the SU Lobby all this week. They are part of an effort of the Peace Corps to recruit 11,000 applicants to begin training in June 1967 to serve in 1 of 53 countries.

The Peace Corps booth will feature posters, Peace Corps literature, volunteer's personal slides, and application forms. The five volunteers will answer questions concerning qualifications, programs and opportunities in the Peace Corps and opportunities for returned volunteers.

The five recruiters have served in Ethiopia, Liberia, Cameroon, Ecuador, and Venezuala, with projects including volunteer secretary, teaching and community development.

The week's program will also include films on Kenya and India, and talks by three additional specialized recruiters. A South American volunteer will speak on Monday and Tuesday on Agriculture. A nurse who served in India will speak Tuesday on nursing, and a physical education specialist who served in Indonesia and Thailand will talk on Wednesday and Thursday.

The recruiters will have the "Evolution and The Death of God"

"Evolution and the Death of God" was Father Raymond T. Nogar's topic last Tuesday at a general Newman Club meeting.

Fr. Nogar began his interesting and well humored lecture by explaining that in the old theory of life which Christianity grew up in "Camels, were camels, were camels . . ." "Though Darwin a new world subject to space and time was born. It became "my world and my time."

Fr. Mogar stated that diverse sources pointed to evolution, which is dissent with modification, as the only valid conclusion.

Man, is the only animal that can put two sounds together to make a sentence. While lecturing another group, Fr. Mogar had been asked a contriversial question. If he found a monkey who could put sounds together, what would he do. He calmly replied, "I'd baptize him."

There are those who believe that God is outmoded. They can do the things they once asked of Him. Fr. Mogar concluded that God is not dead. God is the only way to find meaning in the absurdity and disorder of life.

Fr. Mogar's lecture gave many students a new insight into the problems of evolution and death of God.

Davis to Discuss Economic Development

Kingsley Davis, one of the world's foremost sociologists in the field of population and demography, will be speaking on "Population Shifts and Economic Development" on November 17, at 8:30 P.M. in Mahar Auditorium.

Mr. Davis, professor of sociology at the University of California at Berkeley, is the author of Human Society, an introductory textbook which, although written more than fifteen years ago, is still widely used both in the United States and abroad. He has written Population of India and Pakistan, and is co-author of Modern American Society, a group of readings.

Professor Davis's accomplishments are extremely impressive. He was the United State's representative on the United Nations Population Commission from 1955 to 1961. He has also been research associate at the Office of Population Research at Princeton, the associate director and director at the Bureau of Applied Research and president of the American Sociological Association and also the Population Association of America.

Professor Davis is an authority in fields besides that of population growth. He is equally impressive in the sociology of the family and philosophy and logic of the behavioral sciences in general.

In both his books and lectures, Mr. Davis's presentation is lucid, fully comprehensible and fascinating to the non-specialist. He is an excellent and dynamic lecturer.

"Symposium" on Draft

A meeting for the preparation and organization of a "Symposium" on the Draft will take place Wednesday, November 16, at 8:00 P.M., under the direction of Professor Joseph A. Della Grotte, in Worcester "A", Student Union.

The Symposium is intended to provide a full discussion and exposition of the theory, operation, practice and implications of the Draft System.

All those interested — faculty and students from all four colleges—in working for the success of this Symposium, whether as participants in a study group, as potential discussion leaders in workshops following upon the conference, or whether as conference planners and organizers, are invited, even urged, to attend.

"A Major Minor Art"

James Leedy of the Kansas City Art Institute will present a demonstration and lecture on ceramics at the University of Massachusetts Monday, November 14. The ceramics demonstration is scheduled for 10 a.m. in Munson Annex. Mr. Leedy's lecture on "Ceramics: A Major Minor Art" will be given in Room 61, Bartlett Hall, at 8 that evening.

A graduate of William and Mary College with a bachelor of fine arts degree, Leedy holds an M.S. degree from Southern Illinois University and an M. A. from Michigan State University. He has taught at Montana State University, Ohio University, is presently a member of the faculty of the Kansas City Art Institute and is a potter, painter and paintmaker.

Leedy has had several one-man shows and has exhibited his works in both regional and national exhibitions. Both the demonstration and lecture are open to the public without charge.

Brooks Hays

"POLITICS '66"

A former U. S. Congressman and a distinguished author and political scientist will deliver public lectures at the University of Massachusetts on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 15-16.

Brooks Hays, former special assistant to President Lyndon Johnson and former Democratic congressman from Arkansas will discuss "Politics, '66" on Wednesday, Nov. 15, at 8:15 p.m. in the Worcester Room of the Student Union.

Currently serving as the UM Distinguished Professor of Practical Politics, Mr. Hays has had a distinguished career in state and federal service for nearly four decades. His talk is being sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha, the honorary political science fraternity.

What's Happening?

Motivation for Crime Most Important Ingredient

by PAM METAXAS, Staff Reporter

"The most important ingredient of a crime novel is the motivation for the crime," said Roy Stratton, well-known crime fiction writer, who was speaking last Tuesday night.

He went on to add that the other two ingredients are suspense and realism, in a speech entitled, "Crime Novel—How to Write One."

Murder should be the crime dealt with in the novel for the simple reason that "murder has the most stature and impact," he said. The author must have a knowledge of the subject he is going to write about such as the facts of pathology, drugs, interior decorating, laws that deal with the crime in question.

Stratton emphasized that every life experience can be used while writing. "No experience is too awful, everything can be used, including incidents your friends tell you about."

"There are stories all around you. Dig ideas out of your subconscious," Stratton urged the audience. "Everyone has some kind of experience, draw on it!"

He also listed some of the rules that govern crime fiction writing:

- Novel must involve murder
- It should be about 60,000-80,000 words
- Suspects should be unknown
- Criminal should not be anyone the reader has facts about
- Should avoid supernatural
- Murderer should never be insane
- Don't treat murder flippantly
- Motives should be plausible-never suicide or an accident
- Should involve strong emotions such as hate or jealousy
- Should have plenty of conversation

The 8-10 principal characters should be kept moving and in a plot of suspense, surprise and logic. The suspects should number from 5-6 and should be of both sexes, he added.

Common names may be created by combinations from the telephone book, stratton advised.

The realism of the hero is also vital to the development of the novel, he noted. "Once he has become real to you, he is alive to the reader."

He also emphasized that before any actual writing takes place, the plot should be thought out completely. In forming the plot, it may help to make to make an outline in the form of a synopsis and a timetable to follow the action in timed sequence.

TRANSFER GRADES

First semester freshmen and first semester transfer grades will be available from advisors beginning November 14, 1966.

Arab-Israeli Conflict

Mr. Saadat Hassan, a distinguished Arab diplomat at the United Nations and head of the Palestine Liberation Organization at New York and its permanent representative to the U.N., will speak on "The Arab-Israel Conflict" Monday, Nov. 14, at 8:15 p.m. in Middlesex Room.

Mr. Hassan will discuss the recent developments in the conflict at the U.N. and possibilities of a peaceful settlement of the conflict.

A coffee hour will follow the talk in the Governor's Lounge. Students interested in meeting the Arab Diplomat and informally discussing the conflict are invited. Talk is open to the public.

UNICEF Aims for 3 Million Dollar Birthday Gift

UNICEF, the Nobel Peace Prize-winning United Nations Children's Fund, opens its annual sale of Greeting Cards, note paper and calendars today. Panhellenic Council is sponsoring the program which benefits needy children and mothers in more than 100 developing countries, and has arranged a display counter in the S.U. Lobby where the items may be purchased.

It is hoped that in 1966, the year of UNICEF's 20th anniversary, a birthday gift exceeding last year's proceeds of $3 million will be realized through the sale of cards. Last year's funds were sufficient to provide equipment and drugs for 10,000 small maternal and child health centers; 1,000 vehicles for mobile health teams; and enough penicillin to cure 20 million children of yaws.

In terms of UNICEF's life-saving arithmetic, the proceeds from a single ten-card box at $1.25 will provide a daily glass of milk for a whole week for 40 hungry children; enough vaccine to protect 50 children against tuberculosis; or the antibiotics necessary to save five children applicted by trachoma from blindness.

Thirteen designs donated by talented artists from Argentina, Canada, France, Germany, Haiti, Hungary, Japan, Lebanon and the U.S.A. are included in the 1966 UNICEF card offering.

UNICEF, which last December, was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for its humanitarian work in more than 100 countries, is this year completing its 20th year of service to the world's needy children. Help make the 20th year a success and buy cards, notes and calendars in the S.U. Lobby, Nov. 14-18, 9 a.m.-5 p.m. daily.

Overcrowding Causes Academic Problems

by BOB GORMAN and
UMass Boston Correspondent PAUL DEWOLFE

Most students at UMass - Boston have come to the conclusion that buildings do not grow. This fact is causing more problems than seems possible.

One of the most striking of overcrowding is the UMass Boston grading system. Any score below a 75 is a D. The result is that a large number of students are having academic problems.

Under the present conditions, this grading system is justified. However, students are beginning to wonder when more space becomes available if the passing level will go back to normal.

Meanwhile, as both faculty and students try to overcome this academic problem, the administration is doing its part to solve the space problem.

Presently, several sites are being considered for additional classrooms. Until a new building is secured, both students and faculty will have to cooperate.

The overcrowding has hindered the organizing of student activities. But last Friday night the second mixer of the year in the main lobby of the UMass Boston's building, was attended by the mixer was well attended with about 1000 students present.

This coming week of the college newspaper, UMass Boston, will begin publications. Dennis McKinley '69, Editor-in-Chief, has had problems getting office space. He finally succeeded in getting a room and he hopes to have the presses rolling by the middle of this week.

The Choral Group is planning to present a musical in the near future. Also, they are developing plans to go to Canada later in the year.

Intramural hockey and basketball games are played every Wednesday night at the Y.M.C.A. in Hyde Park, Boston.

Since the Boston campus building has no gym, there is no compulsory physical education. This is one of the finer points of overcrowding.

PEACE CORP . . .

new green application forms, which if filled out this week, can be returned to Washington immediately. Notification of acceptance or rejection will be made before Feb. 1. The one half-hour Peace Corps modern language aptitude test will be given Wednesday thru Saturday in times and places to be announced at the booth and in the Collegian.

If the applicant is accepted, he will undergo an intensive three month session of training in in the culture and customs of the language (300 hours), training host country, and training for the job to be performed overseas.

The Peace Corps will train any liberal arts graduate for a specific job skill, and 75% of all Peace Corps volunteers are liberal arts majors. 83% of all college graduates who apply are accepted, and 73% of those in training go overseas.

Any professor who feels that a volunteer's experience would be useful in his course can contact the recruiters in the SU, who will be pleased to speak to his class.

NAIADS Hostesses to National College Swimming Association

The UMass Naiads were hostesses this past weekend for the annual conference of the Association of Synchronized Swimming for College Women. Two hundred and thirty-eight delegates from thirty different schools attended. Some girls came from as far away as Wisconsin, Virginia, and Canada.

Activities started Friday night and continued to Saturday night. They included meetings, lectures, a film, land workshops, a banquet and, most important, five water workshops. These water workshops were run entirely by students from City College of N. Y., Smith, Skidmore, and U-Mass.

The conference was run by the faculty advisor of Naiads, Miss Ester Wallace, and the 1966 AS-SCW officers and chairmen who are all members of Naiads. They include: Andrea Snell, president; Ellen McGill, vice president; Nancy Wood, secretary; Jane Hubbard, treasurer; Betty True in charge of hostesses and kits; Jane Pentland in charge of housing; Jean Jeffords in charge of registration; Ellen McGill and Andrea Snell in charge of workshops; and Nancy Broderick in charge of the program layout and name tags. Numerous other Naiads and UMass students and faculty eagerly helped to make the conference a success.

The conference ended with a synchronized swimming demonstration consisting of numbers from nine of the thirty-five schools. UMass did a number entitled "Metamorphosis" which came from last spring's Naiad show. Geneseo State University of N. Y. gave a number unique in that it consisted of three young men. Most of the delegates had never seen men perform synchronized swimming.

Other numbers were given by Central Connecticut State University, City College of N. Y., East Stroudsburg State College of Pa., Mary Washington College of Va., Pennsylvania State University, Smith College, University of Connecticut, and Wheaton College.

Ellen McGill, Jane Hubbard, Jane Pentland, Ellen Gussow, Kathy Sacuto and Andy Snell appear in the "Caterpillar Stage" of UMass's number "Metamorphisis." Other performers and the audience watch in the backround.

Blood Drive This Week

Appointment cards have been mailed to those who signed up to give blood on Tues., Wed. and Thurs. of this week. Anyone who has not received a card, or who has questions about his appointment should check in at the Commonwealth Room at the Student Union during the hours of the Drive, beginning at 11 A.M. on Tues. Anyone between the ages of 21 and 59 may come as a walk-in.

Those reporting to give blood should observe the following simple rules: (1) Be prompt if you have an appointment. (2) Have a good night's sleep, and (3) Have a good breakfast or lunch, or eat lightly within 2 hours of reporting.

Before being allowed to give blood a brief but pertinent medical history is taken by a registered nurse. Temperature, pulse, blood pressure and hemoglobin are checked. A doctor is in attendance at all times. There are no harmful after effects of giving blood. Light refreshments are served to those who donate.

OXFORD SUMMER SEMINAR

Some students are under the erroneous impression that they must have five (5) upper-division English courses to qualify for the Oxford summer school. English 111 through 126 will count as four of these courses. The "cum" in these courses, plus one additional, should be 3.0 or better. There are a few places left, though November 15 is the deadline for applications.

Jewish Writers

Kafka a Prophet?

by KAREN FRISCHER

Was Kafka a prophet of Judaism whose works present the possibilities of salvation for mankind as Max Brod, Kafka's friend who published the author's works posthumously, has declared? Or was Kafka a writer whose works illustrate an uncompromising criticism of humanity and present a message of despair for mankind?

On Tuesday, Nov. 15 at 7 p.m. in the Student Union, three members of the UMass faculty Dr. Peter Heller, Dr. Jurgen Born and Dr. Simon O. Lesser will explore these questions in a Hillel Forum Discussion on Kafka, the third event in Hillel's program of "Twentieth Century Jewish Writers."

All three speakers are well qualified to discuss this artist whose three novels, The Trial, The Castle, and Amerika, and many short stories, including "Metamorphosis" and "In the Penal Colony," have reecived international acclaim and stimulated many interpretations, inquiries, and controversies.

The 1966 Elections

by Chet Weinerman, Editorial Chairman

The results of the off-year elections have been commented upon favorably in most of the national newspapers. Unfortunately, most of America's newspapers are Republican and present an opinionated analysis on page one.

The Globe, on November 10, said: "in making Edward W. Brooke the first Negro ever to be popularly elected to the U.S. Senate, the voters repudiated bigotry." Seventh grade rational of this type does not belong on the editorial page of such a fine newspaper. There probably were thousands of voters who voted for Ed Brooke because he was a Negro. This is not repudiating bigotry; it is consciously sustaining it.

Three Rockefellers won elections. Charles Percy handily defeated loyal liberal Paul Douglas for the Illinois senatorial seat. Massachusetts elected a governor of questionable capacity. Pat Brown, a perennial underdog lost to a conservative-has-been-liberal Ronald Reagan, who will now team with George Murphy to form the most entertaining political combination in the history of show business—er, politics. To say, as the Globe says, that the voters participated "in a most impressive performance" and "showed a high degree of sophistication" is the Globe's way of saying that the public responded to consistent page one and two stories on Brooke and Volpe and, voted Republican.

Very little was mentioned about the GOP gaining only six seats in the entire Massachusetts General Court. Or Mahoney's defeat in Maryland. Or the political futures of a very able Endicott Peabody or a capable Pat Brown. Or that Francis Bellotti topped the Democratic ticket in voting strength in spite of Elliot Richardson's questionable tactics. Oh yes, and the Bruins tied New York Wednesday, too.

That this election was a Republican victory cannot be disputed. But Rockefellers have money, Percys have quirks of fate, Brookes have national publicity and sentiment supporting them, and Reagans have Hollywood. Anyone who claims this election reflects on the U.S. Vietnam policy or dissatisfaction with President Johnson or a backlash would be doing nothing more than guessing. This was an election of personalities, not parties. For a rare change, the Republicans had the individuals or at least the make up jobs. The 1968 Presidential election will more accurately express the war and the Johnsonian sentiments.

Many thought Eisenhower carried things a bit too far with his golf breaks. By 1969, tap dancing and play acting may well subvert golf as the rich man's favorite diversionary tactic. Why, the Republicans are already starting to write some scripts for millionaires, hoping they will accept major roles almost immediately.

Ours to Decide

by Larry Kornfield, Editorial Staff

To what end are our language requirements? Professor Joshua Whatmough, in Language, a Modern Syntheses, gave his views on learning a foreign language:

"To learn to read Dante in the original may or may not be worth the effort—that depends. To be able to read Italian mathematicians or economists in the original may or may not be of capital importance —that depends. To be able to address, and to understand a French professor at the Sorbonne may be of the utmost moment—that depends. But to say that no one can call himself educated without learning a foreign language is not true."

Who can deny this? For the dependencies rest on the individual. An institution, such as the University of Massachusetts, is in no position to decide what personal need for a foreign language any individual may have. If the University is to acknowledge any capacity for intelligent planning to students, the decision as to what will be necessary in the future should be in the hands of those whose future it is.

It is in college that many students decide where their field of interest lies. When this decision is made a course of study is initiated. This course should include what the student, with appropriate counseling, feels will be necessary to successfully pursue his chosen field. In many cases, a language is a necessity in this planning. In many more, it may be merely an assistance or have little positive value. The knowledge of a foreign language is rarely a hindrance but often its acquisition is an unnecessary burden. It is often knowledge soon to be forgotten through disuse.

Certainly the administration would not consider a person uneducated merely because he knows no foreign language, yet by making a foreign language a requirement for graduation this is implied.

More important academic decisions are left to the students; why can't this one be?

A Letter from the Editor to WMUA

Norm Ryan of the Night Rider Show probably doesn't like the singing of Tom Rush. That's too bad. It's especially too bad for WMUA listeners.

Norm is one of the D.J.'s spinniing the discs on the Saturday evening—Sunday morning All-Request show. Norm asks for any requests—any type of music. But Norm doesn't like Tom Rush. In fact, Norm doesn't like a lot of the stuff he's asked to play—so he criticizes a bit and then waits 'til the wee hours before he plays what doesn't fit his taste.

A listener can call at 11 p.m. and ask for—say "Joshua Gone Barbados". He's lucky if he hears it by 4 a.m., if he hears it at all. Not surprisingly though, one can call and ask for something that might be pleasing to Norm (like Johnny Mathis) and it will be played almost immediately; ask Norm.

Now it isn't much of a sin that Norm discourses on what he regards as "junk". A student disc jockey ought to be allowed to display his knowledge—or ignorance; it's one of the fringe benefits. But the exercise of personal taste in the playing of records on an All-Request show is sufficient enough of a wrong to require, at least, the formation of a strict rule: Play all requests in the order in which they are received. Come on now, Norm.

Don Aliferis, Day Editor

From Prof. Lovell

Nov. 11, 1966

Dear Mr. Aliferis:

Late Thursday I received word of your call requesting an interview for the Collegian. I must assume that the reason for this is the letter to the editor in the issue of Nov. 9. I feel that I must deny your request at this time, for I do not believe that an interview would be beneficial either to me or to the school.

I recognize the legitimate interest of the Collegian in campus affairs, and if it should ever become necessary for me to make a public statement in this affair, an eventuality I neither expect nor desire, the Collegian will receive it.

Assistant Prof. of Elec. Eng.
Bernard W. Lovell

Let's Not Retreat!

To the Editor:

"The Buck Passing," an article which appeared in the November 9th issue of the Collegian, is an insult to University students and a rejection of all that students gained in the area of self-government this year.

Surely the same students who cried for autonomy and self-government last spring haven't discovered that they aren't capable of self-regulation!

Surely the confidence placed in the residents by the Student Senate and the Administration hasn't been rejected!

Surely if the residents are capable of determining quiet hours, of legislating and creating house judicial bodies, then they are capable of determining whether they want their doors open or closed during Open Houses!

Surely Mr. Thompson isn't suggesting that the student representatives and Administration assume the responsibility for all residential policy—even to the extent of opening or closing doors during Open Houses! (which administrative authority 8,000 students fought against last year with the full support of the Collegian!)

Last spring students debated and petitioned for acknowledgement of their maturity and responsibility; after much negotiation the University agreed that students were capable of self-government within residence halls. Student representatives and administrators have established broad guidelines which allow for resident autonomy and responsibility.

In view of student action and achievements last spring, in view of the positive stance the administration and Student Senate have taken in this area of student government—as a University student and as Chairman of Women's Affairs, I would prefer to see the Collegian Editorial Staff encourage and not reject residence autonomy—especially in this time of confusion and newly created residence governments!

As Chairman of Women's Affairs, I believe that individual residential responsibility for self-government belongs with each residence hall and not with the Student Senate, the Women's Affairs Committee nor the Administraion!

There is an opportunity this year for residences to establish their own policy which will reflect their unique temper—let them accept this educational opportunity—they have experienced approximately twenty years of being told whether to open or close their doors!

Jacquelyn H. Hall,
Chairman, Women's Affairs Committee

Thee Art Beseeched!

To the Editor:

As a resident of the Southwest Complex, I find myself victimized by the recent precipitation. The area directly in front of the University Police Station is a veritable impasse.

Upon wallowing knee-deep through the mud and various diminutive rivers, I find myself weary and soiled. After I reach my classes, and after I remove the ten pounds of clay refuse from my well-soaked shoes, I sit and repeatedly muse: this could be another Aberfan.

I beseech the administration to please construct a "rude bridge" to arch the flood while excavation prevails in this immediate area!!!

Double Standard?

To the Editor:

On Thursday morning, November 3, Chief Blasko appeared in the parking lot behind Goessman Laboratory and proceeded to ticket two student owned automobiles which were parked illegally. It was a logical time for the Chief to appear since a cold driving rain had been falling all morning.

Fortunately the students who were involved appeared just before the cars were towed away. To the amazement of a dozen or so people watching the incident no attempt was made by Chief Blasko to ticket or tow away a car which was also parked illegally and which belonged to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, license number HW4603.

Does a double standard exist whereby faculty, staff, or students' cars can be ticketed and towed away but those belonging to the Federal Government cannot? If so I feel that this situation should be corrected.

Prof. Thomas J. McAvoy
Chemical Engineering Dept.

INTRAMURALS

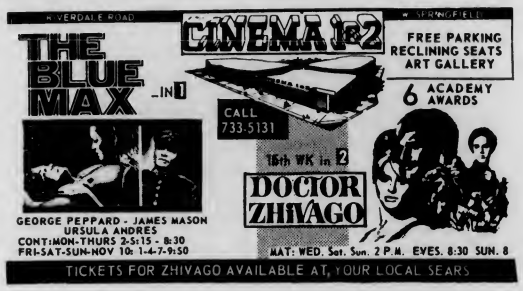
Smashers, UMass Champs, Roll Over UNH Foe, 27-7

by TOM CONUEL, Sports Staff

The annual showdown between the UMass intramural football champs and a contingent from the University of New Hampshire was played Thursday night here. The Smashers from Adams House, representing Massachusetts, defeated the New Hampshire All-Stars, 27-7.

Scoring Toss

The playing field was wet and muddy, and while this may have bothered New Hampshire, it didn't seem to affect the Smashers at all. Early in the first quarter UMass' Al Craig pitched a long scoring toss to Dick Klemansky to give the Smashers a lead that they never relinquished.



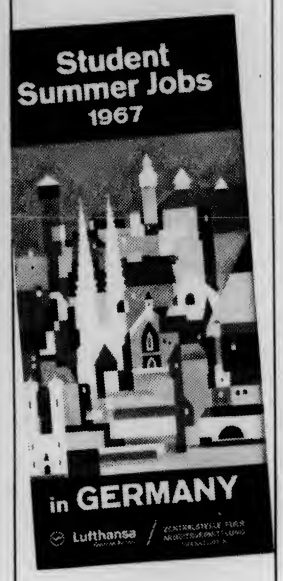
New Hampshire was unable to move against the tough Smasher defense for most of the night. The Smashers by contrast seemed able to do just as they pleased against the New Hampshire defense.

In the second period the Smashers scored again when Craig found Bob Hansen alone in the left corner of the end zone for a score. The half ended with the Smashers ahead, 14-0.

Intercepted Pass

In the second half the Smashers resumed the offensive when Dick Klemansky picked off a Hampshire pass and returned it for a score. With the score, 21 - 0, New Hampshire scored and for a moment it appeared the tide was about to turn against UMass.

Craig, however, brought the Smashers right back with a razzle-dazzle play which culminated in Craig's catching a Bob Hansen pass in the end zone for another score.



Chet Gladchuk Appointed Asst. Athletic Head

The appointment of Chet Gladchuk as assistant director of athletics has been announced by Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education at the University of Massachusetts. Gladchuk succeeds Earl E. Lorden who retired recently after almost two decades at the State University.

A native of Bridgeport, Conn. and a graduate of Harding H. S., Gladchuk was an All-American center at Boston College and also a standout on the Eagle teams that played in the Sugar and Cotton Bowls in 1940 and 1941.

Following graduation from the Heights he played professional football with the New York Giants and was an all league choice at center for two years.

Gladchuk joined the Massachusetts faculty in 1952 when he served as line coach for Charlie O'Rourke, and after 12 years on the Redmen football coaching staff Chet was appointed director of intramural athletics in the fall of 1964.

What's "accomplibility"?

It's our special word for a technical man's capacity for individual accomplishment, for getting things done—well. It may be a breakthrough in fiber technology, a series of professional lectures, or the development of a new process machine.

As a technical man*, you should be thinking about your opportunities for achievement in the field of your choice.

Du Pont offers a climate of freedom and innovation, plus the means to accomplishment. You have at your disposal the equipment and materials you need for exploring ideas . . . proving out theories. You have specialists for information, trained technicians to assist you.

The rewards are impressive: recognition . . . leadership . . . reputation . . . challenge.

And a well-satisfied "accomplibility."

Booters Conquer UNH, 2-1, In Overtime; Finish 6-3-1

by TIM MURPHY, Sports Staff

What makes one team better than another at any given time is often the intangible something called determination, or—in common parlance—guts.

Gutty is the word for the performance of UM's soccer team in its 2-1 victory here Saturday over the University of New Hampshire. The game was the season's final for the Redmen and raised their final ledger to 6-3-1 overall and to 3-1-1 in Yankee Conference competition.

The win clinched second place in the Conference for the Redmen who were tri-champs of the loop a year ago.

Though they outclassed the visitors throughout regulation play, the Redmen were forced into a 10-minute overtime with the game even at 1-1.

Frustrated time and again by near misses during the normal 88-minute contest—UM hit the horizontal crossbar of the UNH net three times—the Redmen mounted a gritty and determined overtime effort.

Aba Ayanaba, one of the stars of the 1966 Redmen, makes effort to control the ball during Saturday's 2-1 victory over New Hampshire.

Less than nine minutes had elapsed in the extra stanzas — the overtime is divided into two five - minute periods — when wing Gerry Cellilli, who saved UM's first goal, kicked the ball at UNH goalie Ron Spaulding, who turned in a superior performance around his cage all morning.

Cellilli's long shot caromed off the upper cross-bar of the goal and bounced into a cluster of humanity massed in front of the nets. UM inside Rick Rosoff jockeyed the ball away from all comers and directed it past Spaulding from near point-blank range.

The game, however, was not over.

Intercollegiate soccer rules dictate that all overtime periods be played until the five minutes are up. With more than a minute to go, therefore, UNH mustered its strength and blitzed downfield.

The attack was broken up just beyond midfield by UM defenders, however, and the ball was loose near the midfield stripe until the game ended.

Action started at a furious pace in the opening quarter as the Redmen scored at 11:30 off the foot of Cellilli. His shot, from about 25 feet out, curved behind the UNH goalie and nestled in the nets to his right.

At 20:25 UNH countered with a tally by center foreward Bob Heaton. Heaton broke away, dribbled in alone on Redmen goalie Larry Martin, and put the ball into the goal behind him.

The remainder of the contest was nearly even. The Redmen, however, displayed a spirit and general hustle that was lacking in the UNH attack. Though both teams had opportunity to add to their respective scares, neither team was able to penetrate.

Redman coach Larry Briggs again employed two lines in the game, a move which enabled the UM contingent to maintain an edge. UNH mentor Walt Weiland was forced to play his starting line virtually the entire game.

SIDELINE SLANTS — The contest marked the end of Brigg's 34th varsity season at UM. His soccer record here currently stands at 118-146-29.

Cellilli's boot gave him six for the season and increased his lead over runnerup Marty Smith to three.

Other UM scorers are Aba Ayanaba, Rick Rosoff, Marty Pikul, Mike Russo, Phil Bozenhard, Bruce Allen and Pete Makhambera. Ayanaba has two goals, the rest one each.

Martin finished the year with two shutouts to his credit. Carl Gustafson, Martin's able standin and the most likely candidate for goaltending chores next season, chalked up shutouts in his only two starts of the campaign.

Cross Country Squad Chalks Up 6-4 Mark

Led by Paul Hoss and Charley Lang, the cross country team tied Brown University for third place in the New England championship at Boston last Monday.

Hoss and Lang finished 17th and 18th respectively to lead the team. Marc Gelinas got 31st, Co-captain Steve St. Clair ran his best race of the year to finish in the 37th spot, and Greg Bowman completed the team score with 41st place.

Other finishers for the Redmen were co-captain John Andersen, 64th, and Terry Carpenter who had an off-day and came in 101st.

Providence College successfully defended its team title by topping the other 30 schools in the meet with a score of 60. Central and UMass and Brown had 144. Springfield rounded out the top five with a total of 159.

The meet proved to be somewhat of a moral victory for the Redmen who avenged previous defeats to Northeastern and Springfield.

The team also finished its dual meet season with a 25-33 victory over New Hampshire. Coach Bill Footrick's harriers thus finished the season with a 6-4 record and the Yankee Conference championship.

The team is in New York today competing in the IC4A championship. They will be running against more than 70 schols including Villanova, Notre Dame, Georgetown, and many other national track powers

Caruso Leads Redmen to 14-7 Squeaker

by GLENN BRIERE, Sports Staff

Part eight of the nine-part serial known as 1966 UMass football was acted out at Alumni Stadium on Saturday. This week's installment was enough to jar even the most complacent of Redmen followers into anxiety.

The villains were the Wildcats of New Hampshire, and the Redmen managed to win, 14-7. But in the process the UMass fans had to endure the agonizing sight of quarterback Greg Landry being helped off the field in the third quarter.

It wasn't as bad as it looked for two reasons. First, Landry suffered from exhaustion and not an injury. And second, understudy Al Caruso came in to lead the revitalized Redmen to the winning touchdown.

The victory gave UMass its third Yankee Conference title in four years, but a quick look in retrospect shows that the Redmen did not win any of their five conference games by more than a touchdown. It has been that kind of a season.

New Hampshire is a much-improved team, led by diminutive quarterback Bill Estey. The final minutes of the game found the Wildcats driving deep in UMass territory, only to be thwarted by Mike McArdle's interception.

Each team had a chance to score in an otherwise dull first quarter. UNH moved down the soggy field to the UMass 20, but a field goal try by Kurt Vollherbst was no good.

In the second quarter UMass began to move. An 11-yard toss to Bill Carty put the Redmen on the UNH 45, and on third-and-seven Landry fired a bullet to Mike Casey at the 33 for a first down. Landry moved on a bootleg around left end to the 14, and with four minutes gone in the second quarter he picked up a fine block by Tim Driscoll and flew around right end into the end zone. Bruce Cochrane's kick gave UMass a 7-0 lead.

The Wildcats took over on their own 38 early in the third quarter. Estey passed to end John O'Brien who caught it between two UMass defenders and somehow spun away to the Redmen's 17. A pass interference call on the five gave UNH a first down, and Tom Kasprzak found a hole on the right side and went in for the score. Vollherbst's kick was good and it was a brand new ball game, 7-7, with 9:16 left in the third quarter.

A UMass fumble on their own 31 gave the Wildcats an opportunity to go ahead. On fourth down Estey scrambled to the 18 for the first down. But New Hampshire could not move, and this time Vollherbst tried a field goal on fourth down from 11 yards out.

The kick hit the center of the crossbar, and for an excruciating second it hung in the air. But it fell away and the tie still existed.

Late in the third quarter things turned gloomier than the weather for UMass. The Redmen had moved to the UNH 29 when Landry was rushed trying to pass. He was caught and thrown to the ground, apparently too much for him to take. As the 6400 fans watched him sit hunched on the bench, Al Caruso took over, the first time anyone but Landry had seen action at quarterback for UMass this season.

Statistics

	UMass	NH
First Downs	16	11
Passes	8-14	8-19

Total yardage	280	174
Punts	7-34	7-30

Caruso was unable to pick up the first down and UMass punted to the New Hampshire 12, but the defense did not give an inch as the Wildcats punted.

Taking over on the UMass 40, Caruso passed to Carty at the UNH 39. Two plays later he pitched out to Driscoll who sped around right end to the 12-yard line. Bob Detore was unable to get a first down on three carries, but Caruso sneaked to the two to make it first and goal.

Detore then went off left tackle for the touchdown with 10:46 left in the game. Cochrane's kick made it 14-7 in favor of the Redmen.

Dave Giarla's sixth interception of the year on the UNH 346 shortly afterwards was nullified by a hand-off fumble at the 29 as UNH took over. The UMass defense let them go as far as the 48, and then pushed them back to the 21 with less than four minutes left.

New Hampshire had one chance left, and Estey made use of it. Starting at the UNH 20 with 2:30 left, the little quarterback passed his way up to the UMass 33 with the aid of a penalty. The clock was running with 30 seconds left as Estey ran out of bounds to stop it, but on the next play Mike McArdle made a beautiful diving interception on the 12 to insure the Beanpot's return to UMass.

Prescriptions Worked: Third Title in 4 Years

by TOM FITZGERALD, Sports Staff

A miniature crutch was stuck in the small wooden block that Vic Fusia held in his hands after Saturday's Conference-clinching victory over New Hampshire.

Attached to the crutch was a tiny flag with the letters "1966 Massachusetts 5-0 Yan-Con Champ." Beside the crutch was a Redman performing his own miniature war-dance.

The souvenir was given to the UM coach in the locker room after the game by Dr. Robert Gage and Dr. Robert Snook, of the University medical staff. Fusia is one who appreciates the symbolism. "It's the first time in history," he said, "that a medical staff has won a conference."

Almost every player on the offensive and defensive line-ups was injured at one time or another. And the most frequent "what-would-happen-if" question was answered with 2:22 left in the third quarter when quarterback Greg Landry left the field, suffering from exhaustion. Landry, who had been in the Infirmary for a week with a fever and who returned there after the game, was replaced by Al (Butch) Caruso, a senior from Brooklyn, N.Y., whose only previous chore this season had been holding for Bruce Cochrane's place-kicks.

"But old Butch came through for us, didn't he?" Fusia smiled. Caruso drove the team 60 yards in 10 plays, with Bob Detore going over from the two for the winning score with 10:46 left to play. A big play in the drive was a third-down pass to Bill Carty for a vital first down at the New Hampshire 39.

Two plays later, Caruso pitched out to Tim Driscoll, who sprinted 24 yards around right side to put the ball on the 12. The Redmen ground out the remaining footage against the Wildcat line.

Caruso's teammates presented him with the game ball afterwards as a token of their appreciation.

It was the third Yankee Conference championship for Fusia in his six years as Redman head coach. "I didn't want to back into this thing," he said. "I told them they could do it by playing their game and they certainly did—the same drama, the same suspense."

"I thought we did a pretty good job of containing that little streak of lightning," Fusia said, in reference to UNH quarterback Bill Estey. Sxcept for his long return on the opening kickoff and a few pass plays, the 5'6" Estey was a bottled imp.

The attendance was season low of 6,400, including 1,286 UMass students. The rainy weather combined with the long weekend too kept the fans away.

Little Wildcats Nose Out Frosh, 9-7

by AL PEAKES
Sports Staff

Friday was Veteran's Day, but the UMass freshman football team was in no mood for a celebration, as they took it on the chin from New Hampshire by the score of 9-7.

The contest, which was witnessed by an enthusiastic throng of about 800, was held on the practice field rather than at Alumni Stadium as originally planned. Field conditions were sloppy due to the deluge of rain the previous day.

UNH edged out into the lead seconds before the end of the first half, as Don Sullins booted a 27-yard field goal. The kick took some of the edge off of the Redmen defensive unit, which had been superb up to this point. Tom Brennan and Don Dotson both came through with key interceptions to stop the Wildcat drives. Mark Toner, Dick Chenek, and Tom York paced the hard-hitting front line.

In the opening moments of the second half, York pounced on a UNH fumble on the 45-yard line of the Redmen. The offense was unable to cash in on the break and had to punt.

Blue and White quarterback Terry Peluso mixed his plays nicely and moved the squad to the Redmen's 47. Then halfback Tom Egan sprinted up the middle on a quick opener for the score. The kick for the extra point was wide leaving the score at 9-0 in New Hampshire's favor.

The hopes of the home fans dwindled as quarterback Tim Adams, the classy field general of Coach Burley Crowe's commandoes, had to leave the game in the third period due to an injury.

Back-up man George Andersen, however, came on and did himself proud, especially considering his limited game experience. Andersen, who also does the place kicking chores for the frosh, used halfback Gerry Grasso as a target for many of his tosses.

Jim Nangle, John McGovern and Dotson provided the defensive impetus for the Little Redmen in the fourth quarter. Dotson pounced on a fumble late in the stanza to give the Redmen their last shot at a tally. The aroused offense didn't fail as Andersen received plenty of protection for his passing. Decembrelle and Flaherty also contributed some key running to the drive. With time running out Andersen had to concentrate on an air attack. This strategy paid dividends as Grasso garnered in a 20 yard bomb from George for the lone UMass marker. An onside kick after the conversion was unsuccessful and time ran out before Massachusetts could get its hands on the ball again.

The victory was the third straight for UNH, leaving them with a 3-1-1 record on the year. UMass is finished with a 3-2 slate, this being the only loss to a Yankee Conference foe.

SERMON BLASTS PRE-MARITAL SEX

by WAYNE SOINI

Premarital sex was the topic of an impromptu addition to a sermon delivered by Monsignor David Power. Approximately 300 students attended the 11:15 Mass Sunday at the Newman Center during which Monsignor Power commented on the controversial topic.

He claimed that dormitories—specifically girls' dorms — have been sponsoring discussions on premarital sex relations.

At these discussions the problem is divorced from religion, and religious reasonings are not to be brought up, he said. "They are a step that shows how far we have fallen," the Monsignor commented.

The first step, "a cancer of the campus," was the abolition of curfews. "If you talk to any honest member of the girls' dorms you will find out how many girls are staying out overnight," he said.

Exhorting two-fold action by a "united body of individuals" he urged the group to "reasonable actions" to become models of the minority—"odd in the sight of men, but not in the sight of God," and, further, to pray for the return of the curfew for females.

"We see now, perhaps, how badly needed is the weekly prayers-for-the-entire-campus." Under this program several dorms and fraternities are weekly named and urged to come to the Newman Center during the week and pray for the entire campus community.

Girl Student Hurt In One-Car Crash

Miss Sharon A. Bresnahan, 19, of 85 Overlook Dr., West Springfield, a student at the University of Massachusetts, is a patient at the university infirmary following a one-car accident early Sunday. The university said she is in good condition.

She suffered face and head injuries after the 4:26 a.m. accident on Rte. 9 here. City police identified the operator of the automobile as William P. Nolan, 21, of 31 Revere Rd., Quincy, also a student at the university.

The accident occurred as they were travelling east on Route 9 and did not negotiate the corner at Belchertown Rd. and Southeast St. According to police the car went through the guardrail and into a field. It was demolished and had to be towed away.

Miss Bresnahan was taken in the UMass police cruiser from the scene to the infirmary. Nolan told police he was not injured.

A spokesman at the university Sunday night said Miss Bresnahan apparently escaped serious injury and would probably be released today.

Nominations Sought for Who's Who

Nominees from the University of Massachusetts to Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities are currently being selected. The basic criteria, as recommended by the national society, include the student's scholarship, leadership and cooperation in educational and extracurricular activities, general citizenship, and promise of future usefulness.

In an attempt to consider all eligible students your assistance is solicited. Hopefully by giving all persons in the University community an opportunity to recommend qualified students, a well-rounded representation of outstanding students will be nominated to the organization for national recognition.

You may assist the nominating committee by submitting the names of students, preferably seniors, whom you recommend accompanied by justifications for your recommendations to Mrs. Lois Frey in the Student Union Program Office by Friday, Nov. 18, 1966. Mrs. Frey will forward these suggestions to the campus nominating committee.

Instructions Posted for Thanksgiving Recess

All residence halls will close at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, November 23, 1966. They will reopen at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday, November 27, 1966.

Residents who have legitimate reasons for requesting accommodations in a University residence hall for any part of the Thanksgiving vacation must file their request in the Housing Office (Draper Hall) on or before November 18, 1966. Greenough House will be used to house men, and Brooks House will be used for women. Consideration for granting room requests will be based on academic reasons, departmental work, extenuating travel circumstances, and membership on an intercollegiate team having a scheduled event during the recess.

Kingsley Davis

DVP Presents Distinguished Sociologist

Kingsley Davis, the eminent professor of sociology from the University of California at Berkeley, will be a guest of the Distinguished Visitors Program this week. He will lecture on "Population Shifts and Economic Development" on Thursday, November 17 at 8:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

It is difficult to classify Davis in terms of his major contribution to sociology. His accomplishments in the fields of population growth, demography, sociology of the family, and philosophy and logic of behavioral sciences are all equally impressive and outstanding. His introductory textbook, Human Society, written more than fifteen years ago, is still widely used as a basic reference text for introductory sociology studies both in the United States and abroad. He has also written Population of India and Pakistan and is co-author of Modern American Society.

Professor Davis was born on August 20, 1908 in a small town in Texas, the son of a country doctor. He received his undergraduate and master degrees in philosophy at the University of Texas.

He then went to Harvard where he got a second Master of Arts degree, this time in sociology, and his doctorate.

He has taught sociology at Clark, Pennsylvania State, Columbia, and Princeton Universities, and, since 1955 at Berkeley.

Among Davis' contributions to sociology are his six years as research associate at the Office of Population Research at Princeton. He also was the associate director and director of the Bureau of Applied Research.

From 1955-1961 he was the United States representative on the United Nations Population Commission. He has also been the president and vice-president of the American Sociological Association.

An obviously outstanding sociologist, Kingsley Davis is also a dynamic lecturer and can easily be understood and appreciated by a nonspecialist as well as by a sociology expert.

DR. LEARY

"HIGH PRIEST OF LSD CULT"

by GERALD W. VIGEANT '68

"I get revelations from my cells which are wiser and older than my mind." The evangelist speaks, and his faithful disciples, the 'hippies' 'turn on'. The room is dark, blurred, fluid, and flashing.

This is no ordinary religious service, and no ordinary congregation. Above all, this is no ordinary minister. Dr. Timothy Leary has spoken, and Dr. Leary 'knows'.

A forty-five year old former Harvard psychologist, Dr. Timothy Leary is the high priest of the L.S.D. cult: he is the mystical advocate of mind-expanding drugs which he prefers to call "psychedelics."

Leary claims to have unlocked the "Rosetta stone of consciousness" through the use of L.S.D., the "cerebral vitamin."

The role of the evangelist of L.S.D. has not been an easy one for Leary to play. The way of the pioneer is never smooth. Raised near Boston, Leary attended West Point for a short time and then turned to psychology.

In 1961, he became entranced with psilocybin, a mushroom derivative that he discovered in Mexico. This discovery marked the beginning of his 'conversion.'

At Harvard's Center for Research in Personality, Leary and his coworker, Richard Alpert, dispensed psilocybin to some 4400 subjects in the next two years.

He was discharged from the Harvard faculty in 1963 for failing to meet his teaching obligations, and for breaking his promise not to involve undergraduates in his experiments.

By that time Leary had attracted a sizeable cult of followers, 'acidheads' who took 'trips' through the use of L.S.D. and other psychedelic drugs.

Nevertheless Leary continued his studies. He founded a journal devoted to psychedelic matters, and established the Castalia Foundation in Millbrook, New York, dedicated to experiments with hallucinogenic, mind-expanding drugs.

On the 4,000 acre rented Millbrook estate, Leary, with his 16-year old son and 18-year old daughter, played host to a wild assortment of 'hippie' disciples.

All seemed to be going well for Leary until the law finally caught up with him on March 11, 1966. A federal judge fined Dr. Leary $30,000 and sentenced him to thirty years imprisonment. At the same time, his daughter was ordered to a federal reformatory for an indefinite period of time.

Immediately a "Timothy Leary Defense Fund" was established. Its case was based on the 'cruel and unusual punishment' clause of the Constitution.

A sentence of thirty years for possessing one-half ounce of marijuana, they argued, was beyond the limits of rationality and definitely constituted 'harsh sentencing.'

Leary himself appealed the case on grounds of religious freedom, citing marijuana and other hallucinatory drugs as the "keys" to a true religious experience.

In September of this year the charges against Dr. Leary were dropped because the recent court rulings on confessions and search warrants made successful prosecution of the case very unlikely.

Ex-Roman Catholic Leary, in September, founded a new religion, The League of Spiritual Discovery (LSD), based on the use of L.S.D., peycote, and marijuana.

Through these hallucinatory drugs the dedicated disciples, united with their high priest, claim to achieve close communion—not with God, but with a superreal awareness of reality —the expanding of consciousness.

As Leary stated, through the sacramental use of L.S.D., "We seek to find the divinity within and to express this revelation in a glorification and worship of God. These ancient goals we define in the metaphor of the present—turn-on, tune-in, and drop out.

Leary plans to test the constitutional rights of members to use drugs in 'shrines' in their homes. The sect, he claims, has 411 members and plans to seek taxfree status.

The first public worship of the League, "The Death of the Mind," a 'psychedelic celebration', was presented at the Village Theatre in Manhattan in September.

This "first public worship service of America's first indigenous religious movement," a representation of "one minute in an L.S.D. session" was attended by about 2400.

Around the same time, "The Psychedelic Experience," a recording of readings by Dr. Leary, Richard Alpert, and Ralph Metzner from "The Psychedelic Experience: A Manual Based on the Tibetan Book of the Dead," was released. Leary promised on this record "a great adventure, a trip out of your mind.

The high priest of L.S.D. sees his subculture not as a revolt, but as an evolutionary process. As he said, "We may be at another one of those wrenching transition points in intellectual history when the accepted ontological and mythological fundaments of society and of man's view of himself comes into uneasy collision with new concepts."

Dr. Leary is now working for the conversion of others. "The psychedelic battle is won," he instructs his disciples, now "turn on" parents and teachers "by the messages you have learned."

Early Popes Described By University Author

DR. LOUIS S. GREENBAUM

A University of Massachusetts associate professor of history has written an authoritative and comprehensive monologue describing the vast literature on the Renaissance and Baroque Popes.

Dr. Louis S. Greenbaum is the author of a body of articles analyzing 134 books and manuscripts, works that contributed to an understanding of the early modern Popes as patrons of the arts, and as builders and humanists.

The book, "The Popes as Builders and Humanists from Nicholas V (1447) through Clement IX (1669)" is a three-section assessment of art, architecture and literature from the Fifteenth through the Seventeenth Centuries. Its 363 glossy pages contain 184 reproductions of paintings, drawings, sculptures, engravings and etchings, an illustrated section describing the architecture of the period, and Dr. Greenbaum's illustrated 145-page section dealing with the Papal-sponsored books and manuscripts.

Prof. Greenbaum's section surveys the wide range and diversity of two centuries of Papal interest in, and subsidization of, works in medicine, history, theology, engineering, music, literature, science, philosophy, archeology, travel, numismatics, drama, calligraphy, classics and even gastronomy. His monologue attests to the Popes' involvement in all levels of life and reaches of human achievement.

Dr. Greenbaum is an authority on church history, with particular interest in the Catholic Church of the 17th and 18th Centuries. A native of Milwaukee, Wis., he received his B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Wisconsin and his Ph.D. degree from Harvard University.

A former Fulbright Fellow and Fellow of the American Philosophical Society, Dr. Greenbaum joined the UMass faculty in 1955 and was the first director of the University's honors program from 1960-1963. He currently serves as campus coordinator of Fulbright Students, and as director of graduate studies in the department of history.

His most recent study, "The General Assembly of the Clergy of France and its Situation at the End of the Ancien Regime," will appear in the July, 1967, issue of the Catholic Historical Review.

"The Popes as Builders and Humanists" is available from the University of St. Thomas in Houston, Tex.

Astronomy Program Aided By New Appointments

Two new appointments at the University of Massachusetts this fall bring to five the number of astronomers who comprise the faculty of a Four-College Astronomy Department in which the University and three neighboring institutions in the Connecticut Valley—Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, and Smith colleges—are partners.

The joint undergraduate department was organized originally in 1960 as part of the formal Four - College Cooperation that began in 1951 with the establishment of a jointly supported research library and now extends to the sharing of other academic facilities, student interchanges among the four campuses, and cooperative courses in such areas as Asian-African studies and the history of science.

The two new members of the four - college astronomy faculty this fall are Dr. William M. Irvine, chairman of the department, who was previously at the Harvard College Observatory and Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, both in Cambridge, and Dr. Edward R. Harrison, whose appointment follows a year as a National Academy of Sciences Senior Research Fellow at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Goddard Space Flight Center, Greenbelt, Maryland.

They join Dr. Thomas T. Arny, who came to the University a year ago from Amherst College, Dr. Francis M. Stienon of Smith College, and Dr. Steven M. Adler of Mount Holyoke. A sixth astronomer is expected to join the department next year as a member of the Amherst faculty.

(Although the department is a true four-college effort, being financed jointly, each member maintains a primary affiliation with one of the participating institutions.)

Observational tools available within the four-college community include an 18-inch refracting telescope at Amherst and a 20-inch reflector at the University, both of which are now undergoing renovation.

For theoretical studies and reduction of observational data, the department has access to the CDC 3600 computer of the Research Computing Center at the University. A machine of this capacity and speed offers a wide range of opportunities for significant student and faculty research in all areas of astronomy.

Looking ahead, the four-college astronomy department anticipates cooperative activities with other New England colleges and universities, especially in the development of facilities for radio astronomy, and the beginning of programs in association with the two major national observatories in optical and radio astronomy.

Crabtree Dorm to Hold Elections This Week

by PAT PETOW, Staff Reporter

Seven house government positions will be voted upon this Thursday in Crabtree House. Like other residence halls, this dorm designed a charter and now hopes to have its self-government organized by tomorrow evening.

In two past ballotings this year, turnouts have been high, ranging around 80 per cent. Due to the lack of contests as of Monday evening some concern has arisen regarding voting turnout. The situation is so appalling that the announced candidates themselves appealed for competition. Unless two-thirds of the residents cast ballots the election shall be void according to the charter.

Freshmen who are not eligible to hold any office are expected to provide the bulk of the voters as usual. Already their number have indicated interest in serving on some of the new committees being set up.

Stretching over the dinner hour, the polling time is considered by the election committee as "convenient as could be." In addition, absentee balloting is to be provided.

The vacant positions include President, Vice President, and chairman of the following committees: Standards, only members of the Standards Board eligible; Finance, the Treasurer; House Management, the Secretary; Social and Cultural; and Scholastic Aid.

The Scholastic Aid committee epitomizes well the attempt at dorm organization. Since fraternities and sororities have always maintained a file of old exams, even essays, and advice on who to see for a course, there is no reason why a dorm can not have similar files. In an admittedly Administration-prodded attempt, old UMass dorms are trying to prove that they too are more than a place to sleep or not sleep.

Without Residential College advantages or experience, resilient Crabtree spirit is being counted on this Thursday.

Federal Contract Granted To Aid Education of Deaf

The University of Massachusetts has been granted a federal contract of $108,773 to develop a regional headquarters in the northeastern United States to explore the application of new communications techniques to education of the deaf.

The UMass center will be one of four serving the U.S. and will cover an area roughly equal to the northeast quarter of the country—west to and including the state of Michigan and south to and including the state of Maryland. Serving the other three-quarters of the U.S. will be similar centers at the University of Nebraska, University of Tennessee and New Mexico State University.

Video tape, closed circuit TV, overhead projectors and other modern communications media have developed tremendously as educational aids in the past 10 years. The overall purpose of the UMass project is to adapt these newer media aids for maximum utilization of all sensory avenues of approach to the mind of the deaf individual.

Program plans call for the development of a media center at UMass capable of providing comprehensive services to educators of the deaf in the northeast region.

Also planned are two demonstration units, one to be located at the Kendall School for the Deaf at Gallaudet College, Washington, D. C., for regular use and demonstration to capitol visitors and the other to be a mobile unit capable of demonstrating anywhere in the region.

A key tool in the UMass program will be the overhead projector, a device that enables an instructor to face a class and have the material he is working with on his desk projected to a screen behind him in view of the classroom. The UMass center will establish an overhead projector transparency exchange system for collecting, evaluating, duplicating and distributing transparency masters.

The UMass regional center will be guided by an executive committee comprising Thomas Clemens, director of the educational media program of the U.S. Office of Education, and the heads of four outstanding northeastern schools for the deaf.

OCS PROGRAM

Male seniors at UMass will have an opportunity to learn at first hand about the US Army's Officer Candidate School program this week. UMass seniors will meet Thursday and Friday at the Student Union.

On hand to explain the Army's need for qualified leaders in all branches will be Lt. John R. Perchard, Jr., member of the OCS selection team from the Boston Army Base.

To qualify for OCS, applicants must be citizens between 18 and 27, and have graduated from or be a senior in an accredited college or university recognized by the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare.

Recreation Majors Attend Conference

Twelve senior recreation majors from UMass attended the Congress for Recreation and Parks staged in Washington, D. C. recently.

Better recreation facilities and programs for the nation were the major concerns of this annual meeting for 3,500 delegates of the National Recreation and Park Association, sponsoring organization for the Congress.

Secretary of the Interior Stewart L. Udall, Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman and Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Robert C. Weaver were among the featured participants addressing this largest meeting ever held of park, recreation and conservation leaders. Laurence S. Rockefeller of New York, President of the Association, was the keynote speaker.

In addition to the 200 educational panels being conducted, there were exhibits of indoor and outdoor park and recreation equipment.

The material for a Reader's Theater is merely read on stage with little conventional acting technique. Concerned only with reality, this type of modern theater can turn almost any material into a performance, he said. The development of this type of theater seems to coincide with the general increasing interest in non-fiction.

Brann attributes a great public appeal to "non-fiction theater". He concluded hopefully, saying that since the possibilities of such a theater are yet untapped and therefore not "formalized", almost anything can be done with it.

Countdown for Croesus

by Jack Dean, Editorial Day Editor

It finally happened.

Santa Claus killed the wrong turkey.

Oh, he said it was a mistake, but that's a debatable statement. Wasn't he rather anxious? Didn't he "jump the gun", to put it tritely? Usually a Christmas turkey isn't killed a month ahead of time. So this can't be a case of mistaken identity.

We suspect there are definite reasons, but we're not yet positive as to what they are. After all, would a nice old gent like Santa deliberately kill the Thanksgiving turkey for no purpose at all?

We hate to speculate, but it would seem to us that money is the answer.

Yes — we believe that Santa has succumbed to the capitalistic line of reasoning. He has been duped by the commercially oriented segment of our society into killing the Thanksgiving turkey, and thereby has aided these money-lovers in their endless quest for wealth. And perhaps he may even be getting a kickback. He is supporting quite a few elves.

But whatever the case, we should try to see that he will never be influenced again. Next time they might talk him into stealing the Halloween pumpkin.

Well, seeing as there are only 32 shopping days left . . .

I wish to wholeheartedly congratulate Dr. Eugene Futile for another comprehensive Botany test. I can only hope that the rest of the departments on campus will follow Dr. Futile's lead and give the same kind of thorough examinations.

In an effort to plant a "quality-not-quantity" drive on campus, to stem the rising tide of mediocrity, I am offering sample questions to a few of the departments on campus to use on their next hour exam so they may weed out the 99% that don't belong here.

Locked Out of Our Cage

To the Editor:

Let's prevent the Belafonte fiasco at the Peter Paul and Mary Concert. I am knocking the way the 4,000 people were admitted to the "Cage."

The students of UMass like to show that they are sophisticated, well brought up, and mature; but when they are forced to remain standing in the cold for two hours before being admitted to the "Cage," they lose their composure very quickly—and very understandably.

The mob, 4,000 strong, becomes impatient and then irritated, especially when ignorant people cut into lines that have been formed by the "early birds." When the doors are finally opened—at all of five minutes before showtime! — the crowd rushing the entrances makes the total offense of the National Football League look very insignificant!!!

It is a potentially dangerous situation, this angry mob of 4,000 trying to get into the "Cage" at once. Moreover, the milling confusion of their trying to find seats delays the performance. If, in the future, arrangements to open the doors well in advance of showtime can't be made out of simple courtesy, can't they be made for safety's sake???

BU's Editor Speaks

To the Editor:

Allow me to elaborate on one point raised (inadequately, I believe) by Managing Editor Jim Foudy in his otherwise fine story about me and the B.U. NEWS (Collegian 10/26).

Jim's story leads to the impression that we have in some fashion bought off our publishing board and destroyed its capacity to regulate us.

The NEWS publishing board consists of two administrators, two faculty, three students, a grad student, and an alumnus, all appointed by various representative organizations (i.e., the students by Student Congress, etc.). The editors of the NEWS make a practice of working hard each spring for the election of liberal Congress delegates, so that we can get liberal students on our Board; equally, we attempt to communicate to faculty leaders our problems in the hope of getting liberal faculty on the Board. We do not, however, have the power of choosing these people ourselves.

Therefore, although we cannot influence the completely independent vote of any member of the Board, we have thus far been protected by the Board from the war-whoops of various campus censors, fascists, and a selection of image-conscious and surly administrators.

We're attempting to build here the most outrageous and unprofessional student paper in the country while still preserving the values of complete honesty, accurate reportage, news-page play that is free of bias. I feel the screaming Record-American headlines of our activities (notably "Sexual Freedom" and "Abolish ROTC") tend to exaggerate our exploits, but we're not complaining.

In Defense of SWAP

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the questions raised in reference to the Fine Arts discussion at SWAP in the editorial of the Friday, October 7th edition of the Collegian entitled "Did Swap Flop?" Due to the misplacing of the original copy of this letter on the part of the Collegian, it has not appeared in print before this time. As active participants in this discussion, we would like to clarify several points about which the editor was apparrently misinformed.

The discussion group assured itself a place at SWAP primarily because it created a much needed opportunity for communication between the various Fine Arts groups. A major topic of consideration was the improvement of the Fine Arts Program. On this point it was strongly felt that the various Fine Arts offerings on campus in the past have not so much been lacking in quality as they have been in deficient facilities and student appreciation and participation.

It was said that students could be more open to these programs if knowledge, as a missile for increased understanding, was provided. Several specific suggestions were made as to how this could be accomplished. Among these were that the various communications media on campus provide a more informative and qualified critical eye toward fine arts events. This could be achieved by the inclusion of an art, music and drama review section in the Collegian.

The discussion group was confident that qualified critics could be easily accessible. It was further suggested that a guide and guard be provided for all Student Union art exhibits. A step in this direction has already been taken by the Arts and Music Committee. A final suggestion was that Fine Arts events be more effectively publicized by the various Fine Arts groups.

As to the definition of Fine Arts, it was emphasized that the University should continue to be a forum for the presentation of contemporary thought and expression. Any past controversies were attributed to the lack of understanding of modern American art forms on the part of the campus community.

We refrained from providing any strict definition of what constitutes Fine Arts on the grounds that any one definitive statement would stifle the flexibility that is desired under this heading. It was felt that any undertaking that could broaden the individual's conception of life in general and contemporary life in particular would be considered Fine Arts.

It was generally felt that "Kultur" was not to be forced upon students or anyone else; but rather, by providing a sympathetic environment, understanding and participation could be attained. In this direction, to say that facilities are poor is nothing less than a gross understatement. The actualization of a Fine Arts building on campus would create not only the much needed facilities but a setting more conducive to the appreciation of all aspects of Fine Arts.

Tale of Two Cities

To the Editor:

I would like to make a correction in reference to the article in the November 7, 1966 issue entitled "Meanwhile, In The Foggy Dew Of New Jersey . . ." You have stated in this article "...Charles Kaska, 22, of Rahway, Mass., and Thomas Breslin, 21, of Toms River, Mass., were suspended from Monmouth College and arrested."

This statement is incorrect as to the location of the two cities and I think a correction or restatement should be printed. I come from Toms River, New Jersey and I am relatively sure that there is no other city by this name in the United States. I would appreciate it if this is corrected. Thank you.

From Bombast to Bombs

To the Editor:

Mr. S. Hasaan's lecture on the "Arab-Israeli Conflict" Monday night left much to be corrected and commented upon.

After Mr. Hasaan's lecture many people protested that this was a non-objective speech. For the sake of objectivity should the other side be presented by the International Club? No—not in the same manner by an analogous pro-Zionist speech. Fighting propaganda with propaganda brings no clearer real understanding. Bombastic words can easily turn into bullets and bullets into bombs.

If anyone wishes to understand further the Zionist viewpoint: The Student Zionist Organization is sponsoring on Thursday, 8:00 in the Plymouth Room, a series of lecture-discussions entitled "Should I Be a Zionist." These programs are planned each week by different members of S.Z.O. to explore intelligently the essence and existence of Zionism. All are welcome to attend.

Vested Interests

To the Editor:

I agree with Larry Kornfield's editorial "Ours To Decide" that appeared in Monday's Collegian, and more specifically, that a foreign language can be "an unnecessary burden." It is a burden because of "vested interests" of our academic leaders.

This means if students were given some say in the requirement, perhaps, there would be a lack of students in the language courses, resulting in professors without jobs. Making it a requirement makes jobs, and makes sense. And the Faculty Senate's "tightening up" policy in this matter shows that they have an interest in it, a "vested interest" (Collegian, November 4).

The "burden" is really a penalty for lack of ability in this discipline; a poor background in language training; or an incurable hatred for the entire discipline. The sentence is two years at hard labor. The result is not forgotten knowledge through disuse, but a poor academic performance, because of an unreasonable amount of time spent dragging oneself through the requirement. And in turn, this poor performance leads to a loss of academic confidence. And to wrap things up, the student still dislikes the language and will, probably, avoid (with a vomitive feeling) anything to do with it.

So what has occured is not the development of "innate potential" (a common academic myth), but the development of a vested interest. And, of course, academic leaders will say he has received a liberal education, because a liberal education is what vested interest defines it to be.

The alternatives would be: to have a one year requirement (dragging through that can be endured grade-wise) for those who realize a language problem; or at least to conduct classes on the basis of language background. I never understood the reason behind placing struggling language students with persons who have eight years background in it or the like.

Maybe the student could even be allowed to consider its utility and then accept or reject language studies within some limit. At any rate, I hope those "vested interests" who never consider students and alternatives die by having ants eat out their innards.

A victim of "Vested Interests"

Religion vs. Education

To the Editor:

Miss Konowitch has not realistically examined her own statement concerning a resolution of the conflict for non-Christian students involving their education and their religious convictions. She has neglected to ask herself why she is attending the University. She has failed to examine the purpose of the University's existence in relation to the issue. She has failed to see that a sacrifice must be made in order for her to achieve her goal of receiving an education, assuming that that is her goal.

The University of Massachusetts is a state-supported institution, a fact that is not considered by Miss Konowitch, yet it has great significance upon the issue. Better than ninety per cent of the students on this campus are from the state of Massachusetts; they are technically on a tuition-scholarship grant, since their tuition is paid, for the most part, by the state.

Since this university is radically different from a private institution in this manner, the students must make some attempt to sacrifice or cooperate. The size of the University community dictates a unique cooperation of all its members; the University cannot enact a policy affecting only a fraction of its community.

The University, in order to educate its twelve thousand students, is compelled to utilize a liberal approach toward its scheduling of classes and events. Although Miss Konowitch and others may desire to compress their schedule into a five-day week, the burden of such a move must be carried by the University administration and community.

Miss Konowitch neglects to realize that students of other religious convictions are required to attend class on holy days: for example, Catholics observe the Holy Days of Obligation during class days. Through some oversight, Miss Konowitch has failed to protest for similar rights of other religious groups.

She has also failed to mention that University athletic events and some social events are scheduled before sundown on Saturday.

The conflict between religion and education should be resolved. We feel, however, that each has its place, yet one must hold precedence over the other. In a community where education is the principal occupation, religion must take the lesser role. The de-emphasis of religion is not advocated; we feel that religion should become more of a personal experience rather than the concern of the University administration.

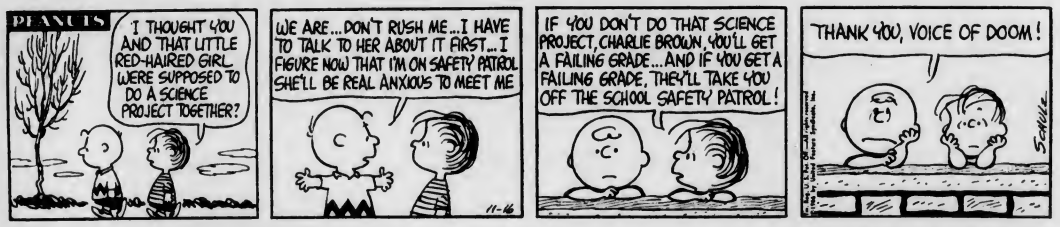
Slander?

To the Editor:

My mind is rarely provoked by the Collegian's humble efforts in the editorial staff to offer profound insights into our contemporary society, but nevertheless I offer congratulations—the "editorial" called "The 1966 Elections" by Chet (editorial chairman?) Weinerman in Monday's issue did arouse my thought process. Stupidity has the unique ability to solidify one's rational sense and I sincerely thank Mr. Weinerman for his efforts at solidarity.

Charles Percy, Ronald Reagan, George Murphy, the Rockefellers; the names mean little to me, I do not bother with American "politics," but the abuse they took in Mr. Weinerman's "editorial" (if I may use a newspaper term) was absolutely unwarranted. The castigation of any individual without justified reason is slander and that is exactly what Chet Weinerman committed.



The editorial condemmed Reagan because he was a Hollywood actor, condemned the Rockefellers because they have money, implied that Percy won on a quirk of fate, and implied that the entire Republican victory was uncalled for—never once did Mr. Weinerman cite the qualifications and integrity of these individuals, never once was a valid fact supporting the thesis on the 1966 elections used.

Quoting the Globe with respect to Edward Brooke and his color, Mr. Weinerman blithly states "Seventh grade rationale of this type does not belong on the editorial page of such a fine paper." I call Chet Weinerman a hypocrite.

The Making of a Band

Determination, Intelligence,

Ladies and Gentlemen, we present the University of Massachusetts Marching Band. Led by drum majors Ron Weaver and Bob Singleton, the band's presence has added much color and variety to football games this fall. The high quality of the band's performance is the result of many long hours of practice which began on Sept. 7 with the commencement of "band camp". "Band camp" is a week of intensive work during which the band rehearses from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. It is the key factor to success of the band season. At this time the drum majors must instill into every bandsman the spirit necessary to make him a credible member of the band. Ron Weaver, a junior majoring in zoology from Needham, commands the half time performance while Bob Singleton, sophomore economics major from Framingham, commands the pre-game show. Their working with the band has been a great asset to the 1966 season.

From dawn to dusk the band keeps marching!

by GALE SAKARIS

On Sunday, Oct. 30, at 5:30 a.m. the portals of dorms on campus were slowly opening and closing as 150 band members quietly made their way to Old Chapel.

This was the beginning of one of the many trips the University of Massachusetts Marching Band has made to away games.

The only difference was that this game, instead of being a University game, was a professional one. The Boston Patriots had honored the University by asking the band to perform at one of their games during the '66 football season.

Before the rising of the sun the band will travel.

This honor was the result of continued exceptionally hard work by the members of The Band and their conductors, director John A. Jenkins and assistant director Larry Weed.

It is the determination, intelligence, and inspiration of these two men that has made the great University of Massachusetts Marching Band what it is today.

In 1963 Professor Jenkins came to the University of Massachusetts and was assigned the task of reorganizing the University Bands. He introduced a western concentration on a "big band" sound and exact precision on the field.

With tremendous efforts, Jenkins began, slowly at first, to put the marching band up before the administration and the University community as something important and the group that he presented for approval was accepted with much delight. He made use of high stepping and the eye catching snappy instrument swing to make the band different and better than others in the east.

For musical arrangements to fit his shows, Jenkins looked primarily to one of his former classmates, the well-known Jerry H. Bilik of Michigan. Occasionally the band plays a composition arranged by Jenkins or Weed.

"Ideas are such illusive things," says Jenkins. And they are much more.

The ideas for shows are conceived months before a football season even starts. There are never too many ideas to be thought through and decided upon.

Music must be arranged, rank movements must be planned, individuals must be completely accounted for every step of the show, and when all this is finished on the spot changes and corrections must be made on the drill field.

The job starts with an idea and after much hard work, thought, practice, and revision, it ends with an ideal.

The ability to inspire is rare in men, but without this virtue Jenkins could not have produced the fine band that he has given to the University. By his own determination and spirit, he has instilled in the members of our band the desire to be the best.

His efforts have all been directed toward creating and maintaining a great band that reflects good musicianship and precision. He has been able, above and beyond this, to inspire a great band out of a good one.

It is the band's spirit that causes the legs to come up that little bit higher, that makes the beautiful sounds rounder and fuller and more beautiful. It is that spirit that sustains the band members through the hardships of the marching season, the tired and sore muscles, the colds, the long Homecoming parades, the bitter wet Fall afternoons of practicing under the flood lights on the Intramural swamp.

Amid the long nights and days of planning, amid the complaints and annoyances Jenkins can still find great satisfaction in seeing his band take pride in doing something right, in becoming committed to doing something really well. And their pride is his, too.

A new addition to the music department is Professor Larry V. Weed, assistant director of bands. Weed brings a breadth of Boston Patriots here we come! After nine hours of rehearsals per week, memorizing of pages of rank movements and music for 7½ minute shows, the band members are given proof that it was well worthwhile.

and Inspiration

Unloading for the day of hard work and a day of success.

A feature attraction at all of the half time shows has been the band's twirlers Bonnie Rehborn and Jane Mackay. Their performances are full of showmanship and their routines, though very intricate, are always well performed.

experience to the University, both as an outstanding instrumentalist and as a director. Before coming to the University of Massachusetts Professor Weed was Director of Bands at Temple University in Pennsylvania and Chairman of the Music Department in the North Syracuse Central School System, the largest consolidated system in New York.

Professor Weed's job during this football season involves everything from moving precussion podiums to helping chart shows, and from riding to Gibbons Music House in Greenfield at five minutes before nine on a Friday night for a pair of drumsticks, to calling the athletic department for press passes.

On Sunday, Oct. 30, at 2:45 p.m. the University of Massachusetts Marching Band stood at attention in concert formation at Fenway Park and played Rhapsody in Blue the way George Gershwin dreamed it should be played before he ever set it down on paper.

People sitting in livingrooms from coast to coast felt a thrill and a sense of pride in an American university band.

Radio listeners in Massachusetts thought with wonder "This is our band."

Those people who heard the tremendous sound in person stood to offer their acceptance and applauded to indicate their pleasure.

Besides the leadership of Jenkins and arrangements of Jerry Bilik, the new era had another booster in the form of its first manager, Ed Braderick and his band staff who represented the fact that the most important element working for the success of the "Big Band" era lay in the rank and file marching band members.

They were soon to prove that they had the ability and the enthusiasm to put the new ideas into a tangible form, for without the high morale and exciting spirit, the band has maintained over the years, all these new and dynamic ideas would have accomplished little.

Adding even more color to the Band is the "props" crew managed by Lionel Willoughby. He and the many members of the props crew spend their time designing, purchasing the materials, and then building the props which are used for each show. Upon completion of the props, the crew migrates to the intramural field to rehearse with the band.

Mention should also be extended beyond the band itself. Ideas cost money, and in the initial hard years it has been the students of this University who have made much of this progress possible through the financial aid from their Student Senate.

Members of this year's staff, which is headed by band manager Ron Weaver, can be seen daily at the Chapel going about their respective duties. Announcer Peter Ward, spends several hours a week at the Chapel planning his announcements. This is because precision is necessary in their timing as well as in the timing of the movements of each band member.

Jenkins and Weed do not merely wish a bandsman to be in a certain position during the show and therefore find him there. He is placed there by careful planning and timing with metronome, stopwatch, and piles upon piles of continuity sheets.

As one can see, the University of Massachusetts band is not a one man organization. Neither is it an organization which operates entirely on the support of those who participate in it. It is an organization which needs and appreciates the support it has always received from the student body.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Students who expect to graduate in 1969 or earlier and who wish either to change one of the following majors — Pre-Dent, Pre-Med, or Pre-Vet — or who wish to register with the Pre-Medical Advisory Committee but retain their departmental major should file an application with the committee no later than Dec. 9, 1966. Application forms and further information may be obtained at the Pre-Med office, 321 Morrill Science Center.

Maine University Offers Fellowships To Grad Students Seeking MAT

Would you believe graduate fellowships are going to waste for lack of applicants? Would you believe four fellowships worth over $3,000 each for prospective teachers remain unfilled this year at the University of Maine? A combination of University, federal government, and local community financial support lies behind a Master of Arts in Teaching program for a potential twenty-eight recent college graduates each year.

Dr. Stanley L. Freeman, Assistant Dean of Education, stated that the main reason for the failure to award all the fellowships this year was the late announcement last spring of a federal grant to add eight fellowships to the twenty previously awarded by the University. Publicity about the fellowships was not available until after most college seniors had made their plans, Dr. Freeman said.

The MAT program includes a full-time teaching internship combined with graduate study in selected academic subjects and professional education. Students may choose between schedules of one academic year plus two summer sessions, or two academic years to complete the program. Openings are available for college graduates who wish to prepare for teaching in either elementary or secondary schools.

The MAT for elementary teaching offers special preparation for working with children from disadvantaged neighborhoods. The secondary school teacher program has positions for majors in English, history, political science, or economics.

According to Dr. Freeman, it is not generally realized that excellent opportunities for employment and advancement exist for men in elementary education. The MAT, with its year of internship teaching, offers a man who had not considered a career in teaching an opportunity quickly to gain a master's degree, to qualify for a teaching certificate, and to gain one year of credit on the salary scale. Of course, the same benefits extend to women.

Admission to the MAT program, which provides $1,000 free tuition for non-resident students ($400 for residents of Maine), and a stipend of over $2,000, requires a bachelor's degree with at least a B- average and recommendations which support the individual's promise as a teacher.

The MAT program is open to qualified students whether or not they had teacher education courses as undergraduates. Dr. Freeman aims at early decisions so no fellowships will go begging this year.

If you want application forms, write to him now at the College of Education, University of Maine, Orono. Next month may be too late. Don't be sorry about that!

Arnold Air Society Active

During the first week of October, the Arnold Air Society held an open "Smoker" to introduce interested basic and advanced Cadets to the Society's program and activities.

On the basis of individual factors including appearance, background within the Air Force ROTC program, and interest in Arnold Air, Cadets were selected by a board of AAS members to pledge the Society.

The pledge program under the direction of a pledge trainer included a five week course broken down into one meeting per week and various pledge projects and assignments. Comprised of some thirty freshmen, sophomore, and junior Cadets, the pledge class has shown a good deal of esprit de corps in their work.

The weekly classes followed an established pattern which included a regular inspection, an instruction period, and a quiz on assigned materials.

Among the topics generally covered during the program were such things as Arnold Air Squadron and National Society histories, the mission of the organization, and the structure and composition of the individual AAS Squadrons.

Following the last pledge meeting held on the evening of 8 November, the respective Cadets were notified of their acceptance into the Society as either full or associate members.

Due to national rules, Cadets are not allowed to become national members until their junior year. Initiation of the pledges accepted into the Society will be conducted on Nov. 22.

French Film Shown Tonight

This evening, at 8 p.m. in Mahar auditorium, the men's and women's French Corridors are presenting LE BLE EN HERBE (The Game of Love).

Starring Nicole Berger and Pierre-Michel Beck, and directed by Claude Autant-Lara, LE BLE EN HERBE was the recipient of the Grand Prix du Cinema Francais and the Diploma of Merit from the Edinburgh film festival.

Tickets will be available at the door before the movie, at 50¢ per ticket.

UMass Grad to Leave With Peace Corps

Leo F. Cormier, class of 1966 from Peabody, has been named a Peace Corps Volunteer after completing 12 weeks of training at the University of Oklahoma in Norman.

Leo is one of 44 Volunteers trained this summer to supplement Peace Corps work with the El Salvadorian Agriculture Extension Service. The group, scheduled to leave for their assignments November 18, will work with 4-H Clubs to strengthen club leadership and activities. They will be assigned to Agriculture Extension offices throughout rural El Salvador.

During their training at Oklahoma University, the new Volunteers studied Spanish, Latin American history and culture, U. S. history and world affairs. Technical studies include agriculture extension methods and principles of 4-H club organization.

LEO F. CORMIER

With this group's arrival about 130 Volunteers will be at work in El Salvadorian Peace Corps projects which include community development and university teaching.

UMass Directors Speak At Summer School Conference

Two University of Massachusetts administrators will play leading roles in the third national conference of the National Association of College and University Summer Sessions this month at Los Angeles.

Dr. William C. Venman, UMass director of summer sessions, and Dr. Mark S. Noffsinger, coordinator of student activities, will join over 200 deans and directors of summer schools representing the nation's colleges and universities at the annual meeting at the Statler-Hilton Hotel this week.

Dr. Venman, currently vice president and president-elect of the association is general chairman of the convention, and has planned major addresses, general meetings and study group sessions around the theme "The Summer: Part of the Academic Year."

Dr. Noffsinger will give one of the major addresses. He will speak to a general session on "Student Activities in the Summer—Problems and Possibilities."

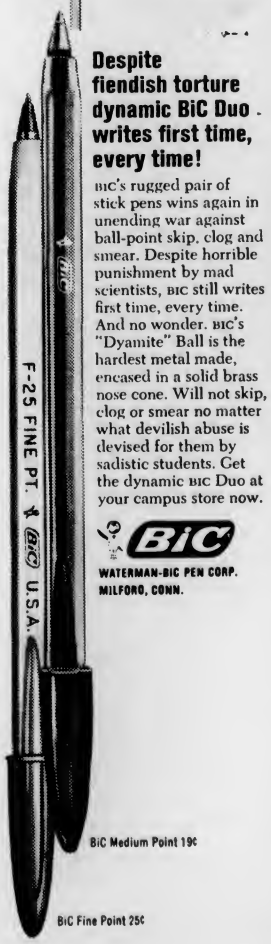
You don't have to be a genius to work at G.E.

Near genius is okay.

A near genius with drive, stamina and imagination, that is.

And it doesn't really matter what subject you're a near genius in. General Electric is looking for top scientists — and for top graduates in economics, business, law, accounting and the liberal arts.



Nobody who joins G.E. is going to feel cramped. This is a worldwide company, and it makes over 200,000 different products. So there's plenty of room to feel your strength — and in some of today's most challenging fields: transit design, urban lighting, jet propulsion, computers, electronics, aerospace, you name it.

Challenges like these have raised a new generation of idea men at G.E. If you're good enough to join them, you'll find responsibilities come to you early. Your talents are recognized, your work is rewarded — in money and in opportunity.

This time next year, you could be on your way. Talk to the man from G.E. next time he visits your campus. And don't be surprised if he's young, too. At General Electric, the young men are important men.

Peter, Paul and Mary Discuss FOLK SINGING

Once again, Peter, Paul, and Mary will come to the UMass campus Nov. 21. In an interview these outstanding folk singers explained what a folk song is—and why this music moves them so deeply.

During the past decade, folk music enjoyed a tremendous revival.

Why should audiences in this slick, sophisticated age care about a whimsical dragon named "Puff" or a careless hunter who mistakes his sweetheart, "Polly Von," for a great white swan—and kills her?

According to the two, "Perhaps the answer lies in the nature of the music itself. No two or three performers, ourselves included, will ever agree on a clear-cut definition of what is a folk song. But there are elements common to all.

"For one thing, a folk song tells you about the time and place in which it was born. Some folk songs have been almost libelously explicit in their time, as the verse in The Midnight Special which warned wayfarers to keep away from a headbusting Texas sheriff named Benson.

"What else marks a folk song? It is never totally negative or nihilistic. The Peet Bog Soldiers, for example, was sung by the inmates of Nazi concentration camps, in the face of horror and death. Yet, in the third stanza, they realize that it is Spring and that, somewhere, beyond the barbed wire and machine gun emplacements, a beautiful new world is coming to life.

"More than anything else, a folk song is honest. There has never been one written for the sole purpose of being performed on a stage for money. Unless a man has some emotion or idea he feels driven to get off his chest, he isn't going to express himself quite this way. This honesty, which underlies the creation of folk music, must be carried into its execution. The three of us agreed on this long ago, and if we ever stop agreeing, it will be time to ask for our last names back.

"We have never performed a song which did not move us, either emotionally or cerebrally.... a fact which has caused us to do some apparently foolhardy things. When we first teamed up, for example, we were asked to record a 'sure fire' hit, guaranteed to put some quick, desperately needed cash in our pockets. There was only one catch. It was a lousy song, and we decided to stay broke a bit longer.

"This is not to say that we are ivory tower idealists. We like money and success as much as any other professional entertainers. But we are involved in a form of expression whose vitality is its sincerity. We believe the reason folk music touches people so deeply is that it

"Making Decisions"

Homemakers Still Work!

Today's homemaker still cooks, washes and sews, but her most important job is making decisions—what to buy, how to budget, how to care for the children and how to stretch her time and energy, according to the Extension Home Economics Division at the University of Massachusetts.

The modern homemaker searches beyond the home horizon, and tries to understand the problems of her community, her nation and the world. Home economics extension programs help her by giving her learning opportunities that make her a better citizen as well as a wiser homemaker.

In leadership development, the UMass home economics extension program offers a unique program, training volunteer leaders to help carry new knowledge to other adults. Last year the program trained 3000 volunteers as teaching leaders to communicate new knowledge to friends and neighbors and as organizational leaders to advise professional home economics staff, recruit volunteers and assist in program evaluation.

In foods, nutrition and health, extension home economists give homemakers new ideas for better meals, teach them about nutrition and planning, buying and preparing food.

Through extension home management programs, homemakers may learn to make efficient use of time, energy and money for better living for the whole family.

In the area of human relations and human development, homemakers learn from extension programs about the growth of individuals and their relationships with others.

Home economics extension provides unbiased consumer information that helps families get the most out of what they spend for goods and services and also helps homemakers make better use of the things they buy. It teaches families how to use credit wisely and shows them how our economic system affects them as consumers.

Extension home economics also teaches homemaking skills basic to living in today's home and educates the homemaker in art and design as applied in creating home beauty and comfort, selecting textiles for clothing and the home, and improving personal appearance.

LAS VEGAS NIGHT PLANNED BY APO

Members of Alpha Phi Omega are holding a Las Vegas Night on Friday, Dec. 9 with entertainment and refreshments, and with the proceeds going to the Jimmy Fund. In conjunction with this, a Las Vegas Night Queen will be chosen.

Candidates will be interviewed by five judges on Tues., Nov. 29 with 10 semi-finalists being chosen. Pictures of these semi-finalists will be placed in the Student Union from Dec. 5 to Dec. 8 where the student body will select five finalists. The Queen and her court will be formally chosen during the Las Vegas Night.

The voting system will be run in the following manner: containers will be placed under the pictures of the semi-finalists and finalists in which students may deposit coins with every penny representing one vote. All of this money along with the proceeds of Las Vegas Night will be turned over to the Jimmy Fund.

Engineers, Mathematicians:

Contribute to Technical Programs of National Significance

...nsa

Creating secure communications systems and equipments unknown anywhere else. This is the mission of the National Security Agency—a mission which in turn creates problems of a high order of difficulty, requiring an uncommon amount of ingenuity.

There is no other organization like it... no other organization doing the same important work, or offering the same wealth of opportunity for imaginative graduates in mathematics or the engineering sciences.

A separate agency operating within the defense establishment, NSA has a critical requirement for:

ENGINEERS. To carry out basic and applied research, design, development, testing and evaluation of large-scale crypto-communications and EDP systems. Engineers may also participate in related studies of electromagnetic propagation, upper atmosphere phenomena, superconductivity and cryogenics using the latest equipment for advanced research within the Agency's fully instrumented laboratories. Career programs are designed to develop the professional engineer for a full and satisfying future in research or management.

MATHEMATICIANS. To define, formulate and solve complex communications-related problems in support of the NSA mission. Statistical mathematics, matrix algebra, finite fields, probability, combinatorial analysis, programming and symbolic logic are but a few of the tools applied by Agency mathematicians. They enjoy the full support of NSA's completely equipped computer laboratory where many of them often become involved in both the hardware and software of advanced computing systems. Theoretical research is also a primary concern at NSA, owing to the fact that the present state of knowledge in certain fields of mathematics is not sufficiently advanced to satisfy NSA requirements.

CAREER BENEFITS

With NSA, you enjoy all the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

NSA's generous graduate study program permits you to pursue two semesters of full-time graduate study at full salary with academic costs paid by NSA. The Agency also encourages participation in professional associations and assists you to attend national meetings, seminars, and conferences.

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches and other summer and winter recreation areas. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.
